Note: The official version of this document is the document published in the Federal Register. This document has been sent to the Office of the Federal Register but has not yet been scheduled for publication.

4000-01-U

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

34 CFR Part 106

[Docket ID ED-2018-OCR-0064]

RIN 1870-AA14

Nondiscrimination on the Basis of Sex in Education Programs or Activities Receiving Federal Financial Assistance

AGENCY: Office for Civil Rights, Department of Education.

ACTION: Final rule.

SUMMARY: The Secretary of Education amends the regulations implementing Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). The final regulations specify how recipients of Federal financial assistance covered by Title IX, including elementary and secondary schools as well as postsecondary institutions, (hereinafter collectively referred to as "recipients" or "schools"), must respond to allegations of sexual harassment consistent with Title IX's prohibition against sex discrimination. These regulations are intended to effectuate Title IX's prohibition against sex discrimination by requiring recipients to address sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination in education programs or activities. The final regulations obligate recipients to respond promptly and supportively to persons alleged to be victimized by sexual harassment, resolve allegations of sexual harassment promptly and accurately under a predictable, fair grievance process that provides due process protections to alleged victims and alleged perpetrators of sexual harassment, and effectively implement remedies for victims. The final regulations also clarify and modify Title IX regulatory requirements regarding remedies the Department may impose on recipients for Title IX violations, the intersection between Title IX, Constitutional protections, and other laws, the designation by each recipient of a Title IX Coordinator to address sex discrimination including sexual harassment, the dissemination of a recipient's non-discrimination policy and contact information for a Title IX Coordinator, the adoption by recipients of grievance procedures and a grievance process, how a recipient may claim a religious exemption, and prohibition of retaliation for exercise of rights under Title IX.

DATES: These regulations are effective August 14, 2020.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT:

Alejandro Reyes, U.S. Department of Education, 400 Maryland Avenue SW, Room 4E308, Washington, DC 20202. Telephone: (202) 453-6639. Email: Alejandro.Reyes@ed.gov.

If you use a telecommunications device for the deaf (TDD) or a text telephone

(TTY), call the Federal Relay Service

(FRS), toll free at 1-800-877-8339.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Effective Date ..... 37
Executive Summary ..... 40
Purpose of this Regulatory Action ..... 40
Summary of the Major Provisions of This Regulatory Action ..... 67
Timing, Comments, and Changes ..... 74
Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment ..... 88
Differences Between Standards in Department Guidance and These Final Regulations ..... 121
Definition of Sexual Harassment ..... 145
Actual Knowledge ..... 173

Deliberate Indifference.....240
Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process.....277
Due Process Principles .....313
Summary of § 106.45.....353
Similarities and Differences Between the § 106.45 Grievance Process and Department Guidance .....373
Public Comment.....392
Analysis of Comments and Changes.393
Personal Stories.....393
Notice and Comment Rulemaking Rather Than Guidance .....465
General Support and Opposition.....483
Commonly Cited Sources.....710
Data – Overview.....747
Prevalence Data – Elementary and Secondary Schools .....751

Prevalence Data – Postsecondary Institutions ..... 764
Prevalence Data – Women ..... 774
Prevalence Data – Men ..... 780
Prevalence Data – LGBTQ Persons .. 785
Prevalence Data – Persons of Color . 804
Prevalence Data – Individuals with Disabilities ..... 814
Prevalence Data – Immigrants ..... 822
Impact Data ..... 824
Cost Data ..... 843
Reporting Data ..... 848
Stereotypes / Punishment for "Lying" ..... 882
False Allegations ..... 905
General Support and Opposition for Supreme Court Framework Adopted in § 106.44(a) ..... 924

General Support and Opposition for the Grievance Process in § 106.45.....1073
Section 106.30 Definitions.....1267
Actual Knowledge .....1267
Support for Actual Knowledge Requirement and General Safety Concerns .....1267
Student Populations Facing Additional Barriers to Reporting.....1301
Chilling Reporting.....1333
Generally Burdening Complainants .....1365
Employees' Obligations .....1391
Elementary and Secondary Schools .....1429
Large Schools.....1447
Miscellaneous Comments and Questions .....1470
Complainant.....1496

Consent ..... 1542

Elementary and Secondary Schools ..... 1591

Formal Complaint ..... 1595

Support for Formal Complaint Definition ..... 1595

No Formal Complaint Required to Report Sexual Harassment ..... 1620

Burden on Complainants to File a Formal Complaint ..... 1649

Anonymous Reporting and Anonymous Filing of Formal Complaints ..... 1694

Officials Other Than the Title IX Coordinator Filing a Formal Complaint ..... 1725

Complexity of a Document Labeled "Formal Complaint" ..... 1740

Parents' and Guardians' Rights to File a Formal Complaint ..... 1759
Methods of Reporting and Methods of Filing a Formal Complaint..... 1768
Miscellaneous Concerns About the Formal Complaint Definition..... 1786
Postsecondary Institution ..... 1801
Respondent..... 1809
Sexual Harassment ..... 1817
Overall Support and Opposition for the § 106.30 Sexual Harassment Definition ..... 1817
Prong (1) Quid pro quo ..... 1945
Prong (2) Davis standard ..... 1964
Davis standard generally..... 1964
So Severe..... 2199
And Pervasive ..... 2205
Objectively Offensive..... 2217
Effectively Denies Equal Access . 2243

Prong (3) Sexual Assault, Dating Violence, Domestic Violence, Stalking ..... 2303
Gender-based harassment ..... 2388
Supportive Measures ..... 2442
Overall Support and Opposition .... 2442
No-Contact Orders ..... 2509
Other Language/Terminology Comments ..... 2534
Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally ..... 2629
Section 106.44(a) "actual knowledge" ..... 2629
The Recipient's Self-Interest ..... 2629
Burdening the Complainant ..... 2635
Elementary and Secondary Schools ..... 2646
Confusion for Employees ..... 2659

Intersection Between Actual Knowledge and Deliberate Indifference.....2668
Modeling Reporting on the Military System .....2677
Section 106.44(a) “education program or activity” .....2694
General Support and Opposition for “Education Program or Activity” as a Jurisdictional Condition .....2694
Online Sexual Harassment.....2816
Consistency with Title IX Statutory Text.....2828
Constitutional Equal Protection...2843
Institutional Autonomy and Litigation Risk .....2852
Requests for Clarification .....2858
Section 106.44(a) “against a person in the U.S.” .....2872

Impact on Study Abroad Participants .....2872
Consistency with Federal Law and Departmental Practice .....2898
Constitutional Equal Protection...2909
Impact on International or Foreign Exchange Students in the U.S. ....2916
Section 106.44(a) Deliberate Indifference Standard.....2919
Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances.....2979
Section 106.44(b) Proposed "Safe harbors," generally.....2979
Section 106.44(b)(1) Mandate to Investigate Formal Complaints and Safe Harbor .....3002
Proposed § 106.44(b)(2) Reports by Multiple Complainants of Conduct by Same Respondent [removed in final regulations].....3038

Proposed § 106.44(b)(3) Supportive Measures Safe Harbor in Absence of a Formal Complaint [removed in final regulations] ..... 3106
Section 106.44(b)(2) OCR Will Not Re-weigh the Evidence ..... 3137
Additional Rules Governing Recipients' Responses to Sexual Harassment .. 3186
Section 106.44(c) Emergency Removal ..... 3186
Overall Support and Opposition to Emergency Removals ..... 3186
Intersection with the IDEA, Section 504, and ADA ..... 3266
Post-Removal Challenges ..... 3294
No Stated Time Limitation for the Emergency Removal ..... 3312
"removal" ..... 3319

"individualized safety and risk analysis" ..... 3363
"provides the respondent with notice and an opportunity to challenge the decision immediately following the removal" ..... 3380
How OCR Will Enforce the Provision ..... 3404
Section 106.44(d) Administrative Leave ..... 3410
Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints ..... 3454
General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process ..... 3454
Section 106.45(a) Treatment of Complainants or Respondents Can Violate Title IX ..... 3454
Section 106.45(b)(1)(i) Equitable Treatment of Complainants and Respondents ..... 3532

Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii) Objective Evaluation of All Relevant Evidence ..... 3596

Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) Impartiality and Mandatory Training of Title IX Personnel; Directed Question 4 (training) ..... 3652

Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) Presumption of Non-Responsibility ..... 3786

Purpose of the Presumption ..... 3786

Students of Color, LGBTQ Students, and Individuals with Disabilities .. 3826

The Complainant's Right to Due Process Protections ..... 3837

False Allegations..... 3854

Inaccurate Findings of Non-Responsibility ..... 3874

Recipients Should Apply Dual Presumptions or No Presumption ..... 3900

The Adversarial Nature of the Grievance Process ..... 3918
Supportive Measures ..... 3934
Miscellaneous Concerns ..... 3951
Section 106.45(b)(1)(v) Reasonably Prompt Time Frames ..... 3959
Support ..... 3959
Opposition – Lack of Specified Time Limit ..... 3967
Effects on Recipients ..... 4002
Concerns Regarding Concurrent Law Enforcement Activity ..... 4011
Alternative Proposals ..... 4031
Clarification Requests ..... 4042
Section 106.45(b)(1)(vi) Describe Range or List of Possible Sanctions and Remedies ..... 4053
Section 106.45(b)(1)(vii) Describe Standard of Evidence ..... 4090

Section 106.45(b)(1)(viii) Procedures and Bases for Appeal ..... 4097
Section 106.45(b)(1)(ix) Describe Range of Supportive Measures ..... 4113
Section 106.45(b)(1)(x) Privileged Information ..... 4127
Written Notice of Allegations ..... 4129
Section 106.45(b)(2) Written Notice of Allegations ..... 4129
Retaliation ..... 4129
Warning Against False Statements ..... 4152
Investigative Process ..... 4176
Administrative Burden on Schools ..... 4200
Elementary and secondary schools ..... 4238
Confidentiality and Anonymity for Complainants ..... 4268

General Modification Suggestions ..... 4307
General Clarification Requests .... 4314
Dismissal and Consolidation of Formal Complaints ..... 4321
Section 106.45(b)(3)(i) Mandatory Dismissal of Formal Complaints ... 4321
Section 106.45(b)(3)(ii)-(iii) Discretionary Dismissals / Notice of Dismissal ..... 4343
Section 106.45(b)(4) Consolidation of Formal Complaints ..... 4363
Investigation ..... 4369
Section 106.45(b)(5)(i) Burdens of Proof and Gathering Evidence Rest on the Recipient ..... 4369
Section 106.45(b)(5)(ii) Equal Opportunity to Present Witnesses and Other Inculpatory/Exculpatory Evidence ..... 4393

Section 106.45(b)(5)(iii) Recipients Must Not Restrict Ability of Either Party to Discuss Allegations or Gather and Present Relevant Evidence.....4439

Section 106.45(b)(5)(iv) Advisors of Choice.....4475

Supporting Presence and Participation of Advisors.....4475

Fairness Considerations .....4481

Conflicts of Interest, Confidentiality, and Union Issues .....4486

Modification Requests.....4493

Section 106.45(b)(5)(v) Written Notice of Hearings, Meetings, and Interviews .....4517

Section 106.45(b)(5)(vi) Inspection and Review of Evidence Directly Related to the Allegations, and Directed Question 7.....4542

Section 106.45(b)(5)(vii) An Investigative Report that Fairly Summarizes Relevant Evidence....4679
Hearings.....4729
Cross-Examination Generally.....4729
Support for Cross-Examination...4729
Retraumatizing Complainants .....4787
Reducing Truth-Seeking.....4838
Demeanor Evaluation is Unreliable .....4885
Trauma Responses.....4917
Reliance on Rape Myths.....4942
Cross-Examination as a Due Process Requirement.....4964
Discourages Participation.....5056
Financial Inequities.....5067
Changes the Nature of the Grievance Process.....5079

Section 106.45(b)(6)(ii) Should Apply to Postsecondary Institutions.....5094
False Accusations Occur Infrequently .....5132
Excluding Cross-Examination Questions .....5137
Section 106.45(b)(6)(i) Postsecondary Institution Recipients Must Provide Live Hearing with Cross-Examination .....5158
Self-Representation Versus Cross-Examination Conducted by Advisors .....5158
Explain Decision to Exclude Questions .....5245
No Reliance on Statements of a Party Who Does Not Submit to Cross-Examination.....5272
Rape Shield Protections.....5375

Separate Rooms for Cross-Examination Facilitated by Technology; Directed Question 9 5456
Discretion to Hold Live Hearings and Control Conduct of Hearings ..... 5492
Section 106.45(b)(6)(ii) Elementary and Secondary School Recipients May Require Hearing and Must Have Opportunity to Submit Written Questions ..... 5584
Determinations Regarding Responsibility ..... 5660
Section 106.45(b)(7)(i) Single Investigator Model Prohibited ..... 5660
Benefits of Ending the Single Investigator Model ..... 5660
Consistency with Case Law ..... 5672
Alternative Approaches to Ending Single Investigator Model ..... 5678

Chilling Reporting and Other Harmful Effects ..... 5690
Respecting the Roles of Title IX Coordinators and Investigators ... 5707
Preserving Recipient Autonomy .. 5716
Consistency with Federal Law and Employment Practices ..... 5722
Limiting the Prohibition of the Single Investigator Model ..... 5738
Requests for Clarification ..... 5747
Section 106.45(b)(7)(i) Standard of Evidence and Directed Question 6 5759
Mandating a Higher Standard of Evidence ..... 5759
Supporting § 106.45(b)(7)(i) ..... 5776
One-Sided Condition on Choice of Evidentiary Standard ..... 5786
Same Evidentiary Standard in Student and Faculty Cases ..... 5798

Requiring the Preponderance of the Evidence Standard ..... 5869
Improving Accuracy of Outcomes ..... 5915
Safety Concerns ..... 5921
Consistency of Standards of Evidence Across Recipients ..... 5938
Standards of Evidence Below the Preponderance of the Evidence .. 5944
Questioning the Department's Legal Authority ..... 5954
Alternative Approaches and Clarification Requests ..... 5979
Section 106.45(b)(7)(ii) Written Determination Regarding Responsibility Must Include Certain Details ..... 6003
Section 106.45(b)(7)(iii) Timing of When the Decision Becomes Final 6072

[§ 106.45(b)(7)(iv) Title IX Coordinator responsible for effective implementation of remedies: addressed under § 106.45(b)(7)(iii)] ..... 6101
Transcript Notations ..... 6101
Appeals ..... 6132
Section 106.45(b)(8) Appeals ..... 6132
Informal Resolution ..... 6204
Section 106.45(b)(9) Informal Resolution ..... 6204
Supporting and Expanding Informal Resolution ..... 6204
Terminology Clarifications ..... 6227
Written Notice Implications ..... 6243
Voluntary Consent ..... 6246
Safety Concerns Based on Confidentiality ..... 6272

Consistency with Other Law and Practice ..... 6279
Training Requirements ..... 6291
Non-Binding Informal Resolution 6296
Survivor-Oriented Protections ..... 6302
Restorative Justice ..... 6308
Avoiding Formal Process ..... 6317
Electronic Disclosures ..... 6322
Expulsion Through Informal Resolution ..... 6324
Clarification Requests ..... 6328
Recordkeeping ..... 6340
Section 106.45(b)(10) Recordkeeping and Directed Question 8 ..... 6340
Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations ..... 6435
Section 106.3(a) Remedial Action ... 6435
Section 106.6(d)(1) First Amendment ..... 6519

Section 106.6(d)(2) Due Process ..... 6547
Section 106.6(d)(3) Other Constitutional Rights ..... 6562
Section 106.6(e) FERPA ..... 6575
Background ..... 6575
Comments, Discussion, and Changes ..... 6586
Section 106.6(f) Title VII and Directed Question 3 (Application to Employees) ..... 6889
Section 106.6(g) Exercise of Rights by Parents/Guardians ..... 7152
Section 106.6(h) Preemptive Effect. 7161
Section 106.8(a) Designation of Coordinator ..... 7325
Section 106.8(b) Dissemination of Policy ..... 7357
Removal of 34 CFR 106.9(c) ..... 7357
List of Publications ..... 7374

Professional Organizations .....7387
Parents of Elementary and Secondary School Students .....7397
Subjectivity in Publications' Implication of Discrimination.....7409
Judicial Requirements for Sex Discrimination.....7420
Implicit Forms of Sex Discrimination .....7427
Analogous Provisions in Other Laws .....7442
Suggested Modifications .....7447
Section 106.8(c) Adoption and Publication of Grievance Procedures .....7460
Section 106.8(d) Application Outside the United States.....7512

Section 106.12 Educational Institutions Controlled by a Religious Organization ..... 7532
Directed Questions ..... 7678
Directed Question 1: Application to Elementary and Secondary Schools ..... 7678
Directed Question 2: Application Based on Type of Recipient or Age of Parties ..... 7846
Directed Question 5: Individuals with Disabilities ..... 7873
Miscellaneous ..... 7991
Executive Orders and Other Requirements ..... 7991
Length of Public Comment Period/Requests for Extension ..... 8097
Conflicts with First Amendment, Constitutional Confirmation, International Law ..... 8106

Clery Act ..... 8197
Background ..... 8197
Comments, Discussion, and Changes ..... 8205
Different Standards for Other Harassment ..... 8514
Spending Clause ..... 8537
Litigation Risk ..... 8580
Effective Date ..... 8607
Retaliation ..... 8635
Section 106.71 Retaliation Prohibited ..... 8635
Severability ..... 8692
Regulatory Impact Analysis (RIA) ..... 8695
Costs of Sexual Harassment and Assault ..... 8697
Overall Net Effects/Characterization of Savings ..... 8803
Motivation for Rulemaking ..... 8843

The Department's Model and Baseline Assumptions.....8863

Data Sources .....8948

Other.....8964

Section 106.44(a) Supportive Measures .....8993

Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) Title IX Coordinators, Investigators, and Decision-makers must be Properly Trained .....9007

Section 106.45(b)(5) Investigation of Formal Complaints.....9038

Section 106.45(b)(6) Hearings .....9048

Section 106.45(b)(7) Determinations Regarding Responsibility .....9079

Section 106.45(b)(8) Appeals.....9087

Section 106.45(b)(9) Informal Resolution.....9091

Executive Orders 12866, 13563, and 13771 ..... 9096
Regulatory Impact Analysis ..... 9096
Need for Regulatory Action ..... 9109
Discussion of Costs, Benefits, and Transfers ..... 9115
Regulatory Alternatives Considered ..... 9194
Accounting Statement ..... 9202
Regulatory Flexibility Act ..... 9211
Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995 .... 9218
Accessible Format ..... 9251
Electronic Access to This Document ..... 9251
List of Subjects in 34 CFR Part 106 .. 9253
PART 106—NONDISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEX IN EDUCATION . 9255

Effective Date

On March 13, 2020, the President of the United States declared that a national emergency concerning the novel coronavirus disease (COVID-19) outbreak began on March 1, 2020, as stated in "Declaring a National Emergency Concerning the Novel Coronavirus Disease (COVID-19) Outbreak," Proclamation 9994 of March 13, 2020, Federal Register Vol. 85, No. 53

at 15337-38. The Department appreciates that exigent circumstances exist as a result of the COVID-19 national emergency, and that these exigent circumstances require great attention and care on the part of States, local governments, and recipients of Federal financial assistance. The Department recognizes the practical necessity of allowing recipients of Federal financial assistance time to plan for implementing these final regulations, including to the extent necessary, time to amend their policies and procedures necessary to comply. Taking into account this national emergency, as well as consideration of public comments about an effective date as discussed in the "Effective Date" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble, the Department has determined that these final regulations are effective August 14, 2020.

Executive Summary

Purpose of this Regulatory Action

Enacted in 1972, Title IX prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in education programs and activities that receive Federal financial assistance.[1] In its 1979 opinion Cannon v. University of

[1] 20 U.S.C. 1681 ("No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance . . . .").

Chicago,[2] the Supreme Court stated that the objectives of Title IX are two-fold: first, to "avoid the use of Federal resources to support discriminatory practices" and second, to "provide individual citizens effective protection against those practices."[3] The U.S. Department of Education (the "Department" or "we") may issue rules effectuating the dual purposes of Title

---

[2] 441 U.S. 677 (1979).
[3] Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979).

IX.[4] We refer herein to Title IX's prohibition on sex discrimination and purposes as described by the Supreme Court as Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.

The Department's predecessor, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW), first promulgated regulations under Title IX, effective in

---

[4] 20 U.S.C. 1682 ("Each Federal department and agency which is empowered to extend Federal financial assistance to any education program or activity . . . is authorized and directed to effectuate the provisions of section 1681 of this title with respect to such program or activity by issuing rules, regulations, or orders of general applicability which shall be consistent with achievement of the objectives of the statute authorizing the financial assistance in connection with which the action is taken.").

1975.[5] Those regulations reinforced Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, addressing prohibition of sex discrimination in hiring, admissions, athletics, and other aspects of recipients' education programs or activities. The 1975 regulations also required recipients to designate an employee to coordinate the recipient's

[5] 40 FR 24128 (June 4, 1975) (codified at 45 CFR part 86). In 1980, Congress created the United States Department of Education. Public Law 96-88, sec. 201, 93 Stat. 669, 671 (1979); Exec. Order No. 12212, 45 FR 29557 (May 2, 1980). By operation of law, all of HEW's determinations, rules, and regulations continued in effect and all functions of HEW's Office for Civil Rights, with respect to educational programs, were transferred to the Secretary of Education. 20 U.S.C. 3441(a)(3). The regulations implementing Title IX were recodified without substantive change in 34 CFR part 106. 45 FR 30802, 30955-65 (May 9, 1980).

efforts to comply with Title IX and to adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for prompt and equitable resolution of complaints that a recipient is discriminating based on sex.

When HEW issued its regulations in 1975, the Federal courts had not yet addressed recipients' Title IX obligations with respect to sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination. In the decades since HEW issued the 1975

regulations, the Department has not promulgated any Title IX regulations to address sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination. Beginning in 1997, the Department addressed this subject through a series of guidance documents, most notably the 2001 Guidance[6] (which revised similar guidance issued in 1997[7]), the withdrawn

---

[6] U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Revised Guidance on Sexual Harassment: Harassment of Students by School Employees, Other Students, or Third Parties (Jan. 19, 2001) (hereinafter, "2001 Guidance"), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/shguide.pdf.

[7] U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Sexual Harassment Guidance: Harassment of Students By School Employees, Other Students, or Third Parties, 62 FR 12034 (Mar. 13, 1997) (hereinafter, "1997 Guidance"), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/sexhar01.html#skipnav2.

2011 Dear Colleague Letter,[8] the withdrawn 2014 Q&A,[9] and the 2017 Q&A.[10] The Department understands that agency guidance is not intended to represent legal obligations; however, we also acknowledge that in part because the Title IX statute and the Department's implementing regulations have (until

[8] U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Dear Colleague Letter: Sexual Violence (April 4, 2011) (hereinafter "2011 Dear Colleague Letter"), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-201104.pdf, withdrawn by, U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Dear Colleague Letter (Sept. 22, 2017), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-title-ix-201709.pdf.
[9] U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Questions and Answers on Title IX and Sexual Violence (April 29, 2014) (hereinafter "2014 Q&A"), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/qa-201404-title-ix.pdf, withdrawn by, U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Dear Colleague Letter (Sept. 22, 2017), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-title-ix-201709.pdf.
[10] U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Q&A on Campus Sexual Misconduct (Sept. 22, 2017) (hereinafter, "2017 Q&A"), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/qa-title-ix-201709.pdf.

these final regulations) not addressed sexual harassment, recipients and the Department have relied on the Department's guidance to set expectations about how recipients should respond to sexual harassment and how the Department investigates recipients for possible Title IX violations with respect to responding to sexual harassment.[11] These final regulations impose, for the first time, legally binding rules on recipients with respect to [11] For example, OCR found numerous institutions in violation of Title IX for failing to adopt the preponderance of the evidence standard in its investigations of sexual harassment, even though the notion that the preponderance of the evidence standard is the only standard that might be applied under Title IX is set forth in the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and not in the Title IX statute, current regulations, or other guidance. E.g., U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Letter of Findings to Harvard Law School 7 (Dec. 10, 2014) ("Harvard Law Letter"), https://www2.ed.gov/documents/press-releases/harvard-law-letter.pdf ("[I]n order for a recipient's grievance procedures to be consistent with the Title IX evidentiary standard, the recipient must use a preponderance of the evidence standard for investigating allegations of sexual harassment, including sexual assault/violence.") OCR in its letter of findings against Harvard Law School noted that Harvard's procedures provide that "formal disciplinary sanctions shall be imposed only upon clear and convincing evidence." Harvard Law Letter at 10. OCR found the following: "This higher standard of proof was inconsistent with the preponderance of the evidence standard required by Title IX for investigating allegations of sexual harassment or violence." Id.; see also U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Letter of Findings to S. Methodist Univ. 4 (Dec. 11, 2014), https://www2.ed.gov/documents/press-releases/southern-methodist-university-letter.pdf; U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Letter of Findings to Princeton Univ. 6, 11, 18 (Nov. 5, 2014), https://www2.ed.gov/documents/press-releases/princeton-letter.pdf; U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Letter of Findings to Tufts Univ. 5 (Apr. 28, 2014), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/investigations/more/01102089-a.pdf; U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Letter of Findings to Yale Univ. 4-5 (June 15, 2012), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/investigations/01112027-a.pdf. Many recipients changed their Title IX policies and procedures to conform to the 2001 Guidance, and then to the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, in part based on OCR enforcement actions that found recipients in violation for failing to comport with interpretations of Title IX found only in guidance. E.g., Blair A. Baker, When Campus Sexual Misconduct Policies Violate Due Process Rights, 26 CORNELL J. OF LAW & PUB. POL'Y 533, 542 (2016) (The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter has "forced universities to change their former policies drastically, with regards to their specific procedures as well as the standard of proof, out of fear that the Department of Education will pursue their school for a violation of Title IX. In sum, the Dear Colleague Letter applied pressure on colleges to maintain a victim-friendly environment, which is admirable and necessary, but in turn has created a situation that can be insensitive to the accused and 'tilted in favor of the alleged victim.' These situations do not have to be mutually exclusive; and there must be a solution in which victim-friendly is not synonymous with procedurally adverse to respondents.") (internal citations omitted); Lauren P. Schroeder, Cracks in the Ivory Tower: How the Campus Sexual Violence Elimination Act Can Protect Students from Sexual Assault, 45 LOY. UNIV. CHI. L. J. 1195, 1202 (2014) ("[Because] Title IX is such a short statute with little direction, schools look to specific guidance materials provided by the Department of Education to determine the specific requirements of Title IX.").

responding to sexual harassment, and the nature of the legal obligations imposed under these final regulations is similar in some ways, and different in some ways, to the way the Department approached this subject in its guidance documents. Those similarities and differences are explained throughout this preamble, including in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" and "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" sections of this preamble.

Prior to these final regulations, the Department's last policy statement on Title IX sexual harassment was its withdrawal of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter[12] and concomitant issuance of the 2017 Q&A. The 2017 Q&A along with the [12] The 2014 Q&A (withdrawn at the same time as the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter was withdrawn) expounded on the same approach taken by the Department in the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter; throughout this preamble, references to and discussion of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter may be understood to assume that the same or similar approach was taken in the 2014 Q&A unless otherwise noted.

2001 Guidance represent the "status quo" or "baseline" against which these final regulations make further changes to the Department's enforcement of Title IX obligations.[13] However, the withdrawal of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and issuance of the 2017 Q&A did not require or result in wholesale changes to the set of expectations guiding recipients' responses to sexual harassment or to many recipients' Title IX policies and procedures. The Department understands from public comments and media reports that many (if not most) recipients chose not to change their Title IX policies and procedures following the withdrawal of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and issuance of the 2017 Q&A.[14] This lack of change by recipients is a reasonable response to the following facts: guidance is not legally enforceable;[15] the 2017 Q&A expressly stated to recipients that the 2017 Q&A was issued as an interim, non-binding interpretation of Title IX sexual harassment responsibilities while the Department

[13] 2017 Q&A at 1 ("[T]hese questions and answers – along with the [2001 Guidance] previously issued by the Office for Civil Rights – provide information about how OCR will assess a school's compliance with Title IX" in "the interim" while the Department "engage[s] in rulemaking on the topic of schools' Title IX responsibilities concerning complaints of sexual misconduct, including peer-on-peer sexual harassment and sexual violence.").

---

[14] E.g., Alice B. Lloyd, Colleges Stick With Obama-Era Title IX Guidance, WASHINGTON EXAMINER (Aug. 2, 2018) (describing the 2017 Q&A and withdrawal of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter as giving recipients "the option to adjust their procedures" for example with respect to which standard of evidence to use in sexual harassment cases, and designating a longer investigation time frame than the 60 calendar day time frame specified in the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, and describing reasons why most recipients have chosen not to change Title IX policies and procedures).

[15] Perez v. Mortgage Bankers Ass'n, 575 U.S. 92, 96-98 (2015).

conducted rulemaking to arrive at legally binding regulations addressing this subject;[16] and both the 2017 Q&A and the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter relied heavily on the 2001 Guidance.[17] The 2017 Q&A along with the 2001 Guidance, and not the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, remain the baseline against which these

[16] 2017 Q&A at 1.
[17] Compare 2017 Q&A at 1-4, 6-7 with 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 2, 3-9, 11, 13.

final regulations make further changes to enforcement of Title IX obligations.

These final regulations largely address the same topics addressed in the Department's current and past guidance, including withdrawn guidance. Throughout this preamble we explain points of difference, and similarity, between these final regulations, and the Department's guidance. As such discussion makes clear, some of the Title IX policies and procedures that recipients have in place due to following the 2001 Guidance and the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter remain viable policies and procedures for recipients to adopt while complying with these final regulations. Because these final regulations represent the Department's interpretation of a recipient's legally binding obligations, rather than best practices, recommendations, or guidance, these final regulations focus on precise legal compliance requirements governing recipients. In many regards, as discussed throughout this preamble, these final regulations leave recipients the flexibility to choose to follow best practices and recommendations contained in the Department's guidance or, similarly, best practices and recommendations made by non-Department sources, such as Title IX consultancy firms, legal and social science scholars, victim advocacy organizations, civil libertarians and due process advocates, and other experts.

Based on extensive review of the critical issues addressed in this rulemaking, the Department has determined that current regulations do not provide clear direction for how recipients must respond to allegations of sexual harassment because current regulations do not reference sexual harassment at all. Similarly, the Department has determined that Department guidance is insufficient to provide clear direction on this subject because it is not legally enforceable,[18] has created confusion and uncertainty among recipients,[19] and has not

---

[18] For further discussion, see the "Notice and Comment Rulemaking Rather Than Guidance" section of this preamble.

[19] Janet Napolitano, "Only Yes Means Yes": An Essay on University Policies Regarding Sexual Violence and Sexual Assault, 33 YALE L. & POL'Y REV. 387, 393-97 (2015) (The Honorable Janet Napolitano, the President of the University of California, who is a former Governor and Attorney General of Arizona and a former United States

adequately advised recipients as to how to uphold Title IX's non-discrimination mandate while at the same time meeting requirements of constitutional due process and fundamental fairness.[20] Therefore, the Department issues these final regulations addressing sexual harassment, to better align the Secretary of Homeland Security, writing that OCR's guidance documents "left [campuses] with significant uncertainty and confusion about how to appropriately comply after they were implemented" and specifically noted that the "2011 Dear Colleague Letter generated significant compliance questions for campuses."); see also Task Force on Fed. Regulation of Higher Education, Recalibrating Regulation of Colleges and Universities at 12 (2015) (the Task Force on Federal Regulation of Higher Education, appointed by a bipartisan group of U.S. Senators, noting: "[A] guidance document meant to clarify uncertainty only led to more confusion. A 2011 'Dear Colleague' letter on Title IX responsibilities regarding sexual harassment contained complex mandates and raised a number of questions for institutions. As a result, the Department was compelled to issue further guidance clarifying its letter. This took the form of a 53-page 'Questions and Answers' document [the withdrawn 2014 Q&A] that took three years to complete. Still, that guidance has raised further questions. Complexity begets more complexity.").

---

[20] See the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

Department's Title IX regulations with the text and purpose of Title IX, the U.S. Constitution, Supreme Court precedent and other case law, and to address the practical challenges facing students, employees, and recipients with respect to sexual harassment allegations in education programs and activities.

The final regulations define and apply the following terms, as discussed in the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble: “actual knowledge,” “complainant,” “elementary and secondary schools,” “formal complaint,” “postsecondary institution,” “respondent,” “sexual harassment,” and “supportive measures”; each term has a specific meaning under these final regulations. For clarity of understanding when reading this preamble, “complainant” means any individual who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment, and "respondent" means any individual who is reported to be the perpetrator of sexual harassment. A person may be a complainant, or a respondent, even where no formal complaint has been filed and no grievance process is pending. A "formal complaint" is a document that initiates a recipient's grievance process, but a formal complaint is not required in order for a recipient to have actual knowledge of sexual harassment, or allegations of sexual harassment, that activates the recipient's legal obligation to respond promptly, including by offering supportive measures to a complainant. References in this preamble to a complainant, respondent, or other individual with respect to exercise of rights under Title IX should be understood to include situations in which a parent or guardian has the legal right to act on behalf of the individual.[21]

Alleged victims of sexual harassment often have options to pursue legal action through civil litigation or by pressing criminal charges. Title IX does not replace civil or criminal justice systems. However, the way in which a school, college, or university responds to allegations of sexual harassment in

---

[21] For further discussion see the "Section 106.6(g) Exercise of Rights by Parents/Guardians" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble.

an education program or activity has serious consequences for the equal educational access of complainants and respondents. These final regulations require recipients to offer supportive measures to every complainant, irrespective of whether the complainant files a formal complaint. Recipients may not treat a respondent as responsible for sexual harassment without providing due process protections. When a recipient determines a respondent to be responsible for sexual harassment after following a fair grievance process that gives clear procedural rights to both parties, the recipient must provide remedies to the complainant.

Summary of the Major Provisions of This Regulatory Action

These final regulations are premised on setting forth clear legal obligations that require recipients to: promptly respond to individuals who are alleged to be victims of sexual harassment by offering supportive measures; follow a fair grievance process to resolve sexual harassment allegations when a complainant requests an investigation or a Title IX Coordinator decides on the recipient's behalf that an investigation is necessary; and provide remedies to victims of sexual harassment.

Regarding sexual harassment, the final regulations:

- Define the conduct constituting sexual harassment for Title IX purposes;
- Specify the conditions that activate a recipient's obligation to respond to allegations of sexual harassment and impose a general standard for the sufficiency of a recipient's response, and specify requirements that such a response much include, such as offering supportive measures in response to a report or formal complaint of sexual harassment;

- Specify conditions that require a recipient to initiate a grievance process to investigate and adjudicate allegations of sexual harassment; and
- Establish procedural due process protections that must be incorporated into a recipient's grievance process to ensure a fair and reliable factual determination when a recipient investigates and adjudicates a formal complaint of sexual harassment.

Additionally, the final regulations: affirm that the Department's Office for Civil Rights ("OCR") may require recipients to take remedial action for discriminating on the basis of sex or otherwise violating the Department's regulations implementing Title IX, consistent with 20 U.S.C. 1682; clarify that in responding to any claim of sex discrimination under Title IX, recipients are not required to deprive an individual of rights guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution; acknowledge the intersection of Title IX, Title VII, and FERPA, as well as the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of individuals with respect to Title IX rights; update the requirements for recipients to designate a Title IX Coordinator, disseminate the recipient's non-discrimination policy and the Title IX Coordinator's contact information, and notify students, employees, and others of the recipient's grievance procedures and grievance process for handling reports and complaints of sex discrimination, including sexual harassment; eliminate the requirement that religious institutions submit a written statement to the Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights to qualify for the Title IX religious exemption; and expressly prohibit retaliation against individuals for exercising rights under Title IX.

Timing, Comments, and Changes

On November 29, 2018, the Secretary published a notice of proposed rulemaking (NPRM) for these parts in the Federal Register.[22] The final regulations contain changes from the NPRM (interchangeably referred to in this preamble as the "NPRM," the "proposed rules," or the "proposed regulations"), and these changes are fully explained in the "Analysis of Comments and Changes" and other sections of this preamble.

[22] 83 FR 61462 (Nov. 29, 2018) (to be codified at 34 CFR pt. 106).

Throughout this preamble, the Department uses the terms "institutions of higher education" (or "IHEs") interchangeably with "postsecondary institutions" (or "PSEs"). The Department uses the phrase "elementary and secondary schools" (or "ESEs") interchangeably with "local educational agencies" (or "LEAs" or "K-12").

Throughout this preamble, the Department refers to Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, as amended, as "Title IX,"[23] to the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act as the "IDEA,"[24] to Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 as "Section 504,"[25] to the Americans with Disabilities Act as the "ADA,"[26] to Title VI of the 1964

---

[23] 20 U.S.C. 1681 et seq.
[24] 20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.
[25] 29 U.S.C. 701 et seq.
[26] 42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq.

Civil Rights Act as "Title VI,"[27] to Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act as "Title VII,"[28] to section 444 of the General Education Provisions Act (GEPA), which is commonly referred to as the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974, as "FERPA,"[29] to the Jeanne Clery Disclosure of Campus Security Policy and Campus Crime Statistics Act as the

---

[27] 42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.
[28] 42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.
[29] 20 U.S.C. 1232g.

"Clery Act,"[30] and to the Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act of 2013 as "VAWA."[31]

The Department uses the phrase "Title IX sexual harassment" to refer to the conduct defined in § 106.30 to be sexual harassment as well as the conditions described in § 106.44(a) that require a recipient to respond to sexual harassment under Title IX and these

---

[30] 20 U.S.C. 1092(f).
[31] 34 U.S.C. 12291 et seq. (formerly codified at 42 U.S.C. 13925).

final regulations.[32] When the Department uses the term "victim" (or "survivor") or "perpetrator" to discuss these final regulations, the Department assumes that a reliable process, namely the grievance process described in § 106.45, has resulted in a determination of responsibility, meaning the recipient has found a respondent responsible for [32] Section 106.44(a) requires a recipient with actual knowledge of sexual harassment in an education program or activity of the recipient against a person in the United States to respond promptly in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent, meaning not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances.

perpetrating sexual harassment against a complainant.[33]

Throughout the preamble, the Department references and summarizes statistics, data, research, and studies that commenters submitted. The Department's reference to or summarization of these items, however, does not speak to their level of accuracy. Whether specifically cited or not, we considered all relevant information submitted to us in our analysis and promulgation of these final regulations.

[33] As noted in the "Executive Summary" section of this preamble, "respondent," "sexual harassment," and "complainant" are defined terms in § 106.30.

The Department references statistics, data, research, and studies throughout this preamble. Such reference to or summarization of these items does not indicate that the Department independently has determined that the entirety of each item is accurate.

Many commenters referenced the impact of sexual harassment or the proposed rules on individuals who belong to, or identify with, certain demographic groups, and used a variety of acronyms and phrases to describe such individuals; for example, various commenters referred to "LGBT" or "LGBTQ+" and "persons of color" or "racial minorities." For consistency, throughout this preamble we use the acronym “LGBTQ” while recognizing that other terminology may be used or preferred by certain groups or individuals, and our use of “LGBTQ” should be understood to include lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, questioning, asexual, intersex, nonbinary, and other sexual orientation or gender identity communities. We use the phrase “persons of color” to refer to individuals whose race or ethnicity is not white or Caucasian. We emphasize that every person, regardless of demographic or personal characteristics or identity, is entitled to the same protections against sexual harassment under these final regulations, and that every individual should be treated with equal dignity and respect.

Finally, several provisions in the NPRM have been renumbered in the final

regulations.[34] In response to commenters who asked for clarification as to whether the definitions in § 106.30 apply to a term in a specific regulatory provision, some of the regulatory provisions specifically refer to a term "as defined in § 106.30" to provide

---

[34] Provisions proposed in the NPRM, as renumbered in these final regulations, are:
Proposed § 106.44(b)(2) eliminated in the final regulations.
Proposed § 106.44(b)(3) eliminated in the final regulations.
Proposed § 106.44(b)(4) eliminated in the final regulations.
Proposed § 106.44(b)(5) in the final regulations as § 106.44(b)(2).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(i) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(i).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(ii).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(iii) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(iii).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(iv) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(iv).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(v) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(v).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(vi) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(6)(ii).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(vii) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(6)(i).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(viii) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(vi).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(3)(ix) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(5)(vii).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(4) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(7).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(5) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(8).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(6) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(9).
Proposed § 106.45(b)(7) in the final regulations as § 106.45(b)(10).

additional clarity.[35] Notwithstanding these points of additional clarification in certain regulatory provisions, the definitions in § 106.30 apply to the entirety of 34 CFR part 106. For consistency, references in this preamble are to the provisions as numbered in the final, and not the proposed, regulations. Citations to "34 CFR 106.__" in the body of the preamble and the footnotes are [35] E.g., §§ 106.8(c), 106.44(a), 106.45(b) (introductory sentence), 106.45(b)(1)(i), 106.45(b)(2), 106.45(b)(3)(i), 106.45(b)(7).

---

citations to the Department's current regulations and not the final regulations.

Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment

Seven years after the passage of Title IX, the Supreme Court in Cannon v. University of Chicago[36] held that a judicially implied private right of action exists under Title IX. Thirteen years after that, in Franklin v. Gwinnett County Public Schools[37] the Supreme Court held that money damages are an available remedy in a private lawsuit alleging a school's intentional discrimination in violation of Title IX. The Cannon Court explained that Title IX has two primary objectives: avoiding use of Federal funds to support discriminatory practices and providing individuals with effective protection against discriminatory practices.[38] Those two purposes are enforced both by administrative agencies that disburse Federal financial assistance to recipients, and by courts in private litigation. These two avenues of enforcement (administrative enforcement by agencies, and judicial enforcement by courts) have different features: for instance, administrative enforcement places a recipient's Federal funding at risk,[39] while judicial enforcement does not.[40] But the goal of both avenues of enforcement (administrative and judicial) is the same: to further the non-discrimination mandate of Title IX.

[36] 441 U.S. 677, 717 (1979).

---

[37] 503 U.S. 60, 76 (1992).

[38] Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979) ("Title IX, like its model Title VI, sought to accomplish two related, but nevertheless somewhat different, objectives. First, Congress wanted to avoid the use of federal resources to support discriminatory practices; second, it wanted to provide individual citizens effective protection against those practices.").

---

[39] 20 U.S.C. 1682.
[40] Franklin, 503 U.S. at 76.

In deciding whether to recognize a judicially implied right of private action, the Cannon Court considered whether doing so would conflict with administrative enforcement of Title IX. The Cannon Court concluded that far from conflicting with administrative enforcement, judicial enforcement would complement administrative enforcement because some violations of Title IX may lend themselves to the administrative remedy of terminating Federal financial assistance, while other violations may lend themselves to a judicial remedy in private litigation.[41] The Cannon Court recognized that judicial and administrative enforcement both help ensure "the orderly enforcement of the statute" to achieve Title IX's purposes.[42]

---

[41] Cannon, 441 U.S. at 704-06.

[42] Id. at 705-06 ("The award of individual relief to a private litigant who has prosecuted her own suit is not only sensible but is also fully consistent with – and in some cases even necessary to – the orderly enforcement of the statute."); see also id. at 707 ("the individual remedy will provide effective assistance to achieving the statutory purposes.").

In Franklin, the Supreme Court acknowledged that sexual harassment and sexual abuse of a student by a teacher may mean the school itself engaged in intentional sex discrimination.[43] The Franklin Court held that money damages is an available remedy in a private lawsuit under Title IX, reasoning that even though Title IX is a Spending Clause statute, schools have been on notice since enactment of Title IX that intentional sex discrimination is prohibited under Title IX.[44]

---

[43] Franklin, 503 U.S. at 74-75 (holding intentional discrimination by the school is alleged where the school's employee sexually harassed a student).

In 1998, six years after Franklin, in Gebser v. Lago Vista Independent School District[45] the Supreme Court analyzed the conditions under which a school district will be liable for money damages for an employee sexually [44] Id. at 74 (noting that under Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 451 U.S. 1 (1981), monetary damages may be appropriate to remedy an intentional violation of a Spending Clause statute because entities subject to the statute are on notice that intentional violations of a statute may subject the entity to monetary damages); see also Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 281 (1998) (noting that in Franklin, the plaintiff alleged that "school administrators knew about the harassment but took no action, even to the point of dissuading her from initiating charges").

---

[45] 524 U.S. 274 (1998).

harassing a student. The Gebser Court began its analysis by stating that while Franklin acknowledged that a school employee sexually harassing a student may constitute the school itself committing intentional discrimination on the basis of sex, it was necessary to craft standards defining "the contours of that liability."[46] The Gebser Court held that where a school has actual

---

[46] Id. at 281 ("Franklin thereby establishes that a school district can be held liable in damages in cases involving a teacher's sexual harassment of a student; the decision, however, does not purport to define the contours of that liability. We face that issue squarely in this case.").

knowledge of an employee sexually harassing a student but responds with deliberate indifference to such knowledge, the school itself has engaged in discrimination, subjecting the school to money damages in a private lawsuit under Title IX.[47] The following year, in 1999, in Davis v. Monroe County Board of Education,[48] the Supreme Court held that where sexual harassment is committed by a peer rather than an employee, the same standards of actual knowledge and deliberate indifference apply.[49] The Davis Court additionally crafted a definition of when sex-based conduct becomes actionable sexual harassment, defining the conduct as "so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive"

---

[47] Id. at 290.
[48] 526 U.S. 629 (1999).

[49] Id. at 650 (holding that "funding recipients are properly held liable in damages only where they are deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment, of which they have actual knowledge, that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it can be said to deprive the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school.").

that it denies its victims equal access to education.[50]

The Supreme Court's Gebser and Davis cases built upon the Supreme Court's previous Title IX decisions in Cannon and Franklin to establish a three-part framework describing when a school's response to sexual harassment constitutes the school itself committing discrimination. The three parts of this framework are: conditions that must exist to trigger a school's response obligations (actionable sexual harassment, and the school's actual knowledge) and the deliberate indifference liability standard evaluating the sufficiency of the school's response. We refer herein to the "Gebser/Davis framework," consisting of a definition of actionable sexual harassment, the school's actual knowledge, and the school's deliberate indifference.

---

[50] See id.

The Gebser/Davis framework is the appropriate starting point for ensuring that the Department's Title IX regulations recognize the conditions under which a school's response to sexual harassment violates Title IX. Whether the available remedy is money damages (in private litigation) or termination of Federal financial assistance (in administrative enforcement), the Department's regulations must acknowledge that when a school itself commits sex discrimination, the school has violated Title IX.

In crafting the Gebser/Davis framework, the Supreme Court emphasized that because a private lawsuit under Title IX subjects a school to money damages, it was important for the Court to set standards for a school's liability premised on the school's knowledge and deliberate choice to permit sexual harassment, analogous to the way that the Title IX statute provides that a school's Federal financial assistance is terminated by the Department only after the Department first advises the school of a Title IX violation, attempts to secure voluntary compliance, and the school refuses to come into compliance.[51] Nothing in Gebser or Davis purports to restrict the Gebser/Davis framework only to private lawsuits for money damages.[52] Rather, the Supreme Court justified that framework as appropriate for recognizing when a school's response

---

[51] See, e.g., Gebser, 524 U.S. at 288-90 (examining the administrative enforcement scheme set forth in the Title IX statute, 20 U.S.C. 1682, and concluding that "[b]ecause the express remedial scheme under Title IX is predicated upon notice to an 'appropriate person' and an opportunity to rectify any violation, 20 U.S.C. § 1682, we conclude, in the absence of further direction from Congress, that the implied damages remedy should be fashioned along the same lines" and adopting the actual knowledge and deliberate indifference standards).

[52] The Department notes that courts also have used the Gebser/Davis framework in awarding injunctive relief, not only in awarding monetary damages. E.g., Fitzgerald v. Barnstable Sch. Dist., 555 U.S. 246, 255 (2009) ("In addition, this Court has recognized an implied private right of action . . . In a suit brought pursuant to this private right, both injunctive relief and damages are available.") (internal citations omitted; emphasis added); Hill v. Cundiff, 797 F.3d 948, 972-73 (11th Cir. 2015) (reversing summary judgment against plaintiff's claims for injunctive relief because a jury could find that the alleged conduct was "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" under Davis); B.H. ex rel. Hawk v. Easton Area Sch. Dist., 725 F.3d 293, 322-23 (3d Cir. 2013) (upholding preliminary injunction against school for banning students from wearing bracelets because the school failed to show that the "bracelets would breed an environment of pervasive and severe harassment" under Davis); Haidak v. Univ. of Mass. at Amherst, 299 F. Supp. 3d 242, 270 (D. Mass. 2018) (denying plaintiff's request for a preliminary injunction because he failed to show that the school was deliberately indifferent to an environment of severe and pervasive discriminatory conduct under Davis), aff'd in part, vacated in part, remanded by Haidak v. Univ. of Mass.-Amherst, 933 F.3d 56 (1st Cir. 2019).

to sexual harassment constitutes intentional discrimination by the school, warranting exposure to money damages in a private Title IX lawsuit. Neither Gebser nor Davis opined as to what the appropriate conditions (e.g., definition of sexual harassment, actual knowledge) and liability standard (e.g., deliberate indifference) must or should be for the Department's administrative enforcement.

The Department has regulatory authority to select conditions and a liability standard different from those used in the Gebser/Davis framework, because the Department has authority to issue rules that require recipients to take administrative actions to effectuate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate. For example, longstanding Department regulations require recipients to designate an employee to coordinate the recipient's efforts to comply with Title IX,[53] to file an assurance of compliance with the Department,[54] and to adopt and publish grievance procedures for handling complaints of sex discrimination.[55] Failure to do any of the foregoing does not, by itself, mean the school has committed sex discrimination, but the Department lawfully may enforce such

---

[53] 34 CFR 106.8(a).
[54] 34 CFR 106.4(a).
[55] 34 CFR 106.8(b).

administrative requirements because the Department has authority to issue and enforce rules that effectuate the purpose of Title IX.[56]

These final regulations begin with the Gebser/Davis framework, so that when a school itself commits sex discrimination by subjecting its students or employees

---

[56] See, e.g., Gebser, 524 U.S. at 292 ("And in any event, the failure to promulgate a grievance procedure does not itself constitute 'discrimination' under Title IX. Of course, the Department of Education could enforce the requirement administratively: Agencies generally have authority to promulgate and enforce requirements that effectuate the statute's non-discrimination mandate, 20 U.S.C. § 1682, even if those requirements do not purport to represent a definition of discrimination under the statute. E.g., Grove City [v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555, 574-575 (1984), superseded by statute on a different point by the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1987] (permitting administrative enforcement of regulation requiring college to execute an 'Assurance of Compliance' with Title IX). We have never held, however, that the implied private right of action under Title IX allows recovery in damages for violation of those sorts of administrative requirements.").

to sexual harassment, that form of discrimination is clearly prohibited by these final regulations. The Department adopts the Gebser/Davis framework in these final regulations by defining "sexual harassment," defining "actual knowledge," and describing "deliberate indifference," consistent with Gebser and Davis.

The Department does not simply codify the Gebser/Davis framework.

Under the Department's statutory authority to issue rules to effectuate the purpose of Title IX, the Department reasonably expands the definitions of sexual harassment and actual knowledge, and the deliberate indifference standard, to tailor the Gebser/Davis framework to the administrative enforcement context.

The Department believes that adapting the Gebser/Davis framework is appropriate for administrative enforcement, because the adapted conditions (definitions of sexual harassment and actual knowledge) and liability standard (deliberate indifference) reflected in these final regulations promote important policy objectives with respect to a recipient's legal obligations to respond to sexual harassment. As explained in more detail in the "Actual Knowledge" and "Sexual Harassment" subsections of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, and the "Section 106.44(a) Deliberate Indifference Standard" subsection of the "Section 106.44(a) Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble, the Department believes that:

- Including the Davis definition of sexual harassment for Title IX

purposes as “severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive” conduct that effectively denies a person equal educational access helps ensure that Title IX is enforced consistent with the First Amendment. At the same time, the Department adapts the Davis definition of sexual harassment in these final regulations by also expressly including quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA sex offenses. This expanded definition of sexual harassment[57] ensures that quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA sex offenses trigger a recipient's response obligations, without needing to be evaluated for

[57] The final regulations define sexual harassment in § 106.30 as follows: Sexual harassment means conduct on the basis of sex that satisfies one or more of the following:
(1) An employee of the recipient conditioning the provision of an aid, benefit, or service of the recipient on an individual's participation in unwelcome sexual conduct;
(2) Unwelcome conduct determined by a reasonable person to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity; or
(3) "Sexual assault" as defined in 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v), "dating violence" as defined in 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(10), "domestic violence" as defined in 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(8), or "stalking" as defined in 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(30).

severity, pervasiveness, offensiveness, or denial of equal access, because prohibiting such conduct presents no First Amendment concerns and such serious misconduct causes denial of equal educational access;

- Using the Gebser/Davis concept of actual knowledge, adapted in these final regulations by including notice to any recipient's Title IX

Coordinator,[58] or notice to any elementary and secondary school employee,[59] furthers the Department's policy goals of ensuring that elementary and secondary schools respond whenever a school employee knows of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment, while

[58] As discussed throughout this preamble, the final regulations ensure that every recipient gives its educational community clear, accessible options for reporting sexual harassment to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator. See, e.g., § 106.8.

[59] The final regulations define "actual knowledge" in § 106.30 as notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to a recipient's Title IX Coordinator or any official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient, or to any employee of an elementary or secondary school.

respecting the autonomy of students at postsecondary institutions to decide whether or when to report sexual harassment; and

- Using the deliberate indifference standard, adapted in these final regulations by specifying actions that every recipient must take in response to every instance of actual knowledge of sexual harassment,[60] ensures that recipients respond to sexual harassment by offering supportive measures designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal educational access without treating a respondent as responsible until after a fair grievance process. The deliberate indifference standard

[60] The final regulations require recipients to respond promptly by: offering supportive measures to every complainant (i.e., an individual who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment); refraining from imposing disciplinary sanctions on a respondent without first following a prescribed grievance process; investigating every formal complaint filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator; and effectively implementing remedies designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal educational access any time a respondent is found responsible for sexual harassment. § 106.44(a); § 106.44(b)(1); § 106.45(b)(3)(i); § 106.45(b)(1)(i); § 106.45(b)(7)(iv).

achieves these aims without unnecessarily second guessing a recipient's decisions with respect to appropriate supportive measures, disciplinary sanctions, and remedies when the recipient responds to sexual harassment incidents, which inherently present fact-specific circumstances.[61]

[61] As explained below in the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of the preamble, the final regulations apply a deliberate indifference standard for evaluating a recipient's decisions with respect to selection of supportive measures and remedies, and these final regulations do not mandate or scrutinize a recipient's decisions with respect to disciplinary sanctions imposed on a respondent after a respondent has been found responsible for sexual harassment.

The Department chooses to build these final regulations upon the foundation established by the Supreme Court, to provide consistency between the rubrics for judicial and administrative enforcement of Title IX, while adapting that foundation for the administrative process, in a manner that achieves important policy objectives unique to sexual harassment in education programs or activities.

Differences Between Standards in Department Guidance and These Final Regulations

The Department's guidance on schools' responses to sexual harassment recommended conditions triggering a school's response obligations, and a liability standard, that differed in significant ways from the Gebser/Davis framework and from the approach taken in these final regulations. With respect to the three-part Gebser/Davis framework (i.e., a definition of sexual harassment, actual knowledge condition, and deliberate indifference standard), the Department's guidance recommended a broader definition of actionable sexual harassment, a constructive notice condition, and a standard closer to strict liability than to deliberate indifference.

The Department's 1997 Guidance used a definition of sexual harassment described as "sexually harassing conduct (which can include unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal, nonverbal, or physical conduct of a sexual nature) by an employee, by another student, or by a third party" and indicated that a school's response was necessary whenever sexual harassment became "sufficiently

severe, persistent, or pervasive to limit a student's ability to participate in or benefit from an education program or activity, or to create a hostile or abusive educational environment."[62] The 1997 Guidance recommended that schools take action on the basis of constructive notice rather than actual knowledge.[63] Instead of a deliberate indifference

---

[62] 1997 Guidance ("Sexually harassing conduct (which can include unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal, nonverbal, or physical conduct of a sexual nature) by an employee, by another student, or by a third party that is sufficiently severe, persistent, or pervasive to limit a student's ability to participate in or benefit from an education program or activity, or to create a hostile or abusive educational environment.").

[63] 1997 Guidance ("[A] school will always be liable for even one instance of quid pro quo harassment by a school employee . . . whether or not it knew, should have known, or approved of the harassment at issue."); id. ("a school will be liable under Title IX if its students sexually harass other students if . . . the school knows or should have known of the harassment").

standard, the 1997 Guidance indicated that the Department would find a school in violation where the school's response failed to stop the harassment and prevent its recurrence.[64]

The 2001 Guidance acknowledged that in the time period between the Department issuing the 1997 Guidance and the 2001 Guidance, the Supreme [64] 1997 Guidance ("Once a school has notice of possible sexual harassment of students – whether carried out by employees, other students, or third parties – it should take immediate and appropriate steps to investigate or otherwise determine what occurred and take steps reasonably calculated to end any harassment, eliminate a hostile environment if one has been created, and prevent harassment from occurring again.").

---

Court's Gebser and Davis cases addressed the subject of school responses to sexual harassment under Title IX.[65] The 2001 Guidance reasoned that because those Supreme Court cases were decided in the context of private lawsuits for money damages under Title IX, the Department was not obligated to adopt the same standards for administrative enforcement.[66] The

---

[65] 2001 Guidance at iii-iv.
[66] Id. at ii, iv.

2001 Guidance noted that the Gebser and Davis decisions analogized to Title IX's statutory administrative enforcement scheme, which provides that a school receives notice and an opportunity to correct a violation before an agency terminates Federal financial assistance.[67] The 2001 Guidance reasoned that because a school always

[67] Id. at iii-iv ("The Gebser Court recognized and contrasted lawsuits for money damages with the incremental nature of administrative enforcement of Title IX. In Gebser, the Court was concerned with the possibility of a money damages award against a school for harassment about which it had not known. In contrast, the process of administrative enforcement requires enforcement agencies such as OCR to make schools aware of potential Title IX violations and to seek voluntary corrective action before pursuing fund termination or other enforcement mechanisms.").

receives notice of a violation and opportunity to voluntarily correct a violation before the Department may terminate Federal financial assistance, the Department was not required to use the actual knowledge condition or deliberate indifference standard, and the 2001 Guidance continued the 1997

Guidance's approach to constructive notice and strict liability.[68]

The 2001 Guidance nonetheless asserted that consistency between the judicial and administrative rubrics was desirable, and with respect to a definition of sexual harassment, the 2001 Guidance stated that a multiplicity of definitions (i.e., one definition for

---

[68] Id. at 10 (a "school has notice of harassment if a responsible school employee actually knew or, in the exercise of reasonable care, should have known about the harassment.") ("Schools are responsible for taking prompt and effective action to stop the harassment and prevent its recurrence" and the recipient is "also responsible for remedying any effects of the harassment on the victim . . . .").

private lawsuits and another for administrative enforcement) would not serve the purpose of consistency between judicial and administrative enforcement.[69] The 2001 Guidance asserted that the Davis definition of actionable sexual harassment used different words (i.e., severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive) but was consistent with the definition of sexual

[69] Id. at vi ("schools benefit from consistency and simplicity in understanding what is sexual harassment for which the school must take responsive action. A multiplicity of definitions would not serve this purpose.").

harassment used in the 1997 Guidance (i.e., severe, persistent, or pervasive).[70] The 2001 Guidance proceeded to describe sexual harassment as "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature"[71] that is "severe, persistent, or pervasive"[72] and asserted that this definition was consistent with the Davis definition because both definitions "are

---

[70] Id. at v-vi.

[71] 2001 Guidance at 2. The 2001 Guidance, like the 1997 Guidance, emphasized that sexual harassment can include unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal, nonverbal, or physical conduct of a sexual nature, by an employee, student, or third party. Similarly, "sexual harassment" defined in these final regulations in § 106.30, includes the foregoing conduct of a sexual nature, as well as other unwelcome conduct "on the basis of sex" even if the conduct is devoid of sexual content.

[72] 2001 Guidance at vi.

contextual descriptions intended to capture the same concept – that under Title IX, the conduct must be sufficiently serious that it adversely affects a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's program."[73]

The withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter continued to define sexual harassment as "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" and added that "[s]exual

---

[73] Id.

violence is a form of sexual harassment prohibited by Title IX" without defining sexual violence.[74] The withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter continued the approach from the 2001 Guidance that sexual harassment must be "sufficiently serious that it interferes with or limits a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's program" but omitted the description of actionable sexual harassment as "severe, persistent, or pervasive" that had been utilized in the 1997 Guidance and the 2001 Guidance.[75] The withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter continued to recommend that schools act upon constructive notice (rather than actual knowledge) and to hold schools accountable under a strict liability

[74] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 3.

---

[75] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 3 ("As explained in OCR's 2001 Guidance, when a student sexually harasses another student, the harassing conduct creates a hostile environment if the conduct is sufficiently serious that it interferes with or limits a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's program. The more severe the conduct, the less need there is to show a repetitive series of incidents to prove a hostile environment, particularly if the harassment is physical. Indeed, a single or isolated incident of sexual harassment may create a hostile environment if the incident is sufficiently severe. For instance, a single instance of rape is sufficiently severe to create a hostile environment.").

standard rather than deliberate indifference.[76]

The 2017 Q&A used the definition of actionable sexual harassment as described in the 2001 Guidance, stating that "when sexual misconduct is so severe, persistent, or pervasive as to deny or limit a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the [76] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4 ("If a school knows or reasonably should know about student-on-student harassment that creates a hostile environment, Title IX requires the school to take immediate action to eliminate the harassment, prevent its recurrence, and address its effects."); id. at 4 fn. 12 ("This is the standard for administrative enforcement of Title IX and in court cases where plaintiffs are seeking injunctive relief. . . . The standard in private lawsuits for monetary damages is actual knowledge and deliberate indifference. See Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 643, 648 (1999).").

---

school's programs or activities, a hostile environment exists and the school must respond."[77] The 2017 Q&A relied on the 2001 Guidance's condition of constructive notice rather than actual knowledge.[78] Although the 2017 Q&A did not expressly address the deliberate indifference versus strict liability standard, it directed recipients to the

[77] 2017 Q&A at 1.
[78] 2017 Q&A at 2 (citing to the 2001 Guidance for the proposition that "where the school knows or reasonably should know of an incident of sexual misconduct, the school must take steps to understand what occurred and to respond appropriately") (emphasis added).

2001 Guidance for topics not addressed in the 2017 Q&A,[79] including what it means for a school to "respond appropriately" when the school "knows or reasonably should know"[80] of a sexual misconduct incident, thereby retaining the 2001 Guidance's reliance on constructive notice and strict liability.

---

[79] See 2017 Q&A at 1 ("The Department of Education intends to engage in rulemaking on the topic of schools' Title IX responsibilities concerning complaints of sexual misconduct, including peer-on-peer sexual harassment and sexual violence. The Department will solicit input from stakeholders and the public during that rulemaking process. In the interim, these questions and answers – along with the [2001] Revised Sexual Harassment Guidance previously issued by the Office for Civil Rights – provide information about how OCR will assess a school's compliance with Title IX.") (emphasis added).

[80] Id.

To the extent that the Department intended for schools to understand the 1997 Guidance, the 2001 Guidance, the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, or the 2017 Q&A as descriptions of a school's legal obligations under Title IX, those guidance documents directed schools to apply standards that failed to adequately address the unique challenges presented by sexual harassment incidents in a school's education program or activity.

The Department believes that sexual harassment affects "the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect"[81] and this problem warrants legally binding regulations addressing sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination under Title IX, instead of mere guidance documents which are not

---

[81] Davis, 526 U.S. at 652.

binding and do not have the force and effect of law.[82] The starting place for describing such legal obligations is adoption of the Gebser/Davis framework because that framework describes when sexual harassment constitutes a school itself discriminating on the basis of sex in violation of Title IX. At the same time, the Department adapts the three-part Gebser/Davis framework to further the purposes of Title IX in the context of administrative enforcement, holding schools responsible for taking more actions than what the Gebser/Davis framework requires.

[82] Perez v. Mortgage Bankers' Ass'n, 575 U.S. 92, 97 (2015).

The Department's adaptions of the three-part Gebser/Davis framework achieve important policy objectives that arise in the context of a school's response to reports, allegations, or incidents of sexual harassment in a school's education program or activity, including respect for freedom of speech and academic freedom,[83] respect for complainants' autonomy,[84] protection of complainants' equal educational access while respecting the decisions of State and local educators to determine appropriate supportive measures, [83] For further discussion see the "Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble.

[84] For discussion of the way that an actual knowledge standard, and a requirement for recipients to investigate upon receipt of a formal complaint, respect complainant's autonomy, see the "Actual Knowledge" and "Formal Complaint" subsections of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble.

remedies, and disciplinary sanctions,[85] consistency with constitutional due process and fundamental fairness, and clear legal obligations that enable robust administrative enforcement of Title IX violations.[86] The adaptions of the Gebser/Davis framework in these final regulations do not codify the Department's guidance yet provide

---

[85] For further discussion, see the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of this "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section and the "Section 106.44(a) Deliberate Indifference Standard" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

[86] For further discussion, see the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

recipients with flexibility, subject to the legal requirements in these final regulations, to respond to a greater range of misconduct, operate on a condition of constructive notice, or respond under a strict liability standard, if the recipient chooses to adopt those guidance-based standards for itself, or if the recipient is required under State or other laws to adopt those standards.

Definition of Sexual Harassment

Importantly, the final regulations continue the 1997 Guidance and 2001 Guidance approach of including as sexual harassment unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal, nonverbal, or physical conduct of a sexual nature by an employee, by another student, or by a third party.[87] Section 106.30 provides that “sexual harassment” is conduct “on the basis of sex” including “unwelcome conduct.” This definition therefore includes unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature, or other unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex, consistent with Department guidance. Equally as important is recognizing that these final regulations continue the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter’s express acknowledgment that sexual violence is a type of sexual harassment; the difference is that these final regulations expressly define sex-based violence, by reference to the Clery Act and VAWA.

[87] 2001 Guidance at 2; 1997 Guidance.

The way in which these final regulations differ from guidance in defining actionable sexual harassment is by returning to the 2001 Guidance's premise that a consistent definition of sexual harassment used in both judicial and administrative enforcement is appropriate. Despite the 2001 Guidance's assertion that using "different words" from the Davis definition of actionable sexual harassment did not result in inconsistent definitions for use in judicial and administrative enforcement, the Department has reconsidered that assertion because that assertion did not bear out over time.[88] These final regulations thus use (as one of three categories of conduct that constitutes sexual harassment) the Davis Court's phrasing verbatim: unwelcome conduct that a reasonable person would determine is "so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" that it effectively denies a person equal access to education.[89] The Department chooses to return to the premise expressed in the 2001 Guidance: the Department has an interest in providing recipients with "consistency and simplicity in understanding what is sexual harassment for which the school must take responsive action. A multiplicity of definitions would not serve this purpose."[90]

[88] The "Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble discusses in greater detail how the Davis definition of sexual harassment as "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" comports with First Amendment protections, and the way in which a broader definition, such as severe, persistent, or pervasive (as used in the 1997 Guidance and 2001 Guidance), has led to infringement of rights of free speech and academic freedom of students and faculty.

[89] Davis, 526 U.S. at 650 ("We thus conclude that funding recipients are properly held liable in damages only where they are deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment, of which they have actual knowledge, that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it can be said to deprive the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school."); § 106.30 (defining "sexual harassment" to include conduct "on the basis of sex" including "unwelcome conduct" that a reasonable person would determine to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity).

In addition to using the Davis definition verbatim (i.e., conduct that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education), the proposed regulations defined "sexual harassment" to also include sexual assault as defined in the Clery Act. In these final regulations, the Department

---

[90] 2001 Guidance at vi.

retains reference to sexual assault under the Clery Act, and additionally incorporates the definitions of dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking in the Clery Act as amended by VAWA.[91] Incorporating these four Clery Act/VAWA offenses clarifies that sexual harassment includes a single instance of sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking. Such

[91] Section 106.30 (defining "sexual harassment" to include sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence or stalking as defined in the Clery Act and VAWA statutes).

incorporation is consistent with the Supreme Court's observation in Davis that a single instance of sufficiently severe harassment on the basis of sex may have the systemic effect of denying the victim equal access to an education program or activity.[92] However, the Department's inclusion of sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking in the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, without requiring those sex offenses to meet the Davis elements of severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness, appropriately guards against, for instance, some sexual assaults or incidents of dating violence or domestic violence being covered under Title IX while other sexual assaults or incidents of dating violence or domestic violence are deemed not to be “pervasive” enough to meet the Davis standard. Similarly, this approach guards against a pattern of sex-based stalking being deemed “not severe” even though the pattern of behavior is “pervasive.” Such incorporation also provides consistency and clarity with respect to the intersection among Title IX, the Clery Act, and VAWA.[93]

---

[92] See Davis, 526 U.S. at 652-53 (noting that with respect to "severe, gender-based mistreatment" even "a single instance of sufficiently severe one-on-one peer harassment could be said to" have "the systemic effect of denying the victim equal access to an educational program or activity."). Although the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter expressly disclaimed reliance on Davis, that guidance also stated that "The more severe the conduct, the less need there is to show a repetitive series of incidents to prove a hostile environment, particularly if the harassment is physical. Indeed, a single or isolated incident of sexual harassment may create a hostile environment if the incident is sufficiently severe. For instance, a single instance of rape is sufficiently severe to create a hostile environment." 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 3.

The final regulations retain the proposed rules' definition of "quid pro quo" harassment in the definition of sexual harassment.[94] The Department recognized quid pro quo sexual harassment in its 1997 Guidance and 2001 Guidance, and cited to court cases

---

[93] Although elementary and secondary schools are not subject to the Clery Act, elementary and secondary school recipients must look to the definitions of sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking as defined in the Clery Act and VAWA in order to address those forms of sexual harassment under Title IX. These final regulations do not, however, alter the regulations implemented under the Clery Act or an institution of higher education's obligations, if any, under regulations implementing the Clery Act.

[94] Section 106.30 defines "sexual harassment" to include: An employee of the recipient conditioning the provision of an aid, benefit, or service of the recipient on the individual's participation in unwelcome sexual conduct. This type of harassment is commonly referred to as quid pro quo sexual harassment.

that recognized quid pro quo sexual harassment under Title IX.[95]

The Honorable Janet Napolitano, the President of the University of California, who is a former Governor and Attorney General of Arizona and a former United States Secretary of Homeland Security, [95] See, e.g., 2001 Guidance at 5, 10 (citing Alexander v. Yale University, 459 F. Supp. 1, 4 (D. Conn. 1977), aff'd, 631 F.2d 178 (2d Cir. 1980) (stating that a claim "that academic advancement was conditioned upon submission to sexual demands constitutes [a claim of] sex discrimination in education . . ."); see also Crandell v. New York Coll., Osteopathic Med., 87 F. Supp. 2d 304, 318 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (finding that allegations that a supervisory physician demanded that a student physician spend time with him and have lunch with him or receive a poor evaluation, in light of the totality of his alleged sexual comments and other inappropriate behavior, constituted a claim of quid pro quo harassment); Kadiki v. Va. Commonwealth Univ., 892 F. Supp. 746, 752 (E.D. Va. 1995). The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter focused on peer harassment but expressly referred to the 2001 Guidance for the appropriate approach to sexual harassment by employees (i.e., quid pro quo harassment). 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 2, fn. 8 ("This letter focuses on peer sexual harassment and violence. Schools' obligations and the appropriate response to sexual harassment and violence committed by employees may be different from those described in this letter. Recipients should refer to the 2001 Guidance for further information about employee harassment of students."); see also 2017 Q&A at 1 (not referencing quid pro quo sexual harassment, but directing recipients to look to the 2001 Guidance regarding matters not specifically addressed in the 2017 Q&A). Quid pro quo sexual harassment also is recognized under Title VII. E.g., Burlington Indus., Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 752-53 (1998).

---

observed that under the Department's guidance recipients had to grapple with "a broad continuum of conduct, from offensive statements to gang rape"[96] and the Department's guidance, especially after the 2001 Guidance was supplemented and altered by the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, caused recipients "uncertainty and confusion about how to appropriately comply."[97] By utilizing precise definitions of conduct that constitutes sexual harassment, the Department aims to reduce uncertainty and confusion for recipients, students, and employees, while ensuring conduct that jeopardizes equal educational access remains conduct to which a recipient must respond under Title IX.

---

[96] Janet Napolitano, "Only Yes Means Yes": An Essay on University Policies Regarding Sexual Violence and Sexual Assault, 33 YALE L. & POL'Y REV. 387, 388 (2015).

---

[97] Id.

Some commenters requested that the Department more closely align its definition of actionable sexual harassment with the definition that the Supreme Court uses in the context of discrimination because of sex in the workplace under Title VII. Specifically, commenters urged the Department to use a definition of sexual harassment that is "severe or pervasive" because that definition is used under Title VII[98] and the 1997 Guidance and 2001 Guidance relied on Title VII case law in using the definition of sexual harassment that is "severe, persistent, or pervasive."[99] However, in Davis, a case concerning sexual harassment of a fifth-grade student by another student, the Supreme Court did not adopt the [98] Meritor Sav. Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 67 (1986) ("For sexual harassment to be actionable, it must be sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of [the victim's] employment and create an abusive working environment.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted) (emphasis added).

---

[99] 2001 Guidance at vi (stating that "the definition of hostile environment sexual harassment found in OCR's 1997 guidance . . . derives from Title VII caselaw").

Title VII definition of sexual harassment for use under Title IX, defining actionable sexual harassment for Title IX purposes as conduct that is "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive."[100]

The Department is persuaded by the Supreme Court's reasoning that elementary and secondary "schools are unlike the adult workplace and that children may regularly interact in a manner that would be unacceptable among adults."[101] These final regulations also are consistent with the Equal Access Act, requiring that public secondary schools provide equal access to limited public forums without discriminating against the students "on the basis of the religious, political, philosophical, or other content of speech."[102]

---

[100] Davis, 526 U.S. at 652 ("Rather, in the context of student-on-student harassment, damages are available only where the behavior is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it denies its victims the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect.") (emphasis added).

---

[101] Davis, 526 U.S. at 651-52 (citing Meritor, 477 U.S. at 67).
[102] 20 U.S.C. 4071(a).

Similarly, an institution of higher education differs from the workplace. In this regard, these final regulations are consistent with the sense of Congress in the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended, that "an institution of higher education should facilitate the free and open exchange of ideas."[103] The sense of Congress is that institutions of higher education should facilitate the free and robust exchange of ideas,[104] but such an exchange may prove disruptive, undesirable, or impermissible in the workplace. Moreover, workplaces are generally expected to be free from conduct and conversation of a sexual nature, and it is common for employers to prohibit or discourage employees from engaging in romantic interactions

[103] 20 U.S.C. 1101a(a)(2)(C).

---

[104] 20 U.S.C. 1101a(a)(2)(C).

at work.[105] By contrast, it has become expected that college and university students enjoy personal freedom during their higher education experience,[106] and it is not common for an institution to prohibit or discourage students from

---

[105] See, e.g., Vicki Schultz, The Sanitized Workplace, 112 YALE L. J. 2061, 2191 (2003) (examining the trend through the twentieth century toward a societal expectation that workplaces must be rational environments "devoid of sexuality and other distracting passions" in which employers "increasingly ban or discourage employee romance" and observing that both feminist theory and classical-management theory supported this trend, the former on equality grounds and the latter on efficiency grounds, but arguing that workplaces should instead focus on sex equality without "chilling intimacy and solidarity among employees of both a sexual and nonsexual variety."); cf. Rebecca K. Lee, The Organization as a Gendered Entity: A Response to Professor Schultz's "The Sanitized Workplace", 15 COLUMBIA J. OF GENDER & LAW 609 (2006) (rebutting the notion that a sexualized workplace culture would be beneficial for sex equality, arguing that the "probable harms" would "outweigh the possible benefits of allowing sexuality to prosper in the work organization" and defending the "sexuality-constrained organizational paradigm in light of concerns regarding the role of work, on-the-job expectations, and larger workplace dynamics.").

[106] Kristen Peters, Protecting the Millennial College Student, 16 S. CAL. REV. OF L. & SOCIAL JUSTICE 431, 437 (2007) (noting that the doctrine of in loco parentis in the higher education context diminished in the 1960s and "[b]y the early 1970s, college students had successfully vindicated their contractual and civil rights, redefining the college-student relationship to emphasize student freedom and abrogate college authority.") (internal citations omitted).

engaging in romantic interactions in the college environment.[107]

The Department does not wish to apply the same definition of actionable sexual harassment under Title VII to Title IX because such an application would equate workplaces with educational environments, whereas both the Supreme Court and Congress have noted the unique differences of educational environments from workplaces and the importance of respecting the unique nature and purpose of educational environments. As discussed further in the "Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, applying the same definition of actionable sexual harassment under Title VII to Title IX may continue to cause recipients to chill and infringe upon the First Amendment freedoms of students, teachers, and faculty by broadening the scope of prohibited speech and expression.

---

[107] Justin Neidig, Sex, Booze, and Clarity: Defining Sexual Assault on a College Campus, 16 WILLIAM & MARY J. OF WOMEN & THE L. 179, 180-81 (2009) ("College is an exciting and often confusing time for students. This new experience is defined by coed dorms, near constant socializing that often involves alcohol, and the ability to retreat to a private room with no adult supervision. The environment creates a socialization process where appropriate behavior is defined by the actions of peers, particularly when it comes to sexual behavior.") (internal citations omitted).

The Department's use of the Davis definition of sexual harassment in these final regulations returns to the Department's intent stated in the 2001 Guidance: that the Department's definition of sexual harassment should be consistent with the definition of sexual harassment in Davis. The Davis definition of sexual harassment adopted in these final regulations, adapted by the Department's inclusion of quid pro quo harassment and the four Clery Act/VAWA offenses, will help prevent infringement of First Amendment freedoms, clarify confusion by precisely defining sexual violence independent from the Davis definition, clarify the intersection among Title IX, the Clery Act, and VAWA with respect to sex-based offenses, and ensure that recipients must respond to students and employees victimized by sexual harassment that jeopardizes a person's equal educational access.

Recipients may continue to address harassing conduct that does not meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, as acknowledged by the

Department's change to § 106.45(b)(3)(i) to clarify that dismissal of a formal complaint because the allegations do not meet the Title IX definition of sexual harassment, does not preclude a recipient from addressing the alleged misconduct under other provisions of the recipient's own code of conduct. [108]

[108] Section 106.45(b)(3). Similarly, nothing in these final regulations prevents a recipient from addressing conduct that is outside the Department's jurisdiction due to the conduct constituting sexual harassment occurring outside the recipient's education program or activity, or occurring against a person who is not located in the United States.

Actual Knowledge

The Department adopts and adapts the Gebser/Davis framework's condition of "actual knowledge."[109] The Supreme Court held that a recipient with actual knowledge of sexual harassment commits intentional discrimination (if the recipient responds in a deliberately indifferent manner).[110] Because Title IX

---

[109] Davis, 526 U.S. at 642 (stating that actual knowledge ensures that liability arises from "an official decision by the recipient not to remedy the violation") (citing Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290) (internal quotation marks omitted).
[110] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 287-88 ("If a school district's liability for a teacher's sexual harassment rests on principles of constructive notice or respondeat superior, it will likewise be the case that the recipient of funds was unaware of the discrimination. It is sensible to assume that Congress did not envision a recipient's liability in damages in that situation.").

is a statute "designed primarily to prevent recipients of Federal financial assistance from using the funds in a discriminatory manner,"[111] it is a recipient's own misconduct – not the sexually harassing behavior of employees, students, or other third parties – that subjects the recipient to liability in a private lawsuit under Title IX, and the recipient cannot commit its own misconduct unless the recipient first knows of the sexual harassment that needs to be addressed.[112] Because Congress enacted Title IX under its Spending Clause authority, the obligations it imposes on recipients are in the nature of a contract.[113] The Supreme Court held that "a damages remedy will not lie under Title IX unless

[111] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 292; Cannon, 441 U.S. at 704 (noting that the primary congressional purposes behind Title IX were "to avoid the use of Federal resources to support discriminatory practices" and to "provide individual citizens effective protection against those practices.").

---

[112] E.g., Julie Davies, Assessing Institutional Responsibility for Sexual Harassment in Education, 77 TULANE L. REV. 387, 402 (2002) (analyzing the Gebser/Davis framework and noting, "The Court concluded that a funding recipient's contract with the federal government encompassed only a promise not to discriminate, not an agreement to be held liable when employees discriminate.").
[113] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 286; Davis, 526 U.S. at 640.

an official who at a minimum has authority to address the alleged discrimination and to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf has actual knowledge of discrimination in the recipient's programs and fails adequately to respond."[114] The Supreme Court reasoned that it would be "unsound" for the Court to allow a private lawsuit (with the potential for

---

[114] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290.

money damages) against a recipient when the statute's administrative enforcement scheme imposes a requirement that before an agency may terminate Federal funds the agency must give notice to "an appropriate person" with the recipient who then may decide to voluntarily take corrective action to remedy the violation.[115] The

[115] Id. at 289-90 ("Because the express remedial scheme under Title IX is predicated upon notice to an 'appropriate person' and an opportunity to rectify any violation, 20 U.S.C. § 1682, we conclude, in the absence of further direction from Congress, that the implied damages remedy should be fashioned along the same lines. An 'appropriate person' under § 1682 is, at a minimum, an official of the recipient entity with authority to take corrective action to end the discrimination.").

Supreme Court reasoned that a "central purpose of requiring notice of the violation 'to the appropriate person' and an opportunity for voluntary compliance before administrative enforcement proceedings can commence is to avoid diverting education funding from beneficial uses where a recipient was unaware of discrimination in its programs and is willing to institute prompt corrective measures."[116]

The Supreme Court thus rejected theories of vicarious liability (e.g., respondeat superior) and constructive notice as the basis for a recipient's Title IX liability in private Title IX lawsuits.[117] The Supreme Court noted that the Department's 1997 Guidance held [116] Id. at 289. The Court continued, "When a teacher's sexual harassment is imputed to a school district or when a school district is deemed to have 'constructively' known of the teacher's harassment, by assumption the district had no actual knowledge of the teacher's conduct. Nor, of course, did the district have an opportunity to take action to end the harassment or to limit further harassment." Id.

---

[117] Id.; Davis, 526 U.S. at 650.

schools responsible under vicarious liability and constructive notice theories.[118] Neither Gebser nor Davis indicated whether the Department's administrative enforcement of Title IX should continue to rely on vicarious liability and constructive notice as conditions triggering a recipient's response obligations.

---

[118] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 282 (plaintiffs in Gebser advocated for private lawsuit liability based on vicarious liability and constructive notice in part by looking at the Department's 1997 Guidance which relied on both theories).

These final regulations adopt the actual knowledge condition from the Gebser/Davis framework so that these final regulations clearly prohibit a recipient's own intentional discrimination,[119] but adapt the Gebser/Davis condition of actual knowledge to include notice to more recipient employees than what is required under the Gebser/Davis

---

[119] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" to include notice to any recipient's officials with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient, thereby mirroring the Gebser/Davis condition of actual knowledge).

framework,[120] in a way that takes into account the different needs and expectations of students in elementary and secondary schools, and in postsecondary institutions, with respect to sexual harassment and sexual harassment allegations.[121] These final regulations apply an adapted condition of actual knowledge in ways that are similar to, and different from, the Department's approach in guidance as to when notice of sexual harassment triggers a recipient's response obligations. In other words, we tailor the Supreme Court's condition of actual knowledge to the unique context of administrative enforcement.

---

[120] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" to include notice to any recipient's Title IX Coordinator, a position each recipient must designate and authorize for the express purpose of coordinating a recipient's compliance with Title IX obligations, including specialized training for the Title IX Coordinator, requirements not found in the Gebser/Davis framework); § 106.8(a); § 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

[121] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" to include notice to "any employee" in an elementary and secondary school, a condition not found in the Gebser/Davis framework).

The Department's guidance used a "responsible employees" rubric to describe the pool of employees to whom notice triggered the recipient's response obligations. The "responsible employees" rubric in guidance did not differentiate between elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions. For all recipients, Department guidance stated that a "responsible employee" was an employee who "has the authority to take action to redress the harassment," or "who has the duty to report to appropriate school officials sexual harassment or any other misconduct by students or employees," or an individual "who a student could reasonably believe has this authority or responsibility."[122] Under the responsible employees rubric in guidance, the recipient was liable

[122] 2001 Guidance at 13-14; 1997 Guidance (while not using the same three-part definition of "responsible employees" as the 2001 Guidance, giving examples of a "responsible employee" to include "a principal, campus security, bus driver, teacher, an affirmative action officer, or staff in the office of student affairs"); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4 (while not using the term "responsible employees," stating that a school must respond whenever it "knows or reasonably should know" about sexual harassment); id. at 2 (stating that "This letter supplements the 2001 Guidance by providing additional guidance and practical examples regarding the Title IX requirements as they relate to sexual violence" thus indicating that the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter did not alter the 2001 Guidance's approach to responsible employees); 2014 Q&A at 14 ("According to OCR's 2001 Guidance, a responsible employee includes any employee: who has the authority to take action to redress sexual violence; who has been given the duty of reporting incidents of sexual violence or any other misconduct by students to the Title IX coordinator or other appropriate school designee; or whom a student could reasonably believe has this authority or duty."); 2017 Q&A 1-2 (citing to the 2001 Guidance for the proposition that a school must respond whenever the school "knows or reasonably should know" of a sexual misconduct incident and that in addition to a Title IX Coordinator other employees "may be responsible employees").

when a responsible employee "knew," or when a responsible employee "should have known," about possible harassment.[123]

For reasons discussed below, these final regulations do not use the "responsible employees" rubric, although these final regulations essentially retain the first of the three

---

[123] 1997 Guidance (a school is liable where it "knows or should have known"); 2001 Guidance at 13 ("A school has notice if a responsible employee knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, about the harassment.") (internal quotation marks omitted); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4; 2014 Q&A at 2 ("OCR deems a school to have notice of student-on-student sexual violence if a responsible employee knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, about the sexual violence."); 2017 Q&A at 1.

categories of the way guidance described "responsible employees."[124] As discussed below, these final regulations depart from the "should have known" condition that guidance indicated would trigger a recipient's response obligations.

Rather than using the phrase "responsible employees," these final

---

[124] The § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" including notice to "any official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient" is the equivalent of the first portion of the definition of "responsible employees" in Department guidance (e.g., 2001 Guidance at 13), that included any employee who "has the authority to take action to redress the harassment." See also Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 140 (2017) ("The Supreme Court's definition of an 'appropriate person'" as an 'official who at a minimum has authority to address the alleged discrimination and to institute corrective measures' is "very close to the first category [of responsible employees] in OCR's guidance.") (citing Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290).

regulations describe the pool of employees to whom notice triggers the recipient's response obligations. That pool of employees is different in elementary and secondary schools than in postsecondary institutions. For all recipients, notice to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator or to "any official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient" (referred to herein as

"officials with authority") conveys actual knowledge to the recipient and triggers the recipient's response obligations. Determining whether an individual is an "official with authority" is a legal determination that depends on the specific facts relating to a recipient's administrative structure and the roles and duties held by officials in the recipient's own operations. The Supreme Court viewed this category of officials as the equivalent of what 20 U.S.C. 1682 calls an "appropriate person" for purposes of the Department's resolution of Title IX violations with a recipient.[125] Lower Federal courts applying the Gebser/Davis actual knowledge condition have reached various results with respect to whether certain

---

[125] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290 ("Because the express remedial scheme under Title IX is predicated upon notice to an 'appropriate person' and an opportunity to rectify any violation, 20 U.S.C. § 1682, we conclude, in the absence of further direction from Congress, that the implied damages remedy should be fashioned along the same lines. An 'appropriate person' under § 1682 is, at a minimum, an official of the recipient entity with authority to take corrective action to end the discrimination.").

employees in an elementary and secondary school, or in a postsecondary institution, are officials with authority to whom notice conveys actual knowledge to the recipient.[126] Because these final regulations adopt the Gebser/Davis condition describing a recipient's actual knowledge as resulting from notice to an official with authority, but also include the recipient's Title IX Coordinator and any elementary and secondary school employee, the fact-specific nature of whether certain officials of the recipient qualify as officials with authority does not present a barrier to reporting sexual harassment and requiring schools, colleges, and universities to respond promptly.

---

[126] With respect to elementary and secondary schools, see Julie Davies, Assessing Institutional Responsibility for Sexual Harassment in Education, 77 TULANE L. REV. 387, 398, 424-26 (2002) (reviewing cases decided under the Gebser/Davis framework and noting that courts reached different results regarding teachers, principals, school boards, and superintendents, and concluding that "The legal authority of individuals to receive notice is clearly relevant and a basis for their inclusion as parties to whom notice may be given, but courts must also evaluate the factual reality.") With respect to postsecondary institutions, see Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 139 (2017) ("Overall, this category is rather narrow and the identity of the relevant employees rests on an institution's own policies regarding who has the authority to take action to redress sexual violence.").

Under these final regulations, in elementary and secondary schools, notice to "any employee" (in addition to notice to the Title IX Coordinator or to any official with authority) triggers the recipient's response obligations, so there is no longer a need to use the responsible employees rubric. Under these final regulations, an elementary and secondary school must respond whenever any employee has notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment, so there is no need to distinguish among employees who have "authority to redress the harassment," have the "duty to report" misconduct to appropriate school officials, or employees who "a student could reasonably believe" have that authority or duty.[127] In the elementary and secondary school setting where

---

[127] See 2001 Guidance at 13.

school administrators, teachers, and other employees exercise a considerable degree of control and supervision over their students, the Department believes that requiring a school district to respond when its employees know of sexual harassment (including reports or allegations of sexual harassment) furthers Title IX's non-discrimination mandate in a manner that best serves the needs and

expectations of students.[128] The Department is persuaded by commenters who asserted that students in elementary and secondary schools often talk about sexual harassment experiences with someone other than their teacher, and that it is unreasonable to expect young students to differentiate among employees for the purpose of which employees' knowledge triggers

---

[128] Davis, 526 U.S. at 646 (noting that a public school's power over its students is "custodial and tutelary, permitting a degree of supervision and control that could not be exercised over free adults") (citing Veronica Sch. Dist. v. Acton, 515 U.S. 646, 655 (1995)).

the school's response obligations and which do not. Elementary and secondary schools generally operate under the doctrine of in loco parentis, under which the school stands "in the place of" a parent with respect to certain authority over, and responsibility for, its students.[129] Further, employees at [129] Todd A. Demitchell, The Duty to Protect: Blackstone's Doctrine of In Loco Parentis: A Lens for Viewing the Sexual Abuse of Students, 2002 BYU EDUC. & L. J. 17, 19-20 (2002) ("Acting in the place of parents is an accepted and expected role assumed by educators and their schools. This doctrine has been recognized in state statutes and court cases. For example, the United States Supreme Court noted that there exists an 'obvious concern on the part of parents, and school authorities acting in loco parentis, to protect children – especially in a captive audience – from exposure to sexually explicit, indecent, or lewd speech. [Citing to Bethel Sch. Dist. No. 403 v. Fraser ex rel. Fraser, 478 U.S. 675, 684 (1986).] According to the Supreme Court, school officials have authority over students by virtue of in loco parentis and a concomitant duty of protection. It has been asserted that in loco parentis is a sub-set of government's broad common law power of parens patriae.") (internal citations omitted).

elementary and secondary schools typically are mandatory reporters of child abuse under State laws for purposes of child protective services.[130] The Department is persuaded that employees at elementary and secondary schools stand in a unique position with respect to students and that a school

---

[130] See Ala. Code § 26-14-3; Alaska Stat. § 47.17.020; Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 13-3620; Ark. Code Ann. § 12-18-402; Cal. Penal Code § 11165.7; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 19-3-304; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 17a-101; Del. Code Ann. tit. 16, § 903; D.C. Code § 4-1321.02; Fla. Stat. § 39.201; Ga. Code Ann. § 19-7-5; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 350-1.1; Idaho Code Ann. § 16-1605; 325 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 5/4; Ind. Code § 31-33-5-1; Iowa Code § 232.69; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 38-2223; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 620.030; La. Child Code Ann. art. 603(17); Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 22, § 4011-A; Md. Code Ann., Fam. Law § 5-704; Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 119, § 21; Mich. Comp. Laws § 722.623; Minn. Stat. § 626.556; Miss. Code. Ann. § 43-21-353; Mo. Ann Stat. § 210.115; Mont. Code Ann. § 41-3-201; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 28-711; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 432B.220; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 169-C:29; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 9:6-8.10; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 32A-4-3; N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 413; N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 7B-301; N.D. Cent. Code Ann. § 50-25.1-03; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2151.421; Okla. Stat. tit. 10A, § 1-2-101; Or. Rev. Stat. § 419B.010; 23 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann § 6311; R.I. Gen. Laws § 40-11-3(a); S.C. Code Ann. § 63-7-310; S.D. Codified Laws § 26-8A-3; Tenn. Code Ann. § 37-1-403; Tex. Fam. Code § 261.101; Utah Code Ann. § 62A-4a-403; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 33, § 4913; Va. Code Ann. § 63.2-1509; Wash. Rev. Code § 26.44.030; W. Va. Code § 49-2-803; Wis. Stat. § 48.981; Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 14-3-205.

district should be held accountable for responding to sexual harassment under Title IX when the school district's employees have notice of sexual harassment or sexual harassment allegations.

In postsecondary institutions, where in loco parentis does not apply,[131] notice

---

[131] E.g., Wagner v. Holtzapple, 101 F. Supp. 3d 462, 472-73 (M.D. Penn. 2015) (noting that "the law surrounding the student-university relationship has changed considerably in a relatively short period of time. 'The early period of American higher education, prior to the 1960s, was exclusively associated with the doctrine of in loco parentis.'") (citing to Jason A. Zwara, Student Privacy, Campus Safety, and Reconsidering the Modern Student-University Relationship, 38 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 419, 432-33, 436 (2012) ("In loco parentis was applied in the early period of higher education law to prevent courts or legislatures from intervening in the student-university relationship, thus insulating the institution from criminal or civil liability or regulation. . . . Courts began to shift away from in loco parentis beginning in the civil rights era of the 1960s through a number of cases addressing student claims for constitutional rights, in particular due process rights and free speech" and courts now generally view the student-university relationship as one governed by contract) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

to the Title IX Coordinator or any official with authority conveys actual knowledge to the recipient. Triggering a recipient's response obligations only when the Title IX Coordinator or an official with authority has notice respects the autonomy of a complainant in a postsecondary institution better than the responsible employee rubric in guidance. As discussed below, the approach in these final regulations allows postsecondary institutions to decide which of their employees must, may, or must only with a student's consent, report sexual harassment to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator (a report to whom always triggers the recipient's response obligations, no matter who makes the report). Postsecondary institutions ultimately decide which officials to authorize to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient. The Title IX Coordinator and officials with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient fall into the same category as employees whom guidance described as having "authority to redress the sexual harassment."[132] In this manner, in the postsecondary institution context these final regulations continue to use one of [132] The § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" as including notice to "any official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient" is the equivalent of the portion of the definition of "responsible employees" in Department guidance (e.g., 2001 Guidance at 13) that included any employee who "has the authority to take action to redress the harassment." See also Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 140 (2017) ("The Supreme Court's definition of an 'appropriate person'" as an 'official who at a minimum has authority to address the alleged discrimination and to institute corrective measures' is "very close to the first category [of responsible employees] in OCR's guidance.") (citing Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290).

---

the three categories of "responsible employees" described in guidance.

With respect to postsecondary institutions, these final regulations depart from using the other two categories of "responsible employees" described in guidance (those who have a "duty to report" misconduct, and those whom a "student could reasonably believe" have the requisite authority or duty). As discussed below, in the postsecondary institution context, requiring the latter two categories of employees to be mandatory reporters (as Department guidance has) may have resulted in college and university policies that have unintentionally discouraged disclosures or reports of sexual harassment by leaving complainants with too few options for disclosing sexual harassment to an employee without automatically triggering a recipient's response. Elementary and secondary school students cannot be expected to distinguish among employees to whom disclosing sexual harassment results in a mandatory school response, but students at postsecondary institutions may benefit from having options to disclose sexual harassment to college and university employees who may keep the disclosure confidential. These final

regulations ensure that all students and employees are notified of the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator and how to report sexual harassment for purposes of triggering a recipient's response obligations, and the Department believes that students at postsecondary institutions benefit from retaining control over whether, and when, the complainant wants the recipient to respond to the sexual harassment that the complainant experienced.

In both the elementary and secondary school context and the postsecondary institution context, the final regulations use the same broad conception of what might constitute "notice" as the Department's guidance used. Notice results whenever any elementary and secondary school employee, any Title IX Coordinator, or any official with authority: witnesses sexual harassment; hears about sexual harassment or sexual harassment allegations from a complainant (i.e., a person alleged to be the victim) or a third party (e.g., the complainant's parent, friend, or peer); receives a written or verbal complaint about sexual harassment or sexual harassment allegations; or by any other means.[133]

---

[133] E.g., 2001 Guidance at 13.

These final regulations emphasize that any person may always trigger a recipient's response obligations by reporting sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator using contact information that the recipient must post on the recipient's website.[134] The person who reports does not need to be the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim); a report may be made by "any person"[135] who believes that sexual harassment may have occurred and requires a recipient's response.

[134] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" to mean notice, where "notice" includes but is not limited to a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a)); § 106.8(b) (requiring the Title IX Coordinator's contact information to be displayed prominently on the recipient's website); § 106.8(a) (stating that any person may report sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim) using the contact information listed for the Title IX Coordinator or any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report, and that a report may be made at any time, including during non-business hours, by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the listed office address, for the Title IX Coordinator).

The final regulations depart from the constructive notice condition described in Department guidance that stated that a recipient must respond if a recipient's responsible employees "should have known" about sexual harassment. The [135] Section 106.8(a) (specifying that "any person may report" sexual harassment).

Department's guidance gave only the following examples of circumstances under which a recipient "should have known" about sexual harassment: when "known incidents should have triggered an investigation that would have led to discovery of [] additional incidents," or when "the pervasiveness" of the harassment leads to the conclusion that the recipient "should have known" of a hostile environment.[136]

The Department has reconsidered the position that a recipient's response obligations are triggered whenever employees "should have known" because known incidents "should have triggered an investigation that would [136] 2001 Guidance at 13-14 ("[A] school has a duty to respond to harassment about which it reasonably should have known, i.e., if it would have learned of the harassment if it had exercised reasonable care or made a reasonably diligent inquiry. For example, in some situations if the school knows of incidents of harassment, the exercise of reasonable care should trigger an investigation that would lead to a discovery of additional incidents. In other cases, the pervasiveness of the harassment may be enough to conclude that the school should have known of the hostile environment – if the harassment is widespread, openly practiced, or well-known to students and staff (such as sexual harassment occurring in the hallways, graffiti in public areas, or harassment occurring during recess under a teacher's supervision.") (internal citations omitted); 1997 Guidance (same); 2014 Q&A at 2 (same). The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 1-2, and the 2017 Q&A at 1, did not describe the circumstances under which a school "should have known" but referenced the 2001 Guidance on this topic.

have led to discovery" of additional incidents.[137] The final regulations impose clear obligations as to when a recipient must investigate allegations. Unlike the Department's guidance, which did not specify the circumstances under which a recipient must investigate and adjudicate sexual harassment allegations, the final regulations clearly obligate a recipient to investigate and

[137] 2001 Guidance at 13.

adjudicate whenever a complainant files, or a Title IX Coordinator signs, a formal complaint.[138] The Department will hold recipients responsible for a recipient's failure or refusal to investigate a formal complaint.[139] However, the Department does not believe it is feasible or necessary to speculate on what an investigation "would have" revealed if

---

[138] Section 106.44(b)(1) (stating a recipient must investigate in response to a formal complaint); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint" as a written document filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator requesting that the recipient investigate allegations of sexual harassment against a respondent, where "document filed by a complainant" also includes an electronic submission such as an e-mail or use of an online portal if the recipient provides one for filing formal complaints).

[139] Section 106.44(b)(1).

the investigation had been conducted. Even if there are additional incidents of which a recipient "would have" known had the recipient conducted an investigation into a known incident, each of the additional incidents involve complainants who also have the clear option and right under these final regulations to file a formal complaint that requires the recipient to investigate, or to report the sexual harassment and trigger the recipient's obligation to respond by offering supportive measures (and explaining to the complainant the option of filing a formal complaint).[140] If a recipient fails to meet its Title IX obligations with respect to any complainant, the Department will hold the recipient liable under these final regulations, and doing so does not necessitate speculating about what an investigation "would have" revealed.

[140] Section 106.8(a) (stating any person may report sexual harassment using the Title IX Coordinator's listed contact information); § 106.8(b) (stating recipients must prominently display the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on their websites); § 106.44(a) (stating recipients must respond promptly to actual knowledge of sexual harassment by, among other things, offering supportive measures to the complainant regardless of whether a formal complaint is filed, and by explaining to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint).

The Department has reconsidered the position that a recipient's response obligations are triggered whenever employees "should have known" due to the "pervasiveness" of sexual harassment.[141] In elementary and secondary schools, the final regulations charge a recipient with actual knowledge

---

[141] 2001 Guidance at 13-14.

whenever any employee has notice. Thus, if sexual harassment is "so pervasive" that some employee "should have known" about it (e.g., sexualized graffiti scrawled across lockers that meets the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30), it is highly likely that at least one employee did know about it and the school is charged with actual knowledge. There is no reason to retain a separate "should have known" standard to cover situations that are "so pervasive" in elementary and secondary schools. In postsecondary institutions, when sexual harassment is "so pervasive" that some employees "should have known" it is highly likely that at least one employee did know about it. However, in postsecondary institutions, for reasons discussed below, the Department believes that complainants will be better served by allowing the postsecondary institution recipient to craft and apply the recipient's own policy with respect to which employees must, may, or must only with a complainant's consent, report sexual harassment and sexual harassment allegations to the Title IX Coordinator. With respect to whether a Title IX Coordinator or official with authority in a postsecondary institution "should have known" of sexual harassment, the Department believes that imposing a "should have known" standard unintentionally creates a negative incentive for Title IX Coordinators and officials with authority to inquire about possible sexual harassment in ways that invade the privacy and autonomy of students and employees at postsecondary institutions, and such a negative consequence is not necessary because the final regulations provide every student, employee, and third party with clear, accessible channels for reporting to the Title IX Coordinator,[142] which gives the Title IX Coordinator notice and triggers the recipients' response obligations,[143] without the need to require Title IX Coordinators and officials with authority to potentially

---

[142] Section 106.8(a) (requiring every recipient to list the office address, telephone number, and e-mail address for the Title IX Coordinator and stating that any person may report sexual harassment by using the listed contact information, and that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator); § 106.8(b) (requiring recipients to list the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on recipient websites).

[143] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" to mean notice to the Title IX Coordinator and stating that "notice" includes but is not limited to a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a)).

invade student and employee privacy or autonomy.[144]

The Department's guidance did not use the term "mandatory reporters" but the 2001 Guidance expected responsible employees to report sexual harassment

---

[144] The 2014 Q&A acknowledged one of the drawbacks of a condition that triggers a postsecondary institution's response obligations whenever a Title IX Coordinator or official with authority "should have known" about a student's disclosure of sexual harassment: Under such a condition, whenever the Title IX Coordinator or other officials with authority know about public awareness events (such as "Take Back the Night" events) where survivors are encouraged to safely talk about their sexual assault experiences, those recipient officials would be obligated to (a) attend such events and (b) respond to any sexual harassment disclosed at such an event by contacting each survivor, offering them supportive measures, documenting the institution's response to the disclosure, and all other recipient's response obligations, including an investigation. 2014 Q&A at 24. Failure to do so would be avoiding having learned about campus sexual assault incidents that could have been discovered with due diligence (i.e., the Title IX Coordinator and other university officials "should have known" about the experiences disclosed by survivors at such events). Id. Understanding the drawbacks of this kind of rule, the 2014 Q&A carved out an exception, but without explaining how or why the exception would apply only to "public awareness events" and not, for example, also extend to Title IX Coordinators and other postsecondary institution officials with authority needing to inquire into students' (and employees') private affairs whenever there was any indication that a student or employee may be suffering the impact of sexual harassment. Id. ("OCR wants students to feel free to participate in preventive education programs and access resources for survivors. Therefore, public awareness events such as 'Take Back the Night' or other forums at which students disclose experiences with sexual violence are not considered notice to the school for the purpose of triggering an individual investigation unless the survivor initiates a complaint.").

to "appropriate school officials"[145] and the withdrawn 2014 Q&A specified that responsible employees must report to the Title IX Coordinator.[146] As of 2017 many (if not most) postsecondary institutions had policies designating nearly all their employees as "responsible employees" and "mandatory reporters."[147] The

---

[145] 2001 Guidance at 13.
[146] 2014 Q&A at 14; cf. id. at 22 (exempting responsible employees who have counseling roles from being obligated to report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator in a way that identifies the student).
[147] Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 77-78 (2017) ("Today the overwhelming majority of institutions of higher education designate virtually all of their employees as

“explosion” in postsecondary institution policies making nearly all employees mandatory reporters (sometimes referred to as “wide-net” or universal mandatory reporting) was due in part to the broad, vague way that “responsible employees” were defined in Department responsible employees and exempt only a small number of ‘confidential’ employees. Kathryn Holland, Lilia Cortina, and Jennifer Freyd recently examined reporting policies at 150 campuses and found that policies at 69 percent of the institutions made all employees mandatory reporters, policies at 19 percent of the institutions designated nearly all employees as mandatory reporters, and only 4 percent of institutional policies named a limited list of reporters. The authors concluded, ‘[T]hese findings suggest that the great majority of U.S. colleges and universities – regardless of size or public vs. private nature – have developed policies designating most if not all employees (including faculty, staff, and student employees) as mandatory reporters of sexual assault.’ At some institutions, these reporting obligations have even been incorporated into employees’ contracts.”) (citing an “accepted for publication” version of Kathryn Holland et al., Compelled disclosure of college sexual assault, 73 AM. PSYCHOLOGIST 3, 256 (2018)).

---

guidance.[148] The extent to which a wide-net or universal mandatory reporting system for employees in postsecondary institutions is beneficial, or detrimental, to complainants, is difficult to determine,[149] and research (to date) is

---

[148] Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 79-80 (2017) (analyzing the "explosion" of universal or near-universal mandatory reporting policies, which the author calls "wide-net reporting policies" and finding a root of that trend in Department guidance: "The question was raised whether this language [in Department guidance] meant all employees had to be made responsible employees. For example, John Gaal and Laura Harshbarger, writing in the Higher Education Law Report asked, 'And does OCR really mean that any employee who has any 'misconduct' reporting duty is a 'responsible employee'? . . . We simply do not know.' Administrators started concluding, erroneously, that any employee who has an obligation to report any other misconduct at the institution must be labeled a responsible employee. Several OCR resolution letters issued at the end of 2016 bolstered this broad interpretation.") (internal citations omitted; ellipses in original).

[149] Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 82-83 (2017) (stating institutions with "wide-net reporting policies" defend such policies by "claiming that they are best for survivors" for reasons such as enabling institutions to "identify victims in order to offer them resources and support" and allowing institutions "to collect data on the prevalence of sexual assault and to ensure that perpetrators are identified and disciplined.") (internal citations omitted); cf. id. at 83-84 (stating institutional justifications "make wide-net reporting policies appear consistent with the spirit of Title IX, insofar as they seem consistent with institutional commitments to reduce campus sexual violence . . . . Even if wide-net policies were once thought beneficial to help break a culture of silence around sexual violence in the university setting, the utilitarian calculus has now changed and these policies do more harm than good.") (internal citations omitted); id. at 84 (summarizing the "harm survivors experience when they are involuntarily thrust into a system designed to address their

inconclusive.[150] What research does demonstrate is that respecting an alleged victim's autonomy,[151] giving

victimization" and arguing that "wide-net" mandatory reporting policies "undermine [survivors'] autonomy and sense of institutional support, aggravating survivors' psychological and physical harm. These effects can impede survivors' healing, directly undermining Title IX's objective of ensuring equal access to educational opportunities and benefits regardless of gender. In addition, . . . because of the negative consequences of reporting, wide-net reporting policies discourage students from talking to any faculty or staff on campus. Fewer disclosures result in fewer survivors being connected to services and fewer offenders being held accountable for their acts. Holding perpetrators accountable is critical for creating a climate that deters acts of violence. Because wide-net policies chill reporting, these policies violate the spirit of Title IX.") (internal citations omitted).

[150] Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 78-79 (2017) ("The number of institutions with broad policies, sometimes known as universal mandatory reporting or required reporting, and hereafter called 'wide-net' reporting policies, has grown over time. Approximately fifteen years ago, in 2002, only 45 percent of schools identified some mandatory reporters on their campuses, and these schools did not necessarily categorize almost every employee in that manner. The trend since then is notable, particularly because it contravenes the advice from a [study published in 2002 using funds provided by the National Institute of Justice, Heather M. Karjane et al., Campus Sexual Assault: How America's Institutions of Higher Education Respond 120, Final Report, NIJ Grant # 1999-WA-VX-0008 (Education Development Center, Inc. 2002)]. The authors of that study suggested that wide-net reporting policies were unwise. After examining almost 2,500 institutions of higher education, they warned: 'Any policy or procedure that compromises, or worse, eliminates the student victim's ability to make her or his own informed choices about proceeding through the reporting and adjudication process – such as mandatory reporting requirements that do not include an anonymous reporting option or require the victim to participate in the adjudication process if the report is filed – not only reduces reporting rates but may be counterproductive to the victim's healing process.'") (internal citations omitted); id. at 102 (concluding that wide-net reporting policies "clearly inhibit the willingness of some students to talk to a university employee about an unwanted sexual experience. This effect is not surprising in light of studies on the effect of mandatory reporting in other contexts. Studies document that women sometimes refuse to seek medical care when their doctors are mandatory reporters, or forego calling the police when a state has a mandatory arrest law.") (internal citations omitted); id. at 104-05 (citing to "conflicting research" about whether college and university mandatory reporting policies chill reporting, concluding that available research has not empirically demonstrated the alleged benefits of mandatory reporting policies in colleges and universities, and arguing that without further research, colleges and universities should carefully design reporting policies that "can accommodate both the students who would be more inclined and less inclined to report with a mandatory reporting policy.") (internal citations omitted).

[151] Margaret Garvin & Douglas E. Beloof, Crime Victim Agency: Independent Lawyers for Sexual Assault Victims, 13 OHIO ST. J. OF CRIM. LAW 67, 69-70 (2015) (explaining that "autonomy" has come to mean "the capacity of an individual for self-governance combined with the actual condition of self-governance in an absolute state of freedom to choose unconstrained by external influence" and the related concept of "agency" has emerged to mean "self-definition" ("fundamental determination of how one conceives of oneself both as an individual and as a community member") and "self-direction" ("the charting of one's direction in life")) (internal citations omitted); id. at 71-72 (agency "is critically important for crime victims. Research reveals that for some victims who interact with the criminal justice system, participation is beneficial. It can allow them to experience improvement in depression and quality of life, provide a sense of safety and protection, and validate the harm done by the offender. For other victims, interaction with the criminal justice system leads to a harm beyond that of the original crime, a harm that is often referred to as 'secondary victimization' and which is recognized to have significant negative impacts on victims. . . . A significant part of what accounts for the difference in experience is whether victims have the ability to meaningfully choose whether, when, how, and to what extent to meaningfully participate in the system and exercise their rights. In short, the difference in experience is explained by the existence – or lack of – agency.") (internal citations omitted).

alleged victims control over how official systems respond to an alleged victim,[152] and offering clear options to alleged victims[153] are critical aspects of helping an alleged victim recover from sexual

---

[152] E.g., Patricia A. Frazier et al., Coping Strategies as Mediators of the Relations Among Perceived Control and Distress in Sexual Assault Survivors, 52 JOURNAL OF COUNSELING PSYCHOL. 3 (2005) (control over the recovery process was associated with less emotional distress for sexual assault victims, partly because that kind of "present control" was associated with less social withdrawal and more cognitive restructuring.); Ryan M. Walsh & Steven E. Bruce, The Relationships Between Perceived Levels of Control, Psychological Distress, and Legal System Variables in a Sample of Sexual Assault Survivors, 17 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 603, 611 (2011) (finding that "a perception by victims that they are in control of their recovery process" is an "important factor" reducing post-traumatic stress and depression).

[153] E.g., Nancy Chi Cantalupo, For the Title IX Civil Rights Movement: Congratulations and Cautions, 125 YALE J. OF L. & FEMINISM. 281, 291 (2016) (arguing against State law proposals that would require mandatory referral to law enforcement of campus sexual assault incidents in part because such laws would limit "the number and diversity of reporting options that victims can use"); Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 117 (2017) ("Schools expose survivors to harm when they turn a disclosure into either an involuntary report to law enforcement or an involuntary report to the Title IX office.").

harassment. Unsupportive institutional responses increase the effects of trauma on complainants,[154] and institutional betrayal may occur when an institution's mandatory reporting policies require a complainant's intended private conversation about sexual assault to result in a report to the Title IX Coordinator.[155]

[154] Lindsey L. Monteith et al., Perceptions of Institutional Betrayal Predict Suicidal Self-Directed Violence Among Veterans Exposed to Military Sexual Trauma, 72 J. OF CLINICAL PSYCHOL. 743, 750 (2016); see also Rebecca Campbell et al., An Ecological Model of the Impact of Sexual Assault on Women's Mental Health, 10 TRAUMA, VIOLENCE & ABUSE 225, 234 (2009) (survivors of sexual violence already feel powerless, and policies that increase a survivor's lack of power over their situation contribute to the trauma they have already experienced).

Throughout these final regulations the Department aims to respect the autonomy of complainants and to recognize the importance of a complainant retaining as much control as possible over their own circumstances following a sexual

---

[155] Merle H. Weiner, Legal Counsel for Survivors of Campus Sexual Violence, 29 YALE J. OF L. & FEMINISM 123, 140-141 (2017) (identifying one type of institutional betrayal as the harm that occurs when "the survivor thinks she is speaking to a confidential resource, but then finds out the advocate cannot keep their conversations private"); Michael A. Rodriguez, Mandatory Reporting Does Not Guarantee Safety, 173 W. J. OF MED. 225, 225 (2000) (mandatory reporting by doctors of patient intimate partner abuse may negatively impact victims by making them less likely to seek medical care and compromising the patient's autonomy).

harassment experience, while also ensuring that complainants have clear information about how to access the supportive measures a recipient has available (and how to file a formal complaint initiating a grievance process against a respondent if the complainant chooses to do so) if and when the complainant desires for a recipient to respond to the complainant's situation.[156] The Department recognizes the complexity involved in determining best practices with respect to which employees of postsecondary institutions should be mandatory reporters versus which employees of postsecondary institutions should remain resources in whom students may confide without automatically triggering a report of the student's sexual harassment situation to the Title IX Coordinator or other college or university officials.[157]

[156] Section 106.44(a) (describing a recipient's general response obligations).

Through the actual knowledge condition as defined and applied in these final regulations, the Department intends to ensure that every complainant in a postsecondary institution knows that if or when the complainant desires for the recipient to respond to a sexual harassment experience (by offering supportive measures, by investigating allegations, or both), the complainant has clear, accessible channels by which to report and/or file a formal complaint.[158] The Department also intends to leave postsecondary institutions wide discretion to craft and implement the [158] Section 106.8(a) (requiring recipients to notify students, employees, and others of the contact information for their Title IX Coordinators and stating that any person may report sexual harassment by using that contact information, and that reports can be made during non-business hours by mail to the listed office address or by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address); § 106.8(b) (requiring a recipient to post the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on the recipient's website); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint" and providing that any complainant may file a formal complaint by using the e-mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator, or by any additional method designated by the recipient).

---

[157] E.g., Merle H. Weiner, A Principled and Legal Approach to Title IX Reporting, 85 TENN. L. REV. 71, 188 (2017) ("The classification of employees as [mandatory] reporters should include those who students expect to have the authority to redress the violence or the obligation to report it, and should exclude those who students turn to for support instead of for reporting. Faculty should not be designated reporters, but high-level administrators should be. Schools should carefully consider how to classify employees who are resident assistants, campus police, coaches, campus security authorities, and employment supervisors. A well-crafted policy will be the product of thoughtful conversations about online reporting, anonymous reporting, third-party reports, and necessary exceptions for situations involving minors and imminent risks of serious harm.").

recipient's own employee reporting policy to decide (as to employees who are not the Title IX Coordinator and not officials with authority) which employees are mandatory reporters (i.e., employees who must report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator), which employees may listen to a student's or employee's disclosure of sexual harassment without being required to report it to the Title IX

Coordinator, and/or which employees must report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator but only with the complainant's consent. No matter how a college or university designates its employees with respect to mandatory reporting to the Title IX Coordinator, the final regulations ensure that students at postsecondary institutions, as well as employees, are notified of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information and have clear reporting channels, including options accessible even during non-business hours,[159] for reporting sexual harassment in order to trigger the postsecondary institution's response obligations.

As to all recipients, these final regulations provide that the mere ability or obligation to report sexual [159] Section 106.8 (stating that a report of sexual harassment may be made at any time, including during non-business hours, by using the telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator, and requiring recipients to prominently display the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on the recipient's website).

harassment or to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment, or having been trained to do so, does not qualify an individual (such as a volunteer parent, or alumnus) as an official with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient.[160] The Department does not wish to discourage recipients from training individuals who interact with the recipient's students about how to report sexual harassment, including informing students about how to report sexual harassment. Accordingly, the Department will not assume that a person is an official with authority solely based on the fact that the person has received training on how to report sexual harassment or has the ability or obligation to report sexual harassment. Similarly, the Department will not conclude that volunteers and independent contractors are officials with authority, unless the recipient has granted the volunteers or independent contractors authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient.

[160] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge").

Deliberate Indifference

Once a recipient is charged with actual knowledge of sexual harassment in its education program or activity, it becomes necessary to evaluate the recipient's response. Although the Department is not required to adopt the deliberate indifference standard articulated in the Gebser/Davis framework, we believe that deliberate indifference, with adaptions for administrative enforcement, constitutes the best policy approach to further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.

As the Supreme Court explained in Davis, a recipient acts with deliberate indifference only when it responds to sexual harassment in a manner that is "clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances"[161] because for a recipient with actual knowledge to respond in a clearly unreasonable manner constitutes the recipient committing intentional discrimination.[162]

---

[161] Davis, 526 U.S. at 648-49.
[162] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290 (deliberate indifference ensures that the recipient is liable for "its own official decision" to permit discrimination).

The deliberate indifference standard under the Gebser/Davis framework is the starting point under these final regulations, so that the Department's regulations clearly prohibit instances when the recipient chooses to permit discrimination. The Department tailors this standard for administrative enforcement, to hold recipients accountable for responding meaningfully every time the recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment through a general obligation to not act clearly unreasonably in light of the known circumstances, and specific obligations that each recipient must meet as part of its response to sexual harassment.

Based on consideration of the text and purpose of Title IX, the reasoning underlying the Supreme Court's decisions in Gebser and Davis, and more than 124,000 public comments on the proposed regulations, the Department adopts, but adapts, the deliberate indifference standard in a manner that imposes mandatory, specific obligations on recipients that are not required under the Gebser/Davis framework. The Department developed these requirements in response to commenters' concerns that the standard of deliberate indifference gives recipients too much leeway in responding to sexual harassment, and in response to commenters who requested greater clarity about how the Department will apply the deliberate indifference standard.

The Department revises § 106.44(a) to specify that a recipient's response: must be prompt; must consist of offering supportive measures to a complainant;[163] must ensure that the Title IX Coordinator contacts each complainant (i.e., person who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) to discuss supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the [163] Under § 106.44(a) the recipient must respond in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, and under § 106.30 defining "supportive measures," the Title IX Coordinator is responsible for the effective implementation of supportive measures. Thus, a recipient must provide supportive measures (that meet the definition in § 106.30) unless, for example, a complainant does not wish to receive supportive measures. Under § 106.45(b)(10) a recipient must document the reasons why the recipient's response was not deliberately indifferent and specifically, if a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, the recipient must document the reasons why such a response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances.

filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. This mandatory, proactive, and interactive process helps ensure that complainants receive the response that will most effectively address the complainant's needs in each circumstance. Additionally, revised § 106.44(a) specifies that the recipient's response must treat complainants and respondents equitably, meaning that for a complainant, the recipient must offer supportive measures, and for a respondent, the recipient must follow a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before imposing disciplinary sanctions. If a respondent is found to be responsible for sexual harassment, the recipient must effectively implement remedies for the complainant, designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal educational access, and may impose disciplinary sanctions on the respondent.[164] These final regulations thus hold recipients accountable for responses to sexual harassment designed to protect complainants' equal educational access, and provide due process protections to both parties before restricting a respondent's educational access. By using a deliberate indifference standard to evaluate a recipient's selection of supportive measures and remedies, and refraining from second guessing a recipient's disciplinary decisions, these final regulations leave recipients legitimate and necessary flexibility to make decisions regarding the supportive measures, remedies, and discipline that best address each sexual harassment incident. Sexual harassment allegations present context-driven, fact-specific, needs and concerns for each complainant, and like the Supreme Court, the Department believes that recipients have unique knowledge of their own educational environment and student body, and are best positioned to make decisions about which supportive measures and remedies meet each complainant's need to restore or preserve the right to equal access to education, and which disciplinary sanctions are appropriate against a respondent who is found responsible for sexual harassment.

[164] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i); see also Brian Bardwell, No One is an Inappropriate Person: The Mistaken Application of Gebser's "Appropriate Person" Test to Title IX Peer-Harassment Cases, 68 CASE W. RES. L. REV. 1343, 1364-65 (2018) ("Title IX certainly does not suggest that offenders should not be punished for creating a hostile environment, but its implementation has consistently focused more heavily on taking actions on behalf of the students whom that environment has denied the benefit of their education."). The Department's focus in these final regulations is on ensuring that recipients take action to restore and preserve a complainant's equal educational access, leaving recipients discretion to make disciplinary decisions when a respondent is found responsible.

The Department's guidance set forth a liability standard more like reasonableness, or even strict liability,[165] instead of deliberate indifference, to

---

[165] 2001 Guidance at iv, vi (in response to public comment concerned that requiring an "effective" response by the school, with respect to stopping and preventing recurrence of harassment, meant a school would have to be "omniscient," the 2001 Guidance in its preamble insisted that "Effectiveness is measured based on a reasonableness standard. Schools do not have to know beforehand that their response will be effective."). Nonetheless, the 2001 Guidance stated the liability standard as requiring "effective corrective actions to stop the harassment [and] prevent its recurrence," which ostensibly holds a recipient strictly liable to "stop" and "prevent" sexual harassment. 2001 Guidance at 10, 12. Whether or not the liability standard set forth in Department guidance is characterized as one of "reasonableness" or "strict liability," in these final regulations the Department desires to utilize a "not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances" liability standard (i.e., deliberate indifference) as the general standard for a school's response, so that schools must comply with all the specific requirements set forth in these final regulations, and a school's actions with respect to matters that are not specifically set forth are measured under a liability standard that preserves the discretion of schools to take into account the unique factual circumstances of sexual harassment situations that affect a school's students and employees.

evaluate a recipient's response to sexual harassment. The 2001 Guidance, withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, and 2017 Q&A, took the position that a recipient's response to sexual harassment must effectively stop harassment and prevent its recurrence.[166] The Department's guidance did not distinguish between an [166] 2001 Guidance at 15 (stating recipients "should take immediate and appropriate steps to investigate or otherwise determine what occurred and take prompt and effective steps reasonably calculated to end any harassment, eliminate a hostile environment if one has been created, and prevent harassment from occurring again"); id. at 10 ("Schools are responsible for taking prompt and effective action to stop the harassment and prevent its recurrence."); id. at 12 (a recipient "is responsible for taking immediate effective action to eliminate the hostile environment and prevent its recurrence."); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4 (recipients must "take immediate action to eliminate the harassment [and] prevent its recurrence"); 2017 Q&A at 3 (referencing the 2001 Guidance's approach to preventing recurrence of sexual misconduct).

---

“investigation” to determine how to appropriately respond to the complainant (for instance, by providing supportive measures) and an investigation for the purpose of potentially punishing a respondent.[167] Similarly, the 2001 Guidance, withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, and 2017 Q&A used the phrases “interim measures" or "interim steps" to describe measures to help a complainant maintain equal educational access.[168] However, unlike these final regulations' definition of "supportive measures" in § 106.30, the Department guidance implied that such measures

[167] 2001 Guidance at 15 (“Regardless of whether the student who was harassed, or his or her parent, decides to file a formal complaint or otherwise request action on the student’s behalf . . . the school must promptly investigate to determine what occurred and then take appropriate steps to resolve the situation. The specific steps in an investigation will vary depending upon the nature of the allegations, the source of the complaint, the age of the student or students involved, the size and administrative structure of the school, and other factors. However, in all cases the inquiry must be prompt, thorough, and impartial.”); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4-5.

[168] Compare § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" as individualized services provided to a complainant or respondent that are non-punitive, non-disciplinary, and do not unreasonably burden the other party yet are designed to restore or preserve a person's equal access to education) with 2001 Guidance at 16 ("It may be appropriate for a school to take interim measures during the investigation of a complaint. For instance, if a student alleges that he or she has been sexually assaulted by another student, the school may decide to place the students immediately in separate classes or in different housing arrangements on a campus, pending the results of the school's investigation) (emphasis added). 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 16 ("Title IX requires a school to take steps to protect the complainant as necessary, including taking interim steps before the final outcome of the investigation. . . . The school should notify the complainant of his or her options to avoid contact with the alleged perpetrator and allow students to change academic or living situations as appropriate.") (emphasis added); 2017 Q&A at 2-3 ("It may be appropriate for a school to take interim measures during the investigation of a complaint" and insisting that schools not make such measures available only to one party) (emphasis added). Describing such individualized services in § 106.30 as "supportive measures" rather than as "interim" measures or "interim" steps reinforces that supportive measures must be offered to a complainant whether or not a grievance process is pending, and reinforces that the final regulations authorize initiation of a grievance process only where the complainant has filed, or the Title IX Coordinator has signed, a formal complaint. § 106.44(a); § 106.44(b)(1); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint").

were only available during the pendency of an investigation (i.e., during an "interim" period), did not mandate offering supportive measures, did not clarify whether respondents also may receive supportive measures,[169] and did not specify that supportive measures should not be punitive, disciplinary, or unreasonably burden the other party. The Department's guidance recommended remedies for victims[170] and disciplinary sanctions against harassers[171] but did not specify that remedies are mandatory for complainants, and disciplinary sanctions cannot be imposed on a respondent without following a fair investigation and adjudication process,

[169] See, e.g., 2017 Q&A at 3 (providing that schools must not make interim measures available only to one party).

---

[170] 2001 Guidance at 10 ("The recipient is, therefore, also responsible for remedying any effects of the harassment on the victim, as well as for ending the harassment and preventing its recurrence. This is true whether or not the recipient has 'notice' of the harassment."); id. at 16-17. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter took a similar approach, requiring schools to "take immediate action to eliminate the harassment, prevent its recurrence, and address its effects." 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4; see also id. at 15 ("effective corrective action may require remedies for the complainant").

[171] See 2001 Guidance at 16 ("Appropriate steps should be taken to end the harassment. For example, school personnel may need to counsel, warn, or take disciplinary action against the harasser, based on the severity of the harassment or any record of prior incidents or both."); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 15 (addressing sexual harassment may necessitate "counseling or taking disciplinary action against the harasser"); 2017 Q&A at 6 ("Disciplinary sanction decisions must be made for the purpose of deciding how best to enforce the school's code of student conduct while considering the impact of separating a student from her or his education. Any disciplinary decision must be made as a proportionate response to the violation.").

thereby lacking clarity as to whether interim punitive or disciplinary action is appropriate. These final regulations clarify that supportive measures cannot be punitive or disciplinary against any party and that disciplinary sanctions cannot be imposed against a respondent unless the recipient follows a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.[172] The Department's guidance instructed

[172] Section 106.30 (defining "supportive measures"); § 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(1).

recipients to investigate even when the complainant did not want the recipient to investigate,[173] and directed recipients to honor a complainant's request for the complainant's identity to remain undisclosed from the respondent, unless a public institution owed constitutional due process obligations that would require that the respondent

[173] 2001 Guidance at 15 ("Regardless of whether the student who was harassed, or his or her parent, decides to file a formal complaint or otherwise request action on the student's behalf (including in cases involving direct observation by a responsible employee), the school must promptly investigate to determine what occurred and then take appropriate steps to resolve the situation."); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4.

know the complainant's identity.[174] These final regulations obligate a recipient to initiate a grievance process when a complainant files, or a Title IX Coordinator signs, a formal complaint,[175] so that the Title IX Coordinator takes into account the wishes of a

[174] 2001 Guidance at 17-18 (if the complainant desires that the complainant's identity not be disclosed to the alleged harasser, but constitutional due process owed by a public school means that "the alleged harasser could not respond to the charges of sexual harassment without that information" then "in evaluating the school's response, OCR would not expect disciplinary action against an alleged harasser."); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 5 ("If the complainant requests confidentiality or asks that the complaint not be pursued, the school should take all reasonable steps to investigate and respond to the complaint consistent with the request for confidentiality or request not to pursue an investigation. If a complainant insists that his or her name or other identifiable information not be disclosed to the alleged perpetrator, the school should inform the complainant that its ability to respond may be limited" if due process owed by a public institution requires disclosure of the complainant's identity to the respondent.); 2014 Q&A at 21-22 ("When weighing a student's request for confidentiality that could preclude a meaningful investigation or potential discipline of the alleged perpetrator, a school should consider a range of factors. . . . A school should take requests for confidentiality seriously, while at the same time considering its responsibility to provide a safe and nondiscriminatory environment for all students, including the student who reported the sexual violence.").

[175] Section 106.44(b)(1); § 106.45(b)(3)(i); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint").

complainant and only initiates a grievance process against the complainant's wishes if doing so is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. Unlike the Department's guidance, these final regulations prescribe that the only recipient official who is authorized to initiate a grievance process against a respondent is the Title IX Coordinator (by signing a formal complaint). As discussed in the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, the Department believes this restriction will better ensure that a complainant's desire not to be involved in a grievance process or desire to keep the complainant's identity undisclosed to the respondent will be overridden only by a trained individual (i.e., the Title IX Coordinator) and only when specific circumstances justify that action. These final regulations clarify that the recipient's decision not to investigate when the complainant does not wish to file a formal complaint will be evaluated by the Department under the deliberate indifference standard; that is, whether that decision was clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances.[176] Similarly, a Title IX Coordinator's decision to sign a formal complaint initiating a grievance process against the complainant's wishes[177] also will be considered under the deliberate indifference standard. At the same time, these final regulations ensure that a recipient must offer supportive measures to a complainant, regardless of whether the complainant decides to

[176] Section 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(10)(ii) (requiring a recipient to document its reasons why it believes its response to a sexual harassment incident was not deliberately indifferent).

---

[177] Complainants may not wish for a recipient to investigate allegations for a number of legitimate reasons. The Department understands that a recipient may, under some circumstances, reach the conclusion that initiating a grievance process when a complainant does not wish to participate is necessary, but endeavors through these final regulations to respect a complainant's autonomy with respect to how a recipient responds to a complainant's individual situation by, for example, requiring such a conclusion to be reached by the specially trained Title IX Coordinator (whose obligations include having communicated with the complainant about the complainant's wishes) and requiring the recipient to document the reasons why the recipient believes that its response was not deliberately indifferent. § 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(10).

file, or the Title IX Coordinator decides to sign, a formal complaint.[178] With or without a grievance process that determines a respondent's responsibility, these final regulations require a recipient to offer supportive measures to a complainant, tailored to each complainant's unique circumstances,[179] similar to the

[178] Section 106.44(a).
[179] Section 106.44(a) (requiring the recipient to offer supportive measures to a complainant, and requiring the Title IX Coordinator to discuss supportive measures with a complainant and consider the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures); § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" as "individualized services").

Department's 2001 Guidance that directed a recipient to take timely, age-appropriate action, "tailored to the specific situation" with respect to providing "interim" measures to help a complainant.[180] These final regulations, however, clarify that supportive measures must be offered not only in an "interim" period during an investigation, but regardless of whether an investigation is pending or ever occurs. While the Department's guidance did not address emergency situations arising out of sexual harassment allegations, these final regulations expressly authorize recipients to remove a respondent from the recipient's education programs or activities on an emergency basis, with or without a grievance process pending, as long as post-deprivation notice and opportunity to challenge the removal is given to the respondent.[181] A recipient's decision to initiate an emergency removal will also be evaluated under the deliberate indifference standard.

[180] 2001 Guidance at 16.

These final regulations impose specific requirements on recipients responding to sexual harassment, and failure to comply constitutes a violation of these Title IX regulations and,

---

[181] Section 106.44(c).

potentially, discrimination under Title IX. In addition to the specific requirements imposed by these final regulations, all other aspects of a recipient's response to sexual harassment are evaluated by what was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances.[182] Recipients must also document their reasons why each response to sexual [182] Section 106.44(b)(2) (providing that recipient responses to sexual harassment must be non-deliberately indifferent, meaning not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, and must comply with all the specific requirements in § 106.44(a), regardless of whether a formal complaint is ever filed).

harassment was not deliberately indifferent.[183]

In this manner, the Department believes that these final regulations create clear legal obligations that facilitate the Department's robust enforcement of a recipient's Title IX responsibilities. The mandatory obligations imposed on recipients under [183] Section 106.45(b)(10). As revised, this provision states that if a recipient does not provide supportive measures as part of its response to sexual harassment, the recipient specifically must document why that response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances (for example, perhaps the complainant did not want any supportive measures).

these final regulations share the same aim as the Department's guidance (i.e., ensuring that recipients take actions in response to sexual harassment that are reasonably calculated to stop harassment and prevent recurrence of harassment); however, these final regulations do not unrealistically hold recipients responsible where the recipient took all steps required under these final regulations, took other actions that were not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, and a perpetrator of harassment reoffends. Recipients cannot be guarantors that sexual harassment will never occur in education programs or activities,[184] but recipients can and will, under these final regulations, be held accountable for

---

[184] Under the liability standard set forth in Department guidance, recipients were expected to take actions that "stop the harassment and prevent its recurrence." See, e.g., 2001 Guidance at 12. Even if a recipient expelled a respondent, issued a no-trespass order against the respondent, and took all other conceivable measures to try to eliminate and prevent the recurrence of the sexual harassment, under that liability standard the recipient was still responsible for any unforeseen and unexpected recurrence of sexual harassment. The Department believes the preferable way of ensuring that recipients remedy sexual harassment in its education programs or activities is set forth in these final regulations, whereby a recipient must take specified actions, and a recipients' decisions with respect to discretionary actions are evaluated in light of the known circumstances.

responding to sexual harassment in ways designed to ensure complainants' equal access to education without depriving any party of educational access without due process or fundamental fairness.[185]

Additionally, the Department clarifies in § 106.44(a) that the Department may not require a recipient to restrict rights

[185] As discussed in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, implementing remedies and sanctions without due process protections sometimes resulted in the denial of another party's equal access to the recipient's education programs or activities because the other party was not afforded notice and a meaningful opportunity to respond to the allegations of sexual harassment.

protected under the U.S. Constitution, including the First Amendment, the Fifth Amendment, and the Fourteenth Amendment, to satisfy the recipient's duty to not be deliberately indifferent under this part. This language incorporates principles articulated in the 2001 Guidance[186] and mirrors § 106.6(d) in the NPRM, which remains the same in these final regulations and states that nothing in Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations, which includes these final regulations, requires a recipient to restrict rights protected under the U.S. Constitution. With this revision in § 106.44(a) the Department reinforces the premise of § 106.6(d), cautioning recipients not to view restrictions of constitutional rights as a means of satisfying the duty not to be deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment under Title IX.

---

[186] 2001 Guidance at 22.

Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process

As discussed above in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Supreme Court has held that sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination under Title IX, and that a recipient commits intentional sex discrimination when the recipient knows of conduct that could constitute actionable sexual harassment and responds in a manner that is deliberately indifferent.[187] However, the Supreme Court's Title IX cases have not specified conditions under which a recipient must initiate disciplinary proceedings against a person accused of sexual harassment,

---

[187] See the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble.

or what procedures must apply in any such disciplinary proceedings, as part of a recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response to sexual harassment.[188] Similarly, the Supreme Court has not addressed procedures that a recipient must use in a disciplinary proceeding resolving sexual harassment allegations

---

[188] See, e.g., Davis, 526 U.S. at 654 (holding that plaintiff's complaint should not be dismissed as a matter of law because plaintiff "may be able to show both actual knowledge and deliberate indifference on the part of the Board, which made no effort whatsoever either to investigate or to put an end to the harassment" without indication as to whether an investigation was required, or what due process procedures must be applied during such an investigation); see also Grayson Sang Walker, The Evolution and Limits of Title IX Doctrine on Peer Sexual Assault, 45 HARV. C.R.-C.L. L. REV. 95, fn. 139 (2010) ("Davis was silent on the scope, thoroughness, and timeliness of any investigation that a school may undertake and the procedures that should apply at a grievance hearing. To the extent that Davis can be interpreted as a call for some type of investigation and adjudication of sexual harassment complaints, the instruction represents the triumph of form over substance.").

under Title IX in order to meet constitutional due process of law requirements (for recipients who are State actors), or requirements of fundamental fairness (for recipients who are not State actors).

At the time initial regulations implementing Title IX were issued by HEW in 1975, the Federal courts had not yet addressed recipients' Title IX obligations to address sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination; thus, the equitable grievance procedures required in the 1975 rule did not contemplate the unique circumstances that sexual harassment allegations present, where through an equitable grievance process a recipient often must weigh competing narratives about a particular incident between two (or more) individuals and arrive at a factual determination in order to then decide whether, or what kind of, actions are appropriate to ensure that no person is denied educational opportunities on the basis of sex.

The Department's guidance since 1997 has acknowledged that recipients have an obligation to respond to sexual harassment that constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX by applying the "prompt and equitable" grievance procedures in place for resolution of complaints of sex discrimination required under the Department's regulations.[189] With respect to what constitutes equitable grievance procedures, the 2001 Guidance (which revised but largely retained the same recommendations as the 1997 Guidance) interpreted 34 CFR 106.8 (requiring recipients to adopt and publish

[189] 1997 Guidance ("Schools are required by the Title IX regulations to have grievance procedures through which students can complain of alleged sex discrimination, including sexual harassment."); 2001 Guidance at 19; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 6; 2017 Q&A at 3; 34 CFR 106.8(b) ("A recipient shall adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for prompt and equitable resolution of student and employee complaints alleging any action which would be prohibited by this part.").

equitable grievance procedures) to mean procedures that provide for: "Adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints [of sexual harassment], including the opportunity to present witnesses and other evidence."[190] The 2001 Guidance

[190] 2001 Guidance at 20 (also specifying that equitable grievance procedures must provide for "[d]esignated and reasonably prompt time frames for the major stages of the complaint process" and "[n]otice to the parties of the outcome of the complaint"); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 8 ("Any procedures used to adjudicate complaints of sexual harassment or sexual violence, including disciplinary procedures, however, must meet the Title IX requirement of affording a complainant a prompt and equitable resolution."); id. at 9-10 (citing to the 2001 Guidance for the requirements that equitable grievance procedures must include "[a]dequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints, including the opportunity for both parties to present witnesses and other evidence," "[d]esignated and reasonably prompt time frames for the major stages of the complaint process," and "[n]otice to parties of the outcome of the complaint" and unlike the 2001 Guidance, which was silent on what standard of evidence to apply, the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter took the position that recipients must use only the preponderance of the evidence standard for sexual harassment complaints); id. at 11, fn. 29 (adding that in an equitable grievance process "[t]he complainant and the alleged perpetrator must be afforded similar and timely access to any information that will be used at the hearing" consistent with FERPA and while protecting privileged information and withholding from the alleged perpetrator information about the complainant's sexual history).

advised, "The specific steps in an investigation will vary depending upon the nature of the allegations, the source of the complaint, the age of the student or students involved, the size and administrative structure of the school, and other factors. However, in all cases the inquiry must be prompt, thorough, and impartial."[191]

---

[191] 2001 Guidance at 15; see also id. at 20 ("Procedures adopted by schools will vary considerably in detail, specificity, and components, reflecting differences in audiences, school sizes and administrative structures, State or local legal requirements, and past experience.") As explained further in the "Similarities and Differences Between the § 106.45 Grievance Process and Department Guidance" subsection below in this section of the preamble, and throughout this preamble, the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and 2017 Q&A took additional positions with respect to procedures that should be part of "prompt and equitable" grievance procedures; however, Department guidance has not set forth specific procedures necessary to ensure that grievance procedures are "adequate, reliable, and impartial" while also complying with due process.

The 2001 Guidance advised: "The rights established under Title IX must be interpreted consistent with any federally guaranteed due process rights involved in a complaint proceeding" and "Procedures that ensure the Title IX rights of the complainant, while at the same time according due process to both parties involved, will lead to sound and supportable decisions."[192] The

[192] 2001 Guidance at 22.

withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter mentioned due process only with respect to recipients that are State actors (i.e., public institutions), implied that due process only benefits respondents, and implied that due process may need to yield to protect complainants: "Public and state-supported schools must provide due process to the alleged perpetrator. However, schools should ensure that steps taken to accord due process rights to the alleged perpetrator do not restrict or unnecessarily delay the Title IX protections for the complainant."[193] The 2017 Q&A did not expressly reference the need for constitutional due process but directed recipients to look to the 2001 Guidance as to matters not addressed in the 2017 Q&A.[194]

---

[193] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 12. The withdrawn 2014 Q&A combined the due process positions of the 2001 Guidance and withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter: "The rights established under Title IX must be interpreted consistently with any federally guaranteed due process rights. Procedures that ensure the Title IX rights of the complainant, while at the same time according any federally guaranteed due process to both parties involved, will lead to sound and supportable decisions. Of course, a school should ensure that steps to accord any due process rights do not restrict or unnecessarily delay the protections provided by Title IX to the complainant." 2014 Q&A at 13.

[194] 2017 Q&A at 1.

These final regulations build on a premise of the 2001 Guidance and withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter – that Title IX cannot be interpreted in a manner that denies any person due process of law under the U.S. Constitution. These final regulations reaffirm the premise expressed in the 2001 Guidance – that due process protections are important for both complainants and respondents, do not exist solely to protect respondents, and result in "sound and supportable" decisions in sexual harassment cases.[195] These final regulations, however, provide recipients with prescribed procedures that ensure that Title IX is enforced consistent with both constitutional due process, and fundamental fairness, so that whether a student attends a public or private institution, the student has the benefit of a consistent, transparent grievance process with strong procedural protections regardless of whether the student is a complainant or respondent.

---

[195] 2001 Guidance at 22.

Neither the 2001 Guidance, nor the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, nor the 2017 Q&A, informed recipients of what procedures might be necessary to ensure that a grievance process is both "adequate, fair, and reliable" and consistent with constitutional due process. While the Department's guidance appropriately and beneficially drew recipients' attention to the need to take sexual harassment seriously under Title IX, the lack of specificity in how to meet Title IX obligations while ensuring due process protections for complainants and respondents,[196] has led to increasing numbers of lawsuits[197] and OCR complaints[198] against recipients since issuance of the now-withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter,

---

[196] E.g., Matthew R. Triplett, Sexual Assault on College Campuses: Seeking the Appropriate Balance Between Due Process and Victim Protection, 62 DUKE L. J. 487, 489-90 (2012) ("Many colleges and universities responded to the April 4, 2011 Dear Colleague Letter . . . by amending their procedures for adjudicating allegations of sexual assault. Meanwhile, the letter itself has sparked a debate about the appropriate balance between protecting victims of assault and ensuring adequate due process for the accused in the context of campus adjudications. . . . [T]he Dear Colleague

---

Letter suffers from a fatally inadequate discussion of the appropriate balance between victim protection and due process. Specifically, the document has raised more questions than it has answered, leaving the interests of both victims and accused students in flux. Because institutions simultaneously face statutory duties to respond properly to victims' claims of assault and constitutional or contractual obligations to provide due process to the accused, better-defined policies . . . are needed. Without such guidance, institutions are left with a choice. They may closely follow the OCR's guidelines on victim protection, thereby risking possible due-process claims from alleged perpetrators, or they may independently attempt to balance victim-protection and due-process interests and risk Title IX violations for inadequate victim protection. Under either approach, institutions face potential liability, and both victims and alleged perpetrators may be insufficiently protected.") (internal citations omitted); Sara Ganim & Nelli Black, An Imperfect Process: How Campuses Deal with Sexual Assault, CNN.com (Dec. 21, 2015) (Alison Kiss, then-leader of the Clery Center for Security on Campus explained that "schools were so eager to reverse years of mistreatment of victims . . . that some put procedures into place that led to an unfair process." Kiss stated: "We want to see [college sexual assault disciplinary hearings] informed by trauma, and understand the dynamics that some of these crimes have. But they certainly have to be a hearing that's fair and that's impartial."); Emily D. Safko, Are Campus Sexual Assault Tribunals Fair?: The Need for Judicial Review and Additional Due Process Protections in Light of New Case Law, 84 FORDHAM L. REV. 2289, 2293 (2016) (observing that prior to Federal policy calling attention to campus sexual assault, "[m]any have argued that schools have systematically failed to hold students accountable for their actions. These shortcomings, coupled with the prevalence of sexual misconduct on college campuses, provoked national debate and spurred colleges, Congress, and the White House to act. Colleges have begun to reform their policies, especially in light of an April 2011 'Dear Colleague' letter addressed to all Title IX institutions from [OCR]. Over time, however, these reforms have drawn criticism for 'overcorrecting' the problem by overlooking the important and legally mandated protection of the interests and rights of those accused of misconduct.") (internal citations omitted).

[197] E.g., Taylor Mooney, How Betsy DeVos plans to change the rules for handling sexual misconduct on campus, CBS NEWS (Nov. 24, 2019) ("Prior to 2011, the number of lawsuits filed against universities for failing to provide due process in Title IX cases averaged one per year. It is expected there will be over 100 such lawsuits filed in 2019 alone.").

[198] E.g., Chronicle of Higher Education, Title IX: Tracking Sexual Assault Investigations (graph showing significant increase in number OCR Title IX investigations following the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter).

alleging that recipients have mishandled Title IX sexual harassment cases resulting in injustice for complainants and for respondents. Public debates have emerged questioning whether recipients should leave criminal matters like sexual assault to the criminal justice system,[199] or whether Title IX requires

---

[199] E.g., Sarah L. Swan, Between Title IX and the Criminal Law: Bringing Tort Law to the Campus Sexual Assault Debate, 64 UNIV. KAN. L. REV. 963, 963 (2016) ("In a recent televised debate, four law professors partnered up to argue for, or against, the following proposition: 'Courts, not campuses, should decide sexual assault cases.' Their staged debate reflected the heated discussion occurring in society more broadly over the most appropriate forum and method for addressing campus sexual assault. As campus sexual assault has finally ascended to the status of a national concern, attracting the attention of even the White House, two main camps have emerged: those who believe campus sexual assault is a crime, and thus best dealt with in the criminal courts, using criminal law tools; and those who believe campus sexual assault is a civil rights violation, and thus best dealt with through university disciplinary proceedings, using Title IX.") (internal citation omitted); Alexandra Brodsky, Against Taking Rape "Seriously": The Case Against Mandatory Referral Laws for Campus Gender Violence, 53 HARV. C.R.-C.L. L. REV. 131, 131 (2018) (analyzing State laws proposed in recent years that would mandate referral of campus sexual assault incidents to law enforcement and arguing that mandatory referral laws would decrease victim well-being and reduce the already-low number of victims willing to report sexual assault to campus Title IX offices).

recipients to "do both" – respond meaningfully to allegations of sexual harassment (including sexual assault) on campuses, while also providing due process protections for both parties.[200] The Department believes that recipients

---

[200] E.g., Association of Title IX Administrators (ATIXA), ATIXA Position Statement: Why Colleges Are in the Business of Addressing Sexual Violence 3-4 (Feb. 17, 2017) (noting that instances of recipients' failure to provide due process has led to public debate over whether Title IX should even cover criminal conduct such as sexual assault; observing that courts have recently begun doing a good job "scolding" recipients who do not provide due process and that OCR cases have included reprimanding recipients who failed to provide due process to the accused; and opining that "Some are genuinely concerned that colleges don't afford adequate due process to accused students. ATIXA shares these due process concerns. Unlike Title IX opponents however, we do not view this as a zero sum game, where providing for the needs of victims/survivors must inherently compromise the rights that attach to those who are accused of sexual violence. In fact, colleges must do both, and must do both better."); Erin E. Buzuvis, Title IX and Procedural Fairness: Why Disciplined-Student Litigation Does Not Undermine the Role of Title IX in Campus Sexual Assault, 78 MONT. L. REV. 71, 71-72 (2017) ("In the last five years, the Department of Education has increased its efforts to enforce [Title IX], both resulting from and contributing to increased public attention to the widespread problem of sexual assault among students, particularly in higher education. The increase in both enforcement and public attention has motivated colleges and universities to improve their policies and practices for addressing sexual assault, including their disciplinary processes. . . . In some cases, disciplined-student plaintiffs have prevailed in overturning their punishment, causing many to suggest that colleges and universities are 'overcorrecting' for earlier deficiencies in their procedures that lead to under-enforcement of campus policies banning sexual misconduct. Much of this rhetoric places blame on Title IX for universities' problems with compliance and calls, either implicitly or expressly, for repeal of Title IX's application to sexual assault.") (internal citations omitted).

can and must "do both," because sexual harassment impedes the equal educational access that Title IX is designed to protect and because no person's constitutional rights or right to fundamental fairness should be denied. These final regulations help recipients achieve both.

Beginning in mid-2017 when the Department started to examine how schools, colleges, and universities were applying Title IX to sexual harassment under then-applicable guidance (e.g., the 2001 Guidance and the now-withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter), one of the themes brought to the Department's attention during listening sessions and discussions with stakeholders[201] was that, in the absence of regulations explaining what fair, equitable [201] The Department met with stakeholders expressing a variety of positions for and against the then-applicable Department guidance documents, including advocates for survivors of sexual violence; advocates for accused students; organizations representing schools and colleges; attorneys representing survivors, the accused, and institutions; Title IX Coordinators and other school and college administrators; child and sex abuse prosecutors; scholars and experts in law, psychology, and neuroscience; and numerous individuals who have experienced school-level Title IX proceedings as a complainant or respondent.

procedures compliant with constitutional due process consist of, recipients have interpreted and applied the concept of equitable grievance procedures in the sexual harassment context unevenly across schools, colleges, and universities, at times employing procedures incompatible with constitutionally guaranteed due process[202] and principles of fundamental fairness, and lacking impartiality and reliability.[203] As noted throughout this preamble including in the "Personal Stories" section, commenters described

---

[202] E.g., Blair A. Baker, When Campus Sexual Misconduct Policies Violate Due Process Rights, 26 CORNELL J. OF LAW & PUB. POL'Y 533, 550-51 (2016) ("Since the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, many students have sued their schools for procedural due process violations, alleging they had been found wrongfully responsible for sexual misconduct. In these cases, courts have begun to recognize the precarious factors of various universities' disciplinary procedures when evaluating whether or not a school violated a student's due process rights. As discussed, these factors include, but are not limited to, whether the school provided the student with adequate notice of the charges against him or her, afforded the student the right to confront, and provided the student with a right to counsel.") (internal citations omitted).

[203] E.g., Association of Title IX Administrators (ATIXA), ATIXA Position Statement: Why Colleges Are in the Business of Addressing Sexual Violence 3-4 (Feb. 17, 2017) (acknowledging that due process has been denied in some recipients' Title IX proceedings but insisting that "Title IX isn't the reason why due process is being compromised. . . . Due process is at risk because of the small pockets of administrative corruption . . . and because of the inadequate level of training currently afforded to administrators. College administrators need to know more about sufficient due process protections and how to provide these protections in practice.") (emphasis added). The Department agrees that recipients need to know more about sufficient due process protections and what such protections need to look like in practice, and this belief underlies the Department's approach to the § 106.45 grievance process which prescribes specific procedural features instead of simply directing recipients to provide due process protections, or be fair, for complainants and respondents. Edward N. Stoner II & John Wesley Lowery, Navigating Past the "Spirit Of Insubordination": A Twenty-First Century Model Student Conduct Code With a Model Hearing Script, 31 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 1, 10-11 (2004) (noting that the trend among colleges and universities has been to put into place written student disciplinary codes but, whether an institution is public or private, a "better practice" is to describe in the written disciplinary code exactly what process will be followed rather than making broad statements about "due process" or "fundamental fairness"). The Department agrees that it is more instructive and effective for the Department to describe what procedures a process must follow, rather than leaving recipients to translate broad concepts like "due process" and "fundamental fairness" into Title IX sexual harassment grievance processes, and unlike the NPRM the final regulations do not reference "due process" but rather prescribe specific procedural features that a grievance process must contain and apply.

how grievance procedures applied under the 2001 Guidance and withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter have lacked basic procedural protections for complainants and respondents and have appeared biased for or against complainants, or respondents.[204] The result has been unpredictable Title IX adjudication systems under which

---

[204] As noted in the "Executive Summary" section of this preamble, withdrawal of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and issuance of the 2017 Q&A as interim guidance has not resulted in very many recipients changing their Title IX policies and procedures; thus, the grievance processes that serve as commenters' examples of biased or unfair proceedings are largely processes established in response to the 2001 Guidance or withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, and not in response to the 2017 Q&A. Without the legally binding nature of these final regulations, the Department does not believe that recipients will modify their Title IX policies and procedures in a way that consistently ensures meaningful responses to sexual harassment and protection of due process for complainants and respondents.

complainants and respondents too often have been thrust into inconsistent, biased proceedings that deprive one or both parties of a fair process[205] and have resulted in some determinations regarding responsibility viewed as unjust and unfair to complainants, and other determinations regarding

---

[205] E.g., Diane Heckman, The Assembly Line of Title IX Mishandling Cases Concerning Sexual Violence on College Campuses, 336 WEST'S EDUC. L. REPORTER 619, 631 (2016) (stating that since 2014 "there has been an influx of lawsuits contending post-secondary schools have violated Title IX due to their failure to properly handle sexual assault claims. What is unusual is that both sexes are bringing such Title IX mishandling cases due to lack of or failure to follow proper process and due process from each party's perspective. A staggering number of cases involve incidents of alcohol or drug usage or intoxication triggering the issue of the negating a voluntary consent between the participants.") (internal citations omitted).

responsibility viewed as unjust and unfair to respondents.[206]

Compelling stories of complainants whose allegations of sexual assault go "unheeded by the institutions they attend and whose education suffers as a

---

[206] Examples of college Title IX sexual assault cases applying seemingly flawed and biased processes to reach decisions viewed as unjust, leading to claims that such situations are occurring with regularity across the country to the detriment of complainants and respondents, include: Nicolo Taormina, Not Yet Enough: Why New York's Sexual Assault Law Does Not Provide Enough Protection to Complainants or Defendants, 24 JOURNAL OF L. & POL'Y 595, 595-600 (2016) (detailing the case of a college student where medical evidence showed violent rape of the complainant by multiple respondents yet a college hearing panel reached a determination of non-responsibility in a seemingly biased, non-objective process; arguing that such a story is not unique and that New York's "Enough is Enough" law, as well as Federal Title IX guidance, "lack [] strict requirements" mandating a consistent grievance process and this "can lead to unfairness and injustice."); Cory J. Schoonmaker, An "F" in Due Process: How Colleges Fail When Handling Sexual Assault, 66 SYRACUSE L. REV. 213, 213-15 (2016) (detailing the case of a college student expelled from college after being found responsible following allegations of sexual assault by the respondent's ex-girlfriend, under a seemingly biased, non-objective process and where a criminal grand jury returned a "no charge" decision indicating there was not enough evidence to sustain the complainant's allegations even using a standard lower than preponderance of the evidence; arguing that such a story is not unique and that "campus authorities are not equipped, nor are they capable, of effectively investigating and punishing accusations of sexual assault.").

consequence"[207] and of respondents who have been "found responsible and harshly punished for [sexual assault] in sketchy campus procedures"[208] have led to debate around the issue of how recipients investigate and adjudicate sexual harassment (especially sexual assault) under Title IX, and the "challenge is to find a way to engage the [207] Deborah L. Brakeman, The Trouble With "Bureaucracy," 7 CAL. L. REV. ONLINE 66, 67, 77 (2016) (providing "counterpoints" to the points raised in Jacob E. Gersen & Jeannie Suk Gersen, The Sex Bureaucracy, 104 CALIF. L. REV. 881 (2016), as part of the "productive conversation our nation has been having about campus sexual assault, its pervasiveness, and the balance struck by the public policies addressing it").

---

[208] Id. at 67.

stories from these different perspectives" because "federal regulators and regulated institutions could do better."[209]

The Department believes that the Federal courts' recognition of sexual harassment (including sexual assault) as sex discrimination under Title IX, the Department's guidance advising recipients on how to respond to

---

[209] Id. at 77.

allegations of sexual harassment, and these final regulations, represent critical efforts to promote Title IX's non-discrimination mandate. With respect to grievance procedures (referred to in these final regulations as a "grievance process" recipients must use for responding to formal complaints of sexual harassment), these final regulations build upon the foundation set forth in the Department's guidance, yet provide the additional clarity and instruction missing from the Department's guidance as to how recipients must provide for the needs of complainants, with strong procedural rights that ensure due process protections for both complainants and respondents. These procedural rights reflect the very serious nature of sexual harassment and the life-altering consequences that may follow a determination regarding responsibility for such conduct. We believe that the procedures in the § 106.45 grievance process will ensure that recipients apply a fair, truth-seeking process that furthers the interests of complainants, respondents, and recipients in accurately resolving sexual harassment allegations.[210]

---

[210] E.g., Ashley Hartmann, Reworking Sexual Assault Response on University Campuses: Creating a Rights-Based Empowerment Model to Minimize Institutional Liability, 48 WASH. UNIV. J. OF L. & POL'Y 287, 313 (2015) ("As students file complaints with the Department of Education, bring Title IX suits with increasing frequency, and turn to the media for resolution in the court of public opinion, universities are often forced to prioritize complaints that have the potential to be most costly to the institution. This forced choice is often the result of sexual assault response

The § 106.45 grievance process does not codify current Department guidance but does build upon the principles recommended in guidance, while prescribing specific procedures to be consistently applied by recipients to improve the perception and reality that recipients are reaching determinations regarding responsibility that represent procedures that focus too narrowly on the rights of either the victim or the accused student. Failing to create sexual assault response that respects the rights and needs of both the victim and the accused student has the potential to leave one student feeling powerless. This disenfranchisement opens the university to liability from either perspective, creating a zero-sum game in which university response caters to the student who has more social, political, or economic capital. A reformed process of how universities respond to sexual assault should work to meet the needs of all students while minimizing university liability.") (internal citation omitted).

---

just outcomes. At least one State recently considered codifying the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, and decided instead that an approach much like what these final regulations set forth would be advisable. The Honorable Edmund G. Brown, Jr., former Governor of California, vetoed a California bill in 2017 that would have codified parts of the withdrawn 2011

Dear Colleague Letter, and Governor

Brown's veto statement asserted:

> Sexual harassment and sexual violence are serious and complicated matters for colleges to resolve. On the one side are complainants who come forward to seek justice and protection; on the other side stand accused students, who, guilty or not, must be treated fairly and with the presumption of innocence until the facts speak otherwise. Then, as we know, there are victims who never come forward, and perpetrators who walk free. Justice does not come easily in this environment. . . . [T]houghtful legal minds have increasingly questioned whether federal and state actions to prevent > and redress sexual harassment and assault – well-intentioned as they are – have also unintentionally resulted in some colleges' failure to uphold due process for accused students. Depriving any student of higher education opportunities should not be done lightly, or out of fear of losing state or federal funding.[211]

Governor Brown then convened a task force, or working group, to make recommendations about how California institutions of higher education should address allegations of sexual misconduct. That working group released a memorandum detailing those recommendations,[212] and many of these recommendations are consistent with the approach taken in these final regulations as to how postsecondary institutions should respond to sexual harassment allegations.[213]

[211] Edmund G. Brown, Jr., Governor's Veto Message (Oct. 15, 2017) (responding to California Senate Bill 169).

---

[212] Governor Edmund G. Brown, Jr.'s Working Group to Address Allegations of Student Sexual Misconduct on College and University Campuses in California, Recommendations of the Post-SB 169 Working Group (Nov. 14, 2018) (referred to hereinafter as "Recommendations of the Post-SB 169 Working Group," (Nov. 14, 2018)). The Post-SB 169 Working Group was comprised of three members: a senior administrator and professor at UC Berkeley, an Assistant Dean at UCLA School of Law, and a retired California Supreme Court justice. The Post-SB 169 Working Group spent over a year reviewing California State law, current and prior Federal Title IX guidance, the American Bar Association Task Force recommendations, and legal scholarship on the topic of institutional responses to sexual misconduct before reaching its consensus recommendations.

[213] See id. It is notable that of the 21 separate topics covered by the Post-SB 169 Working Group, 20 of those topics reached recommendations consistent with the provisions in these final regulations. Only one topic reached a

Due Process Principles

Whether due process is conceived in terms of constitutional due process of law owed by State actors, or as principles of fundamental fairness owed by private actors, the final regulations prescribe a grievance process grounded in principles of due process for the benefit of both complainants and recommendation that would be precluded under the final regulations: the Post-SB 169 Working Group recommends that cross-examination at a live hearing occur by the parties submitting questions through the decision-maker(s), while the final regulations, § 106.45(b)(6)(i), require that the parties' advisors conduct the cross-examination. Every other recommendation reached by the Working Group is either required by, or permitted under, these final regulations. For further discussion of live hearings and cross-examination in postsecondary institution adjudications, see the "Hearings" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble.

---

respondents, seeking justice in each sexual harassment situation that arises in a recipient's education program or activity. "Due process describes a procedure that justifies outcome; it provides reasons for asserting that the treatment a person receives is the treatment he [or she] deserves."[214] "Due process is a fundamental constitutional principle in American jurisprudence. It appears in criminal law, civil law, and administrative law . . . . [D]ue process is a peculiarly American phenomenon: no other legal system has anything quite like it. Due process is a legal principle which has been shaped and developed through the process of applying and interpreting a written constitution."[215] Due process is "a principle which is used to generate a number of specific

---

[214] David Resnick, Due Process and Procedural Justice, Due Process: NOMOS XVIII 214 (J. Pennock & J. Chapman eds., 1977).

---

[215] Id. at 206-207.

rights, procedures, and practices."[216] Due process "may be thought of as a demand that a procedure conform to the requirements of formal justice, and formal justice is a basic feature of our idea of the rule of law."[217] "Research demonstrates that people's views about their outcomes are shaped not solely by how fair or favorable an outcome appears to be but also by the fairness of

---

[216] Id. at 208.
[217] Id. at 209.

the process through which the decision was reached. A fair process provided by a third party leads to higher perceptions of legitimacy; in turn, legitimacy leads to increased compliance with the law."[218] "Fair process" or "procedural justice" increases outcome legitimacy and thus increased compliance because it is likely to lead to an accurate outcome, and sends a signal about an individual's value and worth with respect to society in general.[219] The grievance process prescribed in these final regulations provides a fair process rooted in due process protections that improves the accuracy and legitimacy of the outcome for the benefit of both parties.

---

[218] Rebecca Holland-Blumoff, Fairness Beyond the Adversary System: Procedural Justice Norms for Legal Negotiation, 85 FORDHAM L. REV. 2081, 2084 (2017) (internal citations omitted).

In Rochin v. California,[220] the Supreme Court reasoned that deciding whether proceedings in a particular

---

[219] See id.
[220] 342 U.S. 165 (1952).

context (there, State criminal charges against a defendant) met the constitutional guarantee of due process of law meant ascertaining whether the proceedings "offend those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice . . . even toward those charged with the most heinous offenses."[221] Such "standards of justice are not authoritatively formulated

[221] Id. at 169 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

anywhere as though they were specifics" yet are those standards "so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental" or are "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty."[222] Sexual harassment (defined in these final regulations to include sexual assault) qualifies as one of "the most heinous offenses" that one individual may

---

[222] Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

perpetrate against another. Perpetration of sexual harassment impedes the equal educational access that Title IX was enacted to protect. These final regulations aim to ensure that a determination that a respondent committed sexual harassment is a "sound and supportable"[223] determination so that recipients remedy sexual harassment committed in education programs or activities. Because sexual harassment is a "heinous offense[]," these final regulations rely on and incorporate "standards of justice" fundamental to notions of "decency and fairness"[224] so that recipients, parties, and the public view recipients' determinations regarding responsibility as just and warranted, while recognizing that Title IX

[223] See 2001 Guidance at 22.

[224] Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 169 (1952). As discussed throughout this preamble, due process of law is not confined to the criminal law context; due process of law applies in civil and administrative proceedings as well, even though the precise procedures that are due differ outside the criminal context.

grievance processes are not criminal proceedings and the constitutional protections granted to criminal defendants do not apply.[225]

The Department, as an agency of the Federal government, is subject to the U.S. Constitution, including the Fifth Amendment, and will not interpret Title IX to compel a recipient, whether public

---

[225] For example, these final regulations do not permit application of the criminal standard of evidence (beyond a reasonable doubt), do not grant respondents a right of self-representation with respect to confronting witnesses, do not grant respondents a right to effective assistance of counsel, and do not purport to protect respondents from "double jeopardy" (i.e., by preventing a complainant from appealing a determination of non-responsibility).

or private, to deprive a person of due process rights.[226] "'Once it is determined that due process applies, the question remains what process is due.'"[227] Procedural due process of law requires at a minimum notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard.[228] Due process "'is not a technical conception with a fixed content unrelated to time, place

---

[226] 83 FR 61480-81; see, e.g., Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U.S. 244 (1963); Truax v. Raich, 239 U.S. 33, 38 (1915); 2001 Guidance at 22 ("The rights established under Title IX must be interpreted consistent with any federally guaranteed due process rights involved in a complaint proceeding").
[227] Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 577 (1975) (quoting Morrissey, 408 U.S. at 481).
[228] Goss, 419 U.S. at 580 ("At the very minimum, therefore, students facing suspension and the consequent interference with a protected property interest must be given some kind of notice and afforded some kind of hearing."); Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 333 (1976).

and circumstances.'"[229] Instead, due process "'is flexible and calls for such procedural protections as the particular situation demands."[230] "The fundamental requirement of due process is the opportunity to be heard 'at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner.'"[231]

The Department recognizes that the Supreme Court has not ruled on what

---

[229] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334 (quoting Cafeteria Workers v. McElroy, 367 U.S. 886, 895 (1961)).
[230] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334 (quoting Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 481 (1972) (internal quotation marks omitted)).
[231] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 333 (quoting Armstrong v. Manzo, 380 U.S. 545, 552 (1965)).

constitutional due process looks like in the "particular situation"[232] of Title IX sexual harassment adjudications, and that Federal appellate courts have taken different approaches to which specific procedures are constitutionally required under the general proposition that due process in the educational discipline context requires some kind of notice and some kind of opportunity to be heard,[233] and for private institutions not subject to constitutional requirements, which specific procedures are required to comport with fundamental fairness.[234] In these final regulations, the Department deliberately declines to adopt wholesale the procedural rules

---

[232] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

---

[233] See Goss, 419 U.S. at 578-79 (holding that in the public school context "the interpretation and application of the Due Process Clause are intensely practical matters" that require at a minimum notice and "opportunity for hearing appropriate to the nature of the case") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); see also, e.g., Doe v. Baum, 903 F.3d 575, 581 (6th Cir. 2018) (holding that where university Title IX sexual misconduct proceeding turned on credibility of parties, the university must provide a hearing with opportunity for parties to cross-examine each other); cf. Haidak v. Univ. of Massachusetts-Amherst, 933 F.3d 56, 70 (1st Cir. 2019) (declining to require the same opportunity for cross-examination as required by the Sixth Circuit but requiring university to conduct "reasonably adequate questioning" designed to ferret out the truth, if the university declined to grant students the right to cross-examine at a hearing); see also, e.g., Doe v. Trustees of Boston Coll., 942 F.3d 527 (1st Cir. 2019) (interpreting State law guarantee of "basic fairness" in a private college's sexual misconduct disciplinary proceeding).

[234] Lisa Tenerowicz, Student Misconduct at Private Colleges and Universities: A Roadmap for "Fundamental Fairness" in Disciplinary Proceedings, 42 BOSTON COLL. L. REV. 653 (2001) ("In the absence of constitutional protections, courts generally have required that private school disciplinary procedures adhere to a 'fundamental' or 'basic' fairness standard and not be arbitrary or capricious. More precisely, state and federal courts have often held that a private school's disciplinary decisions are fundamentally fair if they comport with the rules and procedures that the school itself has promulgated.") (internal citation omitted.)

that govern, for example, Federal civil lawsuits, Federal criminal proceedings, or proceedings before administrative law judges. Understanding that schools, colleges, and universities exist first and foremost to provide educational services to students, are not courts of law, and are not staffed with judges and attorneys or vested with subpoena powers, the standardized Title IX sexual harassment grievance process in §

106.45 contains procedural requirements, rights, and protections that the Department believes are reasonably designed for implementation in the setting of an education program or activity.

While due process of law in some contexts (for example, criminal proceedings) is especially concerned with protecting the rights of accused defendants, the Department views due process protections as a critical part of a Title IX grievance process for the benefit of both complainants and respondents, as well as recipients. Both parties benefit from equal opportunities to participate by putting forward the party's own view of the allegations. Both parties, as well as recipients, benefit from a process geared toward reaching factually accurate outcomes. The § 106.45 grievance process prescribed in the final regulations is consistent with constitutional due process guarantees[235] and conceptions of fundamental fairness,[236] in a manner designed to accomplish the critical goals of ensuring that recipients resolve sexual

---

[235] See Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 583-84 (1975) ("On the other hand, requiring effective notice and informal hearing permitting the student to give his [or her] version of the events will provide a meaningful hedge against erroneous action. At least the disciplinarian will be alerted to the existence of disputes about facts and arguments about cause and effect. He may then determine himself to summon the accuser, permit cross-examination, and allow the student to present his own witnesses. In more difficult cases, he may permit counsel. In any event, his discretion will be more informed and we think the risk of error substantially reduced."); Nicola A. Boothe-Perry, Enforcement of Law Schools' Non-Academic Honor Codes: A Necessary Step Towards Professionalism?, 89 NEB. L. REV. 634, 662-63 (2012) ("Thus, while well-settled that there is no specific procedure required for due process in school disciplinary proceedings, the cases establish the bare minimum requirements of: (1) adequate notice of the charges; (2) reasonable opportunity to prepare for and meet them; (3) an orderly hearing adapted to the nature of the case; and (4) a fair and impartial decision. . . . Where disciplinary measures are imposed pursuant to non-academic reasons (e.g., fraudulent conduct), as opposed to purely academic reasons, the courts are inclined to reverse decisions made by the institutions without these minimal procedural safeguards.") (internal citations omitted).

[236] E.g., Kathryn M. Reardon, Acquaintance Rape at Private Colleges and Universities: Providing for Victims' Educational and Civil Rights, 38 SUFFOLK UNIV. L. REV. 395, 406-07 (2005) ("Courts around the nation have taken a relatively consistent stance on what type of process private colleges and universities owe to their students. . . . Courts expect that schools will adhere to basic concepts of fairness in dealing with students in disciplinary matters. Schools must employ the procedures set out in their own policies, and those policies must not be offensive to fundamental notions of fairness.").

harassment allegations to improve parties' sense of fairness and lead to reliable outcomes, while lessening the risk that sex-based bias will improperly affect outcomes.[237] In the words of the Honorable Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Associate Justice, discussing the #MeToo movement and the search for balance between sex equality and due process, "It's not one or the other. It's both. We have a system of justice where people who are accused get due process, so it's just applying to this field what we have applied generally."[238] The final regulations seek to apply fundamental principles of due process to the "particular situation"[239] of Title IX

[237] For discussion of sex-based bias in Title IX grievance proceedings, the "Section 106.45(a) Treatment of Complainants or Respondents Can Violate Title IX" subsection of the "General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble.

---

[238] Jeffrey Rosen, Ruth Bader Ginsburg Opens Up About #MeToo, Voting Rights, and Millennials, THE ATLANTIC (Feb. 15, 2018) ("Rosen: What about due process for the accused? Ginsburg: Well, that must not be ignored and it goes beyond sexual harassment. The person who is accused has a right to defend herself or himself, and we certainly should not lose sight of that. Recognizing that these are complaints that should be heard. There's been criticism of some college codes of conduct for not giving the accused person a fair opportunity to be heard, and that's one of the basic tenets of our system, as you know, everyone deserves a fair hearing. Rosen: Are some of those criticisms of the college codes valid? Ginsburg: Do I think they are? Yes. Rosen: I think people are hungry for your thoughts about how to balance the values of due process against the need for increased gender equality. Ginsburg: It's not one or the other. It's both. We have a system of justice where people who are accused get due process, so it's just applying to this field what we have applied generally.").

[239] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

sexual harassment allegations. We believe the framework of the § 106.45 grievance process furthers Title IX's non-discrimination mandate consistent with constitutional guarantees of due process of law and conceptions of fundamental fairness.

Precisely because due process is a "flexible" concept dictated by the demands of a "particular situation,"[240]

---

[240] Id.

the Department recognizes, and these final regulations reflect, that due process protections in the "particular situation" of a recipient's response to sexual harassment may dictate different procedures than what might be appropriate in other situations (e.g., the noneducational context of a criminal trial[241] or the administrative context of a government agency's determination of eligibility for public benefits,[242] or the educational context involving allegations of student academic misconduct[243]). Allegations of sexual harassment in an educational environment present unique challenges for the individuals involved, and for the recipient, with respect to how to best

[241] For instance, in the criminal context, the U.S. Constitution imposes specific due process of law requirements that the Supreme Court has not required to be given to defendants in noncriminal matters, such as the right to be provided with effective assistance of counsel, the right to personally confront witnesses, and the right to have guilt determined under a standard of evidence described as "beyond a reasonable doubt." See, e.g., I.N.S. v. Lopez-Mendoza, 468 U.S. 1032, 1038 (1984) ("Consistent with the civil nature of the proceeding, various protections that apply in the context of a criminal trial do not apply in a deportation hearing.").

---

[242] E.g., Mathews, 424 U.S. at 348 ("The ultimate balance [of due process owed] involves a determination as to when, under our constitutional system, judicial-type procedures must be imposed upon administrative action to assure fairness.").

[243] The Supreme Court has distinguished between the level of deference courts should give schools with respect to student discipline resulting from academic misconduct or academic failure, and other types of student misconduct. E.g., Bd. of Curators of the Univ. of Mo. v. Horowitz, 435 U.S. 78, 86 (1978) (stating that the Court will grant greater deference to public schools in decision making in academic, as opposed to disciplinary, dismissals and, would require more stringent procedural requirements in dismissals based upon purely disciplinary matters).

ensure that parties are treated fairly and accurate outcomes result.

Furthermore, due process protections in the "particular situation"[244] of elementary and secondary schools may differ from protections necessitated by the "particular situation" of postsecondary institutions. Thus, some procedural rules in the § 106.45 grievance process

---

[244] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

apply only to postsecondary institution recipients,[245] in recognition that postsecondary institutions present a different situation than elementary and secondary schools because, for instance, most students in elementary and secondary schools tend to be under the age of majority such that certain procedural rights generally cannot be exercised effectively (even by a parent

[245] Section 106.45(b)(6)(i) requires postsecondary institutions to use a live hearing model to adjudicate formal complaints, while § 106.45(b)(6)(ii) does not require elementary or secondary schools to hold any kind of hearing to adjudicate formal complaints.

acting on behalf of a minor[246]). For example, unlike postsecondary institutions, elementary and secondary schools are not required to hold a hearing under these final regulations.[247] The final regulations aim to accomplish the objective of a consistent, predictable Title IX grievance process while respecting the fact that elementary and secondary schools differ from postsecondary institutions.

[246] The final regulations expressly recognize legal rights of parents and guardians to act on behalf of an individual with respect to exercising Title IX rights. § 106.6(g).
[247] Section 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii).

However, the Department does not believe that the public or private status of a recipient, or the size of the recipient's student body, constitutes a different "particular situation"[248] that necessitates or advises different procedural protections. The Department recognizes that some recipients are

[248] Mathews, 424 U.S. at 334 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

State actors with responsibilities to provide due process of law to students and employees under the U.S. Constitution, including the Fourteenth Amendment, while other recipients are private institutions that do not have constitutional obligations to their students and employees. As previously explained, the Department, as an agency of the Federal government, will not interpret or enforce Title IX in a manner that would require any recipient, including a private recipient, to deprive a person of constitutional due process rights.[249] As a matter of policy, the Department cannot justify requiring a different grievance process for complainants and respondents based on whether the recipient is a public or [249] The Department also cannot interpret Title IX to compel a private recipient to deprive a person of their due process rights because the Department, as an agency of the Federal government, is subject to the U.S. Constitution. In Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U.S. 244, 247-48 (1963), the U.S. Supreme Court held that the City of Greenville through an ordinance could not compel a private restaurant to operate in a manner that treated patrons differently on the basis of race in violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Similarly, in Truax v. Raich, 239 U.S. 33, 38 (1915), the Supreme Court held that Arizona cannot use a State statute to compel private entities to employ a specific percentage of native-born Americans as employees in violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Like the City of Greenville and the State of Arizona, the Department cannot compel private schools to comply with Title IX in a manner that would require the private recipient to violate a person's due process rights.

private entity, or based on whether the recipient enrolls a large number or small number of students. Additionally, many private schools owe students and employees fundamental fairness, often recognized by contract and under State laws[250] and while conceptions of fundamental fairness may not always equate to constitutional due process requirements, there is conceptual and practical overlap between the two.[251] Title IX applies to all recipients of Federal financial assistance, whether the recipient is a public or private entity and regardless of the size of the recipient's student body. Fair, reliable procedures that best promote the purposes of Title IX are as important in public schools,

[250] E.g., Doe v. College of Wooster, 243 F. Supp. 3d 875, 890-91 (N.D. Ohio 2017) ("[C]ourts consider whether the disciplinary process afforded by the [private] academic institution was 'conducted with notions of basic fairness'"); Psi Upsilon of Pa. v. Univ. of Pa., 591 A.2d 755, 758 (Pa. 1991) (holding that "disciplinary procedures established by the [private] institution must be fundamentally fair").

---

[251] See Holly Hogan, The Real Choice in a Perceived "Catch-22": Providing Fairness to Both the Accused and Complaining Students in College Sexual Assault Disciplinary Proceedings, 38 JOURNAL OF L. & EDUC. 27 (2009) ("Even when the due process clause does not apply to a private university's disciplinary proceedings, a private university must nevertheless comply with its own procedural rules. . . . Because private higher education institutions often model their disciplinary proceedings on due process requirements, as a practical matter" the same principles apply to both private and public institutions) (internal citations omitted).

colleges, and universities as in private ones, and are as important in large institutions as in small ones. The final regulations therefore prescribe a consistent grievance process for application by all recipients without distinction as to public or private status, or the size of the institution.[252]

The grievance process prescribed in the final regulations is important for

---

[252] As discussed in the "Regulatory Impact Analysis" section of this preamble, the Department considered the impact of these final regulations on small entities, but as a policy matter, does not believe that different procedures should apply based on the size of a recipient's student body or the amount of a recipient's revenues.

effective enforcement of Title IX and is consistent with constitutional due process and conceptions of fundamental fairness. The § 106.45 grievance process is designed for the particular "practical matters"[253] presented by allegations of sexual harassment in the educational context. The Department acknowledges that constitutional due process does not require the specific procedures included in the § 106.45 grievance process. However, the § 106.45 grievance process is consistent with the constitutional requirement to provide notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard, and does so for the benefit of complainants and respondents, to address policy considerations unique to sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment in education programs and activities. For example, if a recipient dismisses a formal complaint or any allegations in the formal complaint, the complainant should know why any of the complainant's allegations were dismissed and should also be able to challenge such a dismissal by appealing on certain grounds.[254] Even though constitutional due process may not require the specific procedure of a

[253] See Goss, 419 U.S. at 578-79.

[254] See §106.45(b)(3); § 106.45(b)(8)(i).

written notice of the dismissal stating the reasons for the dismissal, or the right to appeal the dismissal, such strong due process protections help ensure that a recipient is not erroneously dismissing an allegation due to a procedural irregularity, lack of knowledge of newly discovered evidence, or a conflict of interest or bias.[255] As discussed throughout this

[255] Id.

preamble and especially in the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section, each of the procedural requirements in § 106.45 is prescribed because the Department views the requirement as important to ensuring a fair process for both parties rooted in the fundamental due process principles of notice and meaningful opportunities to be heard.[256]

---

[256] See Goss, 419 U.S. at 578-79 (holding that in the public school context "the interpretation and application of the Due Process Clause are intensely practical matters" that require at a minimum notice and "opportunity for hearing appropriate to the nature of the case") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

In issuing these final regulations with a standardized grievance process for Title IX sexual harassment, the Department has carefully considered the public comments on the NPRM. The public comments have been crucial in promulgating the procedures that are most needed to (i) improve perceptions that Title IX sexual harassment allegations are resolved fairly and reliably, (ii) avoid intentional or unintentional injection of sex-based biases and stereotypes into proceedings that too often have been biased for or against parties on the basis of sex, mostly because the underlying allegations at issue involve issues of sex-based conduct, and (iii) promote accurate, reliable outcomes so that victims of sexual harassment receive remedies restoring and preserving equal educational opportunities and

respondents are not treated as responsible unless a determination of responsibility is factually reliable.

Summary of § 106.45

As a whole, § 106.45 contains ten groups of provisions[257] that together are intended to provide a standardized framework that governs recipients' responses to formal complaints of sexual harassment under Title IX:

---

[257] Although not located in § 106.45, the final regulations also add § 106.71 to expressly prohibit retaliation against any individual exercising rights under Title IX, specifically protecting any individual's right to participate or refuse to participate in a Title IX grievance process.

(1) Section 106.45(a) acknowledges that a recipient's treatment of a complainant, or a respondent, could constitute sex discrimination prohibited under Title IX.

(2) Section 106.45(b)(1)(i)-(x) requires recipients to adopt a grievance process that:

- treats complainants and respondents equitably by recognizing the need for complainants to receive remedies where a respondent is determined responsible and for respondents to face disciplinary sanctions only after a fair process determines responsibility;

- objectively evaluates all relevant evidence both inculpatory and exculpatory, and ensures that rules voluntarily adopted by a recipient treat the parties equally;

- requires Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolutions to be free from conflicts of interest and bias and trained to serve impartially without prejudging the facts at issue;

- presumes the non-responsibility of respondents until conclusion of the grievance process;
- includes reasonably prompt time frames for the grievance process;
- informs all parties of critical information about the recipient's procedures including the range of remedies and disciplinary sanctions a recipient may impose, the standard of evidence applied by the recipient to all formal complaints of sexual harassment under Title IX (which must be either the preponderance of the evidence standard, or the clear and convincing evidence standard), the recipient's appeal procedures, and the range of supportive measures available to both parties; and

- protects any legally recognized privilege from being pierced during a grievance process.

(3) Section 106.45(b)(2) requires written notice of the allegations to both parties, including informing the parties of the right to select an advisor of choice.

(4) Sections 106.45(b)(3)-(b)(4) require recipients to investigate formal complaints, describe when a formal complaint is subject to mandatory or discretionary dismissal, require the recipient to notify the parties of any dismissal, and authorize discretionary consolidation of formal complaints when allegations of sexual harassment arise out of the same facts or circumstances.

(5) Section 106.45(b)(5)(i)-(vii) requires recipients to investigate formal complaints in a manner that:

- keeps the burden of proof and burden of gathering evidence on the recipient while protecting every party's right to consent to the use of the party's own medical, psychological, and similar treatment records;

- provides the parties equal opportunity to present fact and expert witnesses and other inculpatory and exculpatory evidence;
- does not restrict the parties from discussing the allegations or gathering evidence;

- gives the parties equal opportunity to select an advisor of the party's choice (who may be, but does not need to be, an attorney);
- requires written notice when a party's participation is invited or expected for an interview, meeting, or hearing;
- provides both parties equal opportunity to review and respond to the evidence gathered during the investigation; and

- sends both parties the recipient's investigative report summarizing the relevant evidence, prior to reaching a determination regarding responsibility.

(6) Section 106.45(b)(6) requires a live hearing with cross-examination

conducted by the parties' advisors at postsecondary institutions, while making hearings optional for elementary and secondary schools (and other recipients that are not postsecondary institutions) so long as the parties have equal opportunity to submit written questions for the other parties and witnesses to answer before a determination regarding responsibility is reached.

(7) Section 106.45(b)(7) requires a decision-maker who is not the same person as the Title IX Coordinator or the investigator to reach a determination regarding responsibility by applying the standard of evidence the recipient has designated in the recipient's grievance process for use in all formal complaints of sexual harassment (which must be either the preponderance of the evidence standard or the clear and convincing evidence standard), and the recipient must simultaneously send the parties a written determination explaining the reasons for the outcome.

(8) Section 106.45(b)(8) requires recipients to offer appeals equally to both parties, on the bases that procedural deficiencies, newly discovered evidence, or bias or conflict of interest affected the outcome.

(9) Section 106.45(b)(9) allows recipients to offer and facilitate informal resolution processes, within certain parameters to ensure such informal resolution only occurs with the voluntary, written consent of both parties; informal resolution is not permitted to resolve allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student.

(10) Section 106.45(b)(10) requires recipients to maintain records and documentation concerning sexual harassment reports, formal complaints, investigations, and adjudications; and to publish materials used for training Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolutions on the recipient's website or make these materials available upon request for inspection by members of the public.

The Department has concluded that the above provisions, rooted in due process principles of notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard and the importance of an impartial process before unbiased officials, set forth the procedures adapted for the practical realities of sexual harassment allegations in an educational context that are most needed to (i) improve perceptions that Title IX sexual harassment allegations are resolved fairly and reliably, (ii) avoid intentional or unintentional injection of sex-based biases and stereotypes into Title IX proceedings, and (iii) promote accurate, reliable outcomes, all of which effectuate the purpose of Title IX to provide individuals with effective protection from discriminatory practices.

Similarities and Differences Between the § 106.45 Grievance Process and Department Guidance

The Department's guidance in 1997, 2001, 2011, and 2017 has interpreted the Department's regulatory requirement in 34 CFR 106.8(b) for recipients to "adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for prompt and equitable resolution of student and employee complaints alleging any action which would be prohibited by this part" as applying to complaints of sexual harassment.[258] The § 106.45 grievance process, and the Department's guidance, largely address the same topics related to an "equitable" grievance process, and the final regulations are in many respects consistent with the Department's guidance. For example, these final

[258] 1997 Guidance (recipients are required by regulations to adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for the "prompt and equitable" resolution of sex discrimination complaints and these procedures apply to complaints of sexual harassment); 2001 Guidance at 19; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 8; 2017 Q&A at 3.

regulations and the Department's guidance all address equal opportunity for both parties to present witnesses and evidence.[259] The Department's guidance has always stated that grievance procedures must provide for "adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints,"[260] and

---

[259] 1997 Guidance (to be "equitable" grievance procedures should provide for "the opportunity to present witnesses and other evidence"); 2001 Guidance at 20; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 9; 2017 Q&A at 3; see also § 106.45(b)(5)(ii) (grievance process must give both parties equal opportunity to present witnesses, including fact and expert witnesses, and other inculpatory and exculpatory evidence); § 106.45(b)(5)(iii) (recipients may not restrict the ability of parties to gather evidence).

[260] 1997 Guidance (grievance procedures must provide for "adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints"); 2001 Guidance at 20; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 9; 2017 Q&A at 3; 2017 Q&A at 4 (adding that an "equitable" investigation should include using a trained investigator to "objectively evaluate the credibility of parties and witnesses, synthesize all available evidence – including both inculpatory and exculpatory evidence – and take into account the unique and complex circumstances of each case.").

these final regulations adopt that premise and explicitly instruct recipients to investigate and adjudicate in a manner that is (and ensure that Title IX personnel receive training to be) impartial and unbiased,[261] and to objectively evaluate all relevant evidence, including inculpatory and exculpatory evidence.[262] These final regulations also expressly protect

---

[261] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).
[262] Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii); § 106.45(b)(5)(vii); § 106.45(b)(6).

information protected by legally recognized privileges,[263] ensure that a party's treatment records are not used in a grievance process without the party's voluntary, written consent,[264] require that both parties receive copies of evidence gathered during the investigation that is "directly related to the allegations" in the formal complaint,[265] require that both parties be

---

[263] Section 106.45(b)(1)(x).
[264] Section 106.45(b)(5)(i).
[265] Section 106.45(b)(5)(vi).

sent a copy of the recipient's investigative report that summarizes all relevant evidence including inculpatory and exculpatory evidence,[266] and deem questions and evidence about a complainant's prior sexual behavior to be irrelevant (with two limited exceptions).[267] The Department believes that these requirements build upon the expectation set forth in prior guidance,

---

[266] Section 106.45(b)(5)(vii).
[267] Section 106.45(b)(6).

that grievance procedures must provide for the "adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints."[268]

Some provisions in § 106.45 address topics by requiring procedures that Department guidance did not address, or addressed as a recommendation. For instance, § 106.45(b)(2) requires written notice of the allegations with sufficient details to permit parties to prepare for an initial interview, which the recipient must send to both parties "upon receipt of a formal complaint," and § 106.45(b)(5)(v) requires written notice to the parties in advance of any meeting, interview, or hearing conducted as part of the investigation or adjudication. The 1997 Guidance, 2001 Guidance, and withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter were silent on the need for written notice. The 2017 Q&A stated that recipients "should" send written notice of allegations at the start of an investigation, but only "to the responding party" and stated that both parties "should" receive written notice to enable meaningful participation in any interview or hearing.[269] The final regulations make these written notices mandatory, for the benefit of both parties. As a further example, the 1997

---

[268] 2001 Guidance at 20.

[269] 2017 Q&A at 4.

Guidance, 2001 Guidance, and 2017 Q&A did not require any specific adjudicatory model, and while the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter referred to "the hearing"[270] (thus presuming that adjudications take place after a hearing), no guidance document specifically addressed whether or not recipients should, or must, hold live hearings. Section 106.45(b)(6) clarifies

---

[270] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 12.

that only postsecondary institutions must hold live hearings; other recipients (including elementary and secondary schools) may use a hearing or non-hearing model for adjudication. Similarly, the 1997 Guidance, 2001 Guidance, and 2017 Q&A did not address whether the parties have rights to confront or cross-examine other parties and witnesses,[271] and while the [271] The 2017 Q&A did not require a hearing or cross-examination, but stated that any rights regarding procedures such as cross-examination must be given equally to both parties. 2017 Q&A at 5.

withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter "strongly discourage[d]" recipients "from allowing the parties personally to question or cross-examine each other during the hearing"[272] the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter did not discourage or prohibit cross-examination by the parties' advisors, as required for postsecondary institutions under § 106.45(b)(6)(i).

---

[272] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 12.

In some significant respects, § 106.45 departs from positions taken in the Department's guidance by allowing recipients flexibility or discretion in a manner discouraged by guidance. For example, § 106.45(b)(1)(v) permits recipients to designate the recipient's own "reasonably prompt time frames" for conclusion of a grievance process. While the 1997 Guidance[273] and 2001

[273] 1997 Guidance (a recipient's grievance procedures should provide for "designated and reasonably prompt timeframes for the major stages of the complaint process").

Guidance[274] were silent on what "prompt" resolution of complaints meant, the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter recommended a 60 calendar day time frame.[275] The 2017 Q&A did not recommend a particular time frame for "prompt" resolution and referenced the 2001 Guidance approach on this subject.[276] Similarly, § [274] 2001 Guidance at 20 (recipients' grievance procedures should provide for "designated and reasonably prompt timeframes for the major stages of the complaint process").

---

[275] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 12 ("Based on OCR experience, a typical investigation takes approximately 60 calendar days following receipt of the complaint. Whether OCR considers complaint resolutions to be timely, however, will vary depending on the complexity of the investigation and the severity and extent of the harassment.").
[276] 2017 Q&A at 3.

106.45(b)(1)(vii) and § 106.45(b)(7)(i) permit each recipient to select between one of two standards of evidence to use in resolving formal complaints of sexual harassment. While the 1997 Guidance and 2001 Guidance were silent on the appropriate standard of evidence, the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter acknowledged that at the time, many recipients used the preponderance of the evidence standard, some recipients

used the clear and convincing evidence standard, and took the position that only the preponderance of the evidence standard could be consistent with Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.[277] The 2017 Q&A approved of using either the preponderance of the evidence standard or the clear and convincing evidence standard but cautioned recipients not to apply the preponderance of the evidence

[277] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 11 ("Thus, in order for a school's grievance procedures to be consistent with Title IX standards, the school must use a preponderance of the evidence standard.").

standard unless the recipient also used that standard for non-sexual misconduct proceedings.[278] Finally, § 106.45(b)(9) allows recipients the option of facilitating informal resolution processes (except as to allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student) so long as both parties voluntarily agree to attempt an informal resolution. Both the 2001 Guidance[279]

---

[278] 2017 Q&A at 5, fn. 19.
[279] 2001 Guidance at 21 ("In some cases, such as alleged sexual assaults, mediation will not be appropriate even on a voluntary basis.").

and withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter[280] discouraged schools from using mediation (or other informal resolution) to resolve sexual assault allegations. The 2017 Q&A allowed informal resolution[281] but unlike § 106.45(b)(9)(iii), did not prohibit informal resolution of allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student.

[280] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 8 ("Moreover, in cases involving allegations of sexual assault, mediation is not appropriate even on a voluntary basis.").
[281] 2017 Q&A at 4.

For the purpose of ensuring that recipients reach accurate determinations regarding responsibility so that victims of sexual harassment receive remedies in furtherance of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate in a manner consistent with constitutional due process and fundamental fairness, the § 106.45 grievance process prescribes more detailed procedural requirements than set forth in the Department's guidance in some respects, and leaves recipients with greater flexibility than guidance in other respects.

Public Comment

In response to our invitation in the NPRM, we received more than 124,000 comments on the proposed regulations. We discuss substantive issues under topical headings, and by the sections of the final regulations to which they pertain.

Analysis of Comments and Changes

An analysis of the public comments and changes in the final regulations since the publication of the NPRM follows.

Personal Stories

Comments: Numerous commenters shared with the Department experiences they have had as complainants or respondents, or people supporting complainants or respondents.

Relating to complainants, such personal experiences included the following:

- A wide variety of individuals shared their stories identifying as survivors or victims, whether or not they were also involved as complainants in Title IX proceedings. These included females, males, LGBTQ individuals, individuals with disabilities, persons of color, individuals who grew up in both rural and urban settings, veterans who were assaulted in the military, and individuals who described being sexually assaulted or harassed more than 50 years ago. The personal stories recounted sexual harassment and assault incidents occurring at all stages in life, including elementary school students, high school students, undergraduate students at public and private universities, graduate students at public and private universities, faculty at public and private universities, and other university employees.

- Commenters shared stories as individuals who knew victims and witnessed the aftermath of trauma. These individuals included parents and grandparents of students who had been assaulted, classmates and friends of victims, teachers at all levels, professors, counselors, coaches, Title IX Coordinators, rape crisis advocates, graduate students and teaching assistants, resident advisors, social workers, and health care professionals.

- The Department received comments from individuals who described harassment or assault by a wide variety of individuals. These included

stalkers, intimate partners and ex-partners, friends, classmates, coaches, teachers and professors, non-students or non-employees on campus, and parents or family members.

- The Department received comments from individuals who described harassment or assault from before Title IX existed, after Title IX was enacted, prior to and after the Department's withdrawn 2011 Dear

Colleague Letter and withdrawn 2014 Q&A, and prior to and after the Department's 2017 Q&A. We heard from individuals who described harassment or assault in a wide variety of locations, including on campuses of postsecondary institutions in locations such as student housing, classrooms, and, libraries, on elementary and secondary school grounds, locker rooms, off-campus housing and parties, while commuting to and from school, school-sponsored events, bars and parking lots, and study abroad programs.

- The Department received comments from individuals who described a range of traumatic incidents. Some commenters described inappropriate comments, inappropriate text messages or social media communication, and inappropriate touching. Other commenters recounted incidents of rape or attempted rape, gang rape, or forcible rape. Some commenters described being raped while they were passed out, while others described being drugged and raped, waking up with no memory but suffering symptoms of rape, or being pressured or intimidated into consenting to sex.

- The Department received comments from individuals who did not report their experiences for various reasons, including fearing that no one would believe them, not knowing who to report to or the process for reporting, feeling too ashamed to report, or not wanting to relive the trauma and wanting to put the incident behind them.

- The Department received comments from individuals about many detrimental effects that sexual harassment and assault can have on victims. Individuals described what it is like to be raped, sexually assaulted, and sexually harassed, what they felt during the attack, and what they felt afterward. Commenters told the Department that rape and sexual assault, in particular, changed their lives forever, and has severe consequences emotionally, physically, academically, and professionally. Commenters also told us about severe post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) following sexual assault, about developing disabling physical or mental conditions due to rape, about pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases resulting from rape, and about the lasting impact on their personal lives. Individuals told us about negative consequences they experienced in the aftermath of sexual assault, including nightmares, emotional breakdowns, lack of sleep, inability to focus or concentrate, changed eating habits, loss of confidence and self-esteem, stress, immense shame, lack of trust, and loneliness.

- Commenters described carrying the pain of victimization with them for life, even after more than half a century. Some commenters shared that they constantly live in fear of seeing their attacker again. Some commenters told us that their experiences affected future relationships and caused them to have trust issues for long periods of time, sometimes for life. Some commenters told us their assaults led to drug and alcohol abuse.

- Some commenters shared stories of friends or loved ones who committed suicide following sexual harassment or assault. Other commenters told us personally about suicidal thoughts and attempted suicide. We heard from some individuals who described still feeling unsafe once the complaint process began and individuals who suffered increased trauma from having to see their attackers on campus or at a disciplinary proceeding.

- Individuals shared the severe impact of sexual harassment or assault on their educational experience, including the ability to learn and balance pressures of life. Commenters shared that sexual assault or harassment caused them to fail at school, or withdraw or drop out. Some commenters described the lifetime financial costs of dealing with the aftermath of sexual assault including legal and medical costs that exceeded $200,000, and lost income as a result of dropping out of school.

- The Department also received stories from individuals about the dynamics of sexual assault and harassment. Commenters told us that sexual abuse is based on power and inequity and that women are victims of male privilege. Several commenters shared personal stories about how serial offenders keep offending due to the power dynamic. Several commenters shared personal stories describing how sexual harassment by professors at schools was well known, but the schools did nothing.

- The Department also received stories from many individuals about how the current system was inadequate to protect victims of sexual assault or deliver justice. Commenters shared that they did not press charges or report because they had no confidence in the school system or criminal justice system. Commenters told us that they believed their institution was hiding the true numbers of campus rapes. Commenters told us that many Title IX reports are ignored by schools and by police officers. One individual told us that when the individual reported, city police told the individual it was a campus police issue, while campus police refused to take action because the individual had not reported while being raped, leaving the individual to be raped many more times by the same perpetrator while the authorities did nothing. Individuals told us that perpetrators bully victims into keeping quiet, telling them no one will believe them.

- Individuals shared stories about how their institutions failed them. Some were told by their institutions or teachers that no one would believe them or told not to file a complaint. Some commenters shared that complaints were not taken seriously by school officials and that lack of action caused them to drop out of school to avoid their attacker. Commenters described experiences as complainants and told us that the Title IX Coordinator seemed more interested in proving the respondent innocent than helping the complainant.

- Several complainants told us they were blamed and shamed by authority figures including having their clothing choices questioned, decisions questioned, intelligence questioned, motives questioned, and being told they should have resisted more or been louder in saying "no."

- Individuals shared their experiences showing that it is difficult to prove rape in "he said/she said" situations. Individuals told us that respondents were found to not be at fault by hearing panels, including in instances where insufficient evidence was found despite multiple complainants reporting against the same respondent.

- Several individuals told us the current process took too long, sometimes nine months to over a year or more to get a resolution. One commenter described reporting sexual harassment at a university, along with other women who had reported the same harassing faculty member, but the university's process took so long and was so painful that the commenter left the university without finishing her degree, abandoning her career in a STEM (science, technology, engineering, medicine) field and resulting in $75,000 lost to taxpayers, wasted on funding a degree she did not finish.

- Individuals told us that respondents were given minimal punishment that did not fit the severity of the offense, or that victims were forced to encounter their perpetrators even after the respondents were found responsible. They told us that their perpetrators were well respected students or athletes in school, or prominent professors at universities, which caused the perpetrators to receive light punishments or no punishment at all. They told us they could not get attackers banned from their dorms or classes.

- We also heard from individuals who faced retaliation for filing complaints. These individuals faced continued harassment by respondents, received lower grades from professors reported as harassers, or lost scholarships due to rebuffing sexual advances from teachers.
- We also heard from several commenters about how the Title IX system was able to deliver justice for them in the aftermath of sexual harassment or assault, including commenters who believed that the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter was the reason why their school responded appropriately to help them after they had been sexually assaulted. They told us that the counselors and resources available to help victims were the only reason they could survive the trauma or the Title IX process. They told us that the Title IX Coordinator was able to help them in ways that allowed them to stay in school. They also told us of instances where the campus system was finally able to remove a serial sexual predator. The father of a stalked student told us that he feared participation in a Title IX proceeding, but that because of Title IX, the stalker was excluded, and the campus is a safer place. One student stated a college made necessary changes after the student filed a Title IX complaint.

- A number of individuals told us that the proposed regulations would not be adequate to help victims, based on their own experiences with the Title IX process. Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules would cause students to drop out of school and lose scholarships. Other

commenters asserted the proposed rules would enable serial rapists and harassers.

- Some individuals told us they never would have reported under the proposed rules because of the cross-examination requirement. Individuals who went through cross-examination in the criminal context told us how they suffered to get justice and that it is a traumatic experience that led to

PTSD and more therapy. Several of these individuals told us defense attorneys badgered or humiliated them.

- One commenter expressed concern that, under the proposed rules' definition of sexual harassment, it could be argued that the rape that a friend endured was not a sufficiently severe impairment to the friend's educational access to be covered by Title IX.

- One commenter, who was a professor, told us that years ago a professor from another school who was interviewing for a position at the commenter's institution molested the commenter during an off-campus dinner. The commenter believed that under that institution's current policies, the commenter had a clear-cut reporting line, and the offender would, at a minimum, have received no further consideration for this job. This commenter claimed, however, that under the Department's proposed rules, even as a faculty member the commenter would not be protected.

- Commenters were also concerned about confidentiality. Several individuals stated they told a trusted coach or teacher, who was forced under current rules to report even though the individuals wanted the conversation to remain confidential. Other individuals stated they would not have reported under the proposed rules due to fear of backlash because of the public nature of reports or proceedings. One commenter recounted a friend's experience and stated that because the commenter's friend's name was not kept confidential

during Title IX proceedings, the commenter's friend quit playing school basketball and dropped out of school to get mental health counseling, due to the public embarrassment from the Title IX proceeding.

Relating to respondents, such personal experiences included the following:

- A wide variety of individuals submitted personal stories of respondents. These included student-respondents in past or present Title IX proceedings, individuals with disabilities such as autism, male and female respondents, respondents of color, faculty-respondents, and graduate-student respondents. We also heard from individuals who were associated with respondents such as friends and classmates, parents and family members, including parents of both males and females and parents of respondents with disabilities, such as OCD (obsessive-compulsive disorder) and autism. Some personal stories came from professors and teachers who had seen the system in action. Some personal stories came from self-proclaimed liberals, Democrats, feminists, attorneys of respondents, and a religious leader.

- A number of the personal stories shared in comments explained the devastating effects that an allegation of sexual assault or harassment can have on a respondent, even if the respondent is never formally disciplined. Commenters contended that one false accusation can ruin someone's life, and told us that the consequences follow respondents for life. Other commenters stated that false allegations, and resulting Title IX processes, destroyed the futures of respondents and kept them from becoming lawyers, doctors, military officers, academics, and resulted in loss of other career opportunities.

- Many commenters told us that false allegations and the Title IX process caused severe emotional distress for respondents and their families. This included several stories of respondents attempting suicide after allegedly false allegations, several stories of respondents suffering from severe trauma, including anxiety disorders, stress, and PTSD, several stories of respondents suffering clinical depression, and several stories of respondents suffering from lack of sleep and changed eating habits.

- Several commenters told us that, as to respondents who were allowed to stay in school, being falsely accused of sexual misconduct affected their grades and academic performance, and ability to concentrate. Several commenters described the immense public shame and ridicule that resulted from a false allegation of sexual assault.

- Several professors commented that their academic freedom was curtailed due to unfair anti-sexual harassment policies.

- Several commenters described severe financial consequences to respondents and their families due to needing to hire legal representation to defend against allegedly false allegations. Commenters described incurring costs that ranged from $10,000 in legal fees to over $100,000 in legal and medical bills, including psychological treatment, to complete the process of clearing a respondent's name in the wake of a Title IX complaint. One comment was from parents who described feeling forced to put their house up for sale to pay to exonerate their child from baseless allegations.

- Several commenters stated that the status quo system disproportionately affects certain groups of respondents, including males, males of color, males of lower socioeconomic status, and students with disabilities. One commenter argued that the system is tilted in favor of females of means who are connected to the school's donor base.

- A number of respondents or other commenters described respondents being falsely accused and/or unfairly treated by their school in the Title IX process. Commenters shared numerous situations where there was an abundance of evidence indicating consent from both parties, but the respondent either was still found responsible for sexual assault or was forced to endure an expensive and traumatic process before being found non-responsible.

- Several commenters told us stories where complainants were ex-intimate partners who did not report sexual assault allegations until weeks or months after a breakup, usually coinciding with the respondent finding a new intimate partner, under circumstances that the commenters believed showed that the complainant's motive was jealousy.

- Commenters shared stories of situations where two students engaged in sexual activity and allegations disputed over consent where both parties had been drinking, and

commenters believed that many schools treated any intoxication as making a male respondent automatically liable for sexual assault even when neither party had been drinking so much that they were incapacitated.

- Commenters shared stories of situations where respondents were accused by complainants whom respondents had never met or did not recognize. Commenters shared stories of situations where respondents had befriended or comforted individuals who had experienced trauma and eventually found themselves being accused of sexual assault, harassment, or stalking.

- Commenters described their experiences with Title IX cases using negative terms to portray unfairness such as “Kafka-esque,” “1984-like,”

"McCarthy-esque," and "medieval star chamber."

- We heard from several commenters who specifically argued that the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter was the cause of the unfair Title IX process for respondents. One commenter expressed that the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter destroyed the commenter's family.

- Many commenters opined that various parts of the proposed regulations would have helped prove their innocence or avoided or lessened the emotional, reputational, and financial hardships they experienced due to false accusations.
- A number of commenters expressed that they believed that Title IX investigations were biased in favor of the complainant and gave examples such as allowing only evidence in the complainant's favor, failing to give the hearing panel any opportunity to gauge the complainant's credibility, disallowing the respondent's witnesses from testifying but allowing testimony from all of the complainant's witnesses, and giving the complainant more time to prepare for a hearing or access to more evidentiary materials than the respondent was given.

- A number of commenters discussed the lack of due process protections in their experience with Title IX proceedings. Several students and professors detailed how they were expelled or fired without being permitted to give their side of the story. Several commenters described cases where respondents were suspended indefinitely from college without due process over an allegedly unprovable and false accusation of sexual harassment. Several commenters expressed how institutions took unilateral disciplinary action against respondents with no investigation. Two commenters noted that respondents' requests for autism accommodations were denied or appropriate disability accommodations were never offered.

- A number of commenters discussed how respondents were not allowed to have representation present when they met with the Title IX investigator or during their hearing. Several commenters stated that their advisor or lawyer was not allowed to speak during the hearing.
- A number of commenters described a lack of notice of the charges against them, of the details of the offenses

they had allegedly committed, or of the evidence being used against them. Several commenters noted that the Title IX investigation produced a report describing evidence that respondents were not shown until after the opportunity to respond had passed. Several commenters complained that respondents were given no access to investigation documents.

- A number of commenters wrote that respondents felt like they were presumed guilty from the beginning by their institution. Several commenters expressed that they felt like the burden of proof rested completely on the respondent to prove innocence and they felt this was both unfair and un-American.
- A number of commenters described cases where respondents were denied the ability to cross-examine complainants, and even when the institution asked the complainant some questions, the institution refused to ask follow up questions during the hearing. Several commenters recounted cases where investigators did not ask the complainant follow up questions even though there were inconsistencies in the complainant's story.

- Several commenters told us that the university's Title IX decision-maker did not ask the questions that respondents submitted during the hearing. One commenter described a case where a respondent was not allowed to ask the complainant any questions at all; the respondent had to submit any questions ahead of time to a committee chairperson who, in turn, chose which questions to ask the complainant, and chose not to ask the complainant questions that the commenter had wanted asked.

- One attorney of a respondent described a situation where both the respondent and the complainant were allowed to submit only a written statement before the Title IX office made the final determination. The complainant stated that the conduct at issue between the two was, at least initially, consensual. But due to the absence of cross-examination, the respondent's attorney was never allowed to ask the complainant how the respondent was supposed to know when the conduct became nonconsensual.

- One commenter stated that the respondent was told by the institution that "hearsay was absolutely admissible" yet the respondent had no opportunity to cross-examine witnesses making hearsay statements.

- Several commenters discussed that it took six to 12 months to clear their names from allegedly false accusations. One commenter stated the process took eight months to clear the respondent's name and the respondent was banned from school during that time.

- Several commenters were fearful of retaliation from institutions because they believed their school was biased in favor of complainants. Several commenters stated that their university invented new charges once the original charges against a respondent fell apart.
- Several commenters contended that a broad definition of sexual harassment led to nonsensical outcomes. One

commenter shared that a high school boy was charged with creating a hostile environment on the basis of gender after a group of girls accessed his private social media account and took screen shots of comments that the girls found offensive. Another commenter described how a dedicated young professor, who was very popular with students, was forced to take anger management courses at his own expense and then denied continued employment because a female college student reported him to the Title IX office for making a passionate argument in favor of a local issue of workplace politics. One parent shared a story about their daughter, who was accused of sexual exploitation on her campus, put through a hearing process, and given sanctions, for posting (to a private account) a video clip of herself walking down a common space hallway when someone was having loud sex in the background. One commenter mentioned an incident where a professor was investigated under Title IX just for disagreeing about another professor's Title IX investigation.

- One respondent, who also identified as a sexual assault survivor, stated that, before her own personal experience told her otherwise, she believed that false or wrongful accusations were unimaginable and rare, but that her personal experience as a respondent showed her that false or wrongful accusations of sexual misconduct are much more common than the general population knows or would believe.

Discussion: The Department has thoughtfully and respectfully considered the personal experiences of the many individuals who have experienced sexual harassment; been accused of it; have looked to their schools, colleges, and universities for supportive, fair responses; and have made the sacrifice in time and mental and emotional effort to convey their experiences and perspectives to the Department through public comment. Many of the themes in these comments echo those raised with the Department in listening sessions with stakeholders, leading to the Secretary of Education's speech in September 2017[282] in which she emphasized the importance of Title IX and the high stakes of sexual misconduct. The Secretary observed, after having personally spoken with survivors, accused students, and school administrators, that "the system established by the prior administration has failed too many students."[283] In the Secretary's words, "One rape is one too many. One assault is one too many. One aggressive act of harassment is one too many. One person denied due process is one too many."[284]

[282] Betsy DeVos, U.S. Sec'y of Education, Prepared Remarks on Title IX Enforcement (Sept. 7, 2017), https://www.ed.gov/news/speeches/secretary-devos-prepared-remarks-title-ix-enforcement.

The Secretary stated that in endeavoring to find a "better way forward" that works for all students, "non-negotiable principles" include the right of every survivor to be taken seriously and the right of every person accused to know that guilt is not predetermined.[285] It is with those principles in mind that the Department prepared the NPRM, and because of robust public comment including from individuals personally affected by these issues, these final regulations even better reflect those principles.

---

[283] Id.
[284] Id.

---

[285] Id.

Changes: In response to the personal stories shared by individuals affected by sexual harassment, the final regulations ensure that recipients offer supportive measures to complainants regardless of participation in a grievance process, and that respondents cannot be punished until the completion of a grievance process,[286] in addition to numerous [286] Section 106.44(a). As discussed throughout this preamble, there are exceptions to this premise: any respondent may be removed from an education program or activity on an emergency basis under § 106.44(c); a non-student employee-respondent may be placed on administrative leave during pendency of a grievance process under § 106.44(d); an informal resolution process, in which the parties voluntarily participate, may end in an agreement under which the respondent agrees to a disciplinary sanction or other adverse consequence, without the recipient completing a grievance process, under § 106.45(b)(9).

changes throughout the final regulations discussed in various sections of this preamble.

Notice and Comment Rulemaking Rather Than Guidance

Comments: Many commenters, including some who supported the substance of the proposed rules and others who opposed the substance, commended the Department for following formal rulemaking procedures to implement Title IX reforms instead of imposing rules through sub-regulatory guidance. Many commenters asserted that the notice-and-comment rulemaking process is critical for gathering informed feedback from all stakeholders and strengthening the rule of law, and leads to legal clarity and certainty for institutions and students. Several commenters stated that because the new regulations will be mandatory, they will provide a transparent standard that colleges must meet and a clear standard under which complainants can hold their institutions accountable.

One commenter described the public comment process as demonstrating the values of transparency, fairness, and public dialogue, and appreciated the Department exhibiting those values with this process. One commenter called notice-and-comment a "beautiful tool"

which helps Americans participate in the democracy and freedom our land offers; another called it an important step that helps the public have confidence in the Department's rules. One commenter thanked the Department for taking time to solicit public comment instead of rushing to impose rules through guidance because public comment leads to rules that are carefully thought out to ensure that there are not loopholes or irregularities in the process that is adopted.

Another commenter opined that having codified rules will make it easier for colleges and universities to comply with Title IX and will ensure that sexual harassment policies are consistent, making policies and processes related to Title IX sexual harassment investigations more transparent to students, faculty and staff, and the public at large. One commenter, a student conduct practitioner, stated that the management of Title IX cases has felt like a rollercoaster for many years, and having clear regulations will be beneficial for the commenter's profession and the students served by that profession.

Several commenters noted that previous sub-regulatory guidance did not give interested stakeholders the opportunity to provide feedback. One commenter opined that although prior administrations acted in good faith by issuing a series of Title IX guidance documents, prior administrations missed a critical opportunity by denying stakeholders the opportunity to publicly comment, resulting in many institutions of higher education lacking a clear understanding of their legal obligations; the commenter asserted that public comment reduces confusion for many administrators, Title IX Coordinators, respondents, and complainants, and avoids needless litigation.

One commenter stated that by opening this issue up to the public, the Department has demonstrated sincerity in constructing rules that fully consider the issues and concerns regularly seen by practitioners in the field; the commenter thanked the Department for the time and effort put into clarifying and modifying Title IX regulatory requirements to be relevant and effective for today's issues.

One commenter asserted that the proposed regulations address the inherent problem with "Dear Colleague" letters not being a "regulation." One commenter argued that no administration should have the ability to rewrite the boundaries of statutory law with a mere "Dear Colleague" letter. One commenter applauded the use of the rulemaking process for regulating in this area and encouraged the abandonment of "regulation through guidance." This commenter reasoned that institutions that comply with regulations are afforded certain safe harbors from liability as a matter of law, but institutions that complied with the Department's Title IX guidance were still subjected to litigation. This commenter asserted that recipients were left in a "Catch 22" because Title IX participants' attorneys freely second guessed the Department's Title IX guidance, forcing institutions to choose to follow the Department's guidance yet subject themselves to liability (or at least the prospect of an expensive litigation defense) from parties who had their own theories about discriminatory practices at odds with the Department's guidance, or else follow a non-discriminatory process different from the Department's guidance and thereby invite enforcement actions from OCR under threat of loss of Federal funds.

Another commenter expressed appreciation that the Department seeks to provide further clarity to a complicated area of civil rights law and contended that since 2001 the

Department has made numerous policy pronouncements, some of which have been helpful and others that have caused unnecessary confusion; that the 2001 Guidance was meant to ensure that cases of sexual violence are treated as cases of sexual harassment; that the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter rightly addressed the failure of many institutions to address the needs of reporting parties; but by relying on guidance instead of regulations the Department's ability to provide technical assistance to institutions was undermined, and the guidance created further confusion.

One commenter opposed the proposed rules and opined that changing the 1975 Title IX regulations is very serious and change should only be made based on substantial consensus and evidence that any changes are critically needed and cannot be accomplished by traditionally effective guidance such as previous letters and helpful Q&As from the Department. Another commenter opined that under our system of checks and balances, because Congress passed Title IX, Congress should have to approve a regulation like this, issued under Title IX.

Discussion: The Department agrees with the many commenters who acknowledged the importance of prescribing rules for Title IX sexual harassment only after following notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures required by the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C. 701 et seq., instead of relying on non-binding sub-regulatory guidance. The Department believes that sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment is a serious subject that deserves this serious rulemaking process. Moreover, the Department believes that sub-regulatory guidance cannot achieve the goal of enforcing Title IX with respect to sexual harassment because this particular form of sex discrimination requires a unique response from a recipient, and only law and regulation can hold recipients accountable. The Department acknowledges that Congress could

address Title IX sexual harassment through legislation, but Congress has not yet done so. Congress has, however, granted the Department the authority and direction to effectuate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate,[287] and the Department is persuaded that the problem of sexual harassment and how recipients respond to it presents a need for the Department to exercise its authority by issuing these final regulations.[288]

[287] 20 U.S.C. 1682 ("Each Federal department and agency which is empowered to extend Federal financial assistance to any education program or activity . . . is authorized and directed to effectuate the provisions of section 1681 of this title with respect to such program or activity by issuing rules, regulations, or orders of general applicability which shall be consistent with achievement of the objectives of the statute authorizing the financial assistance in connection with which the action is taken.").

Changes: None.

General Support and Opposition Comments: Many commenters expressed overall support for the proposed rules. One commenter stated that the proposed rules are a reasonable means by which the Department can ensure that colleges and universities do not engage in unlawful discrimination. One commenter supported the proposed rules because they clearly address the problem of sex discrimination, gender bias, and gender stereotyping and asserted that there is widespread public support for the proposed rules based on public polling, opinion editorials, and media articles. Some commenters supported the proposed rules because they protect all students, including LGBTQ students and male students. One commenter expressed general support for the proposed rules, but was concerned that changing the rules still will not help victims who are afraid to speak up.

---

[288] The Department notes that the Congress has the opportunity to review these final regulations under the Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. 801 et seq.

Some commenters expressed support for the proposed rules because they provide clarity and flexibility to institutions of higher education, and some asserted that the proposed rules appropriately establish firm boundaries regarding student safety and protections, while granting institutions flexibility to customize responses based on an institution's unique attributes. These commenters believed the proposed rules included a number of improvements that will assist institutions in advancing these goals. One commenter expressed support for the alignment between the proposed rules and the Clery Act because that will help institutions comply with all regulations and ensure a fair process. One commenter supported the clarity and flexibility in the proposed rules regarding the standards by which schools will be judged in implementing Title IX, the circumstances that require a Title IX response, and the amount of time schools have to resolve a sexual harassment proceeding. One commenter supported the clear directives in the proposed rules regarding how investigations must proceed and the written notice that must be provided to both parties, the opportunity for schools to use a higher evidentiary standard, the definition of sexual harassment, and the discussion of supportive measures. Another commenter characterized the proposed rules as containing several changes to when and where Title IX applies that offer welcome clarification to regulated entities by limiting subjective agency discretion, rolling back previous overreach, and creating certainty by substituting formal rules for nebulous guidance.

Some commenters expressed support for the proposed rules because they represent a return to fairness and due process for both parties, which will benefit everyone. Some of these commenters referenced personal stories in their comments and expressed their opinions that many accusations are false and lives are being ruined. Some of these commenters also criticized withdrawn Department guidance for not providing adequate due process and for being punitive. One such commenter also criticized the prior Administration for not meeting with organizations or groups advocating for due process or fairness to the accused. Other commenters criticized the status quo system as being arbitrary and capricious, and biased, and stated that decision-makers often do not have the professional autonomy to render decisions incompatible with institutional interests.

Some commenters asserted that the proposed rules would assist victims by ensuring that they are better informed and able to have input in the way their case is handled. Some commenters stated that the proposed rules are important for defining the minimum requirements for campus due process and will help ensure consistency among schools. One commenter asserted that the proposed rules take a crucial step toward addressing systemic bias in favor of complainants who are almost always female and against respondents who are almost always male. The commenter stated that such bias is illustrated by schools that adopt pro-victim processes while claiming that favoring alleged victims is not sex discrimination. One commenter contended that men's rights are under attack and advocacy groups have hijacked Title IX enforcement to engineer cultural change not authorized by the law, engendering hostile relationships and mistrust on campuses between men and women, and contended that current codes of conduct are unconstitutional because of their disparate impact on men.

A number of commenters expressed general support for the proposed rules and suggested additional modifications. Some of these commenters recommended that the Department make the proposed rules retroactive for students who were disciplined unfairly under the previous rules, including requiring schools to reopen and reexamine old cases and then apply these new rules, if requested to do so by a party involved in the old case. Some commenters stated that colleges should only be responsible for sexual assault or harassment perpetrated by employees of the school, and student-on-student sexual misconduct should not be the school's responsibility because it is outside the scope of Title IX. One of these commenters stated that it would be even better if the Department stopped enforcing Title IX. This commenter asserted that Title IX was passed to ensure that schools do not discriminate against females and it has achieved that objective, and the Department has the right to adopt the minority view in

Davis,[289] that schools should not be held accountable for student-on-student sexual harassment.

One commenter expressed concern that some education systems are not covered by Title IX even though they receive Federal funding; this commenter specifically referenced fraternities and sororities and stated that this lack of [289] Commenter cited: Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 661-62 (1999) (Kennedy, J., dissenting) ("Discrimination by one student against another therefore cannot be 'under' the school's program or activity as required by Title IX. The majority's imposition of liability for peer sexual harassment thus conflicts with the most natural interpretation of Title IX's 'under a program or activity' limitation on school liability.") (internal citations omitted).

---

Title IX coverage of Greek life should be reevaluated. One commenter suggested that the Department establish a procedure for the accused to file a complaint with the U.S. Secretary of Education. This commenter also suggested that there be a review board for Title IX accusations, the members of which are detached from the administration of the school. One commenter expressed concern that schools may not comply with the proposed rules and argued that the only lever that will work is a credible threat to cut off Federal funding for lack of compliance. One commenter expressed concern about funds from the U.S. Department of Justice's Office on Violence Against Women (OVW), which the commenter claimed funds studies that are being written only by those who support victims' rights; the commenter asserted that OVW funds are being used by campus Title IX offices to investigate and adjudicate allegations of campus sexual assault. This commenter recommended that the Department specify that OVW-funded programs must comply with the new Title IX regulations. One commenter expressed concern over the costs students faced to defend themselves in a Title IX process under the previous rules and suggested that

OCR may want to undertake a study on to what extent OCR's previous policies resulted in a serious adverse impact on lower- and moderate-income students and/or students of color since these students likely had fewer resources to pay for their defense.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' variety of reasons expressing support for the Department's approach. The Department agrees that the final regulations will promote protection of all students and employees from sex discrimination, provide clarity as to what Title IX requires of schools, colleges, and universities, help align Title IX and Clery Act obligations, provide consistency while leaving flexibility for recipients, benefit all parties to a grievance process by focusing on a fair, impartial process, and require recipients to offer supportive measures to complainants as part of a response to sexual harassment.

The Department understands commenters' desire to require recipients who have previously conducted grievance processes in a way that the commenters view as unfair to reopen the determinations reached under such processes. However, the Department will not enforce these final regulations retroactively.[290]

The Department will continue to recognize, as has the Supreme Court, that sexual harassment, including peer-on-peer sexual harassment, is a form of sex discrimination prohibited under Title IX, and will continue vigorously to [290] Federal agencies authorized by statute to promulgate rules may only create rules with retroactive effect where the authorizing statute has expressly granted such authority. See 5 U.S.C. 551 (referring to a "rule" as agency action with "future effects" in the Administrative Procedure Act); Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208 (1988) ("Retroactivity is not favored in the law. Thus, congressional enactments and administrative rules will not be construed to have retroactive effect unless their language requires this result.").

enforce Title IX with respect to all forms of sex discrimination.

Commenters questioning whether specific organizations receiving Federal financial assistance (including programs funded through OVW) are covered by Title IX may direct inquiries to the organization's Title IX Coordinator or to the Assistant Secretary, or both, pursuant to § 106.8(b)(1). Complaints alleging that a recipient has failed to comply with Title IX will continue to be evaluated and investigated by the Department. Section 106.45(b)(8) requires appeals from determinations regarding responsibility to be decided by decision-makers who are free from conflicts of interest. Recipients are subject to Title IX obligations, including these final regulations, with respect to all of the recipient's education programs or activities; there is no exemption from

Title IX coverage for fraternities and sororities, and in fact these final regulations specify in § 106.44(a) that the education program or activity of a postsecondary institution includes any building owned or controlled by a student organization officially recognized by the postsecondary institution.

The Department appreciates commenters' concerns about the impact of Title IX grievance procedures implemented under withdrawn Department guidance or under status quo policies that commenters believed were unfair. While the Department did not commission a formal study into the impact of previous guidance, the Department conducted extensive stakeholder outreach prior to issuing the proposed rules and has received extensive input through public comment on the NPRM, and believes that the final regulations will promote Title IX enforcement more aligned with the scope and purpose of Title IX (while respecting every person's constitutional due process rights and right to fundamental fairness) than the Department's guidance has achieved.

Changes: None.

Comments: Numerous commenters, including physicians, parents, students,

State coalitions against rape, advocacy groups, sexual assault survivors, ministers, mental health therapists, social workers, and employees at educational institutions expressed general opposition to the proposed rules. A number of commenters emphasized the critical progress spurred on by Title IX. Some commenters emphasized how Title IX has broken down barriers and improved educational access for millions of students for decades, especially for girls and women, including increasing access to higher education, promoting gender equity in athletics, and protecting against sexual harassment. Many of these commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules would undermine this progress towards sex equality and combating sexual harassment when protections are still greatly needed. Some argued that the proposed rules would weaken protections for young women at the very time when the #MeToo movement has shown the pervasiveness of sexual harassment and how much protections are still needed. Other commenters asserted that women and girls still depend on Title IX to ensure equal access in all aspects of education.

A few commenters asserted that the proposed rules violate Christian or Jewish teachings or expressed the view that the proposed rules are immoral, unethical, or regressive. Commenters described the proposed rules using a variety of terms, such as disgusting, unfair, indecent, dishonorable, un-Christian, lacking compassion, callous, sickening, morally bankrupt, cruel, regressive, dangerous, or misguided.

Other commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules would "turn back the clock" to a time when schools ignored sexual assault, excused male misbehavior as "boys will be boys," and treated sexual harassment as acceptable. Many commenters asserted that the prior Administration's protections for victims of sexual assault should not be rolled back.

Some commenters expressed the belief that the proposed rules are inconsistent with the purpose and intent of Title IX because they would allow unfair treatment of women, force women to choose between their safety and education, increase the cultural tolerance of sexual assault and predatory behaviors, make it harder for young women to complete their education without suffering the harms of sex-based harassment, and obstruct Title IX's purpose to protect and empower students experiencing sex discrimination. A few commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules would harm graduate students, who suffer sexual harassment at high rates.

Some commenters expressed the belief that the proposed rules are contrary to sex equality. Commenters asserted that Title IX protects all people from sexual assault, benefits both women and men, and that all students deserve equality and protection from sex discrimination and sexual harassment. Commenters expressed belief that: sexism hurts everyone, including men; men are far more likely to be sexually assaulted than falsely accused of it; both men and women are victims of rape and deserve protection;

men on campus are not under attack and need protection as victims more than as falsely accused respondents; and the proposed rules were written to protect males or to protect males more than females, but should protect male and female students equally. Other commenters characterized the proposed rules as part of a broader effort by this Administration to dismantle protections for women and other marginalized groups.

One commenter argued that the Department should spend more time interviewing victims of sexual assault than worrying about whether the accused's life will be ruined. Other commenters stated that Title IX should be protected and left alone. One commenter stated that any legislation that limits the rights of the victim in favor of the accused should be scrutinized for intent. One commenter stated that the proposed rules only cater to the Department and its financial bottom line. One commenter supported protecting Title IX and giving girls' sports a future. One commenter asserted that we are losing female STEM (science, technology, engineering, math) leaders that the Nation needs right now.

One commenter urged the Department to create rules that protect survivors, prevent violence and sexual harassment and punish offenders, teach about boundaries and sexuality, and provide counseling and mental health resources to students. One commenter suggested that the Department should use more resources to educate about sexual consent communication, monitor drinking, and provide sexual education

because this will protect both male and female students. Some commenters suggested alternate practices to the approaches advanced in the proposed rules, such as: behavioral therapy for offenders and bystander intervention training; best practices for supporting survivors in schools; community-based restorative justice programs; and independent State investigatory bodies independent of school systems with trained investigators. Some commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules ignore efforts to prevent sexual harassment or to address its root causes.

Discussion: The Department appreciates that many commenters with a range of personal and professional experiences expressed opposition to the proposed regulations. The Department agrees that Title IX has improved educational access for millions of students since its enactment decades ago and believes that these final regulations continue our national effort to make Title IX's non-discrimination mandate a meaningful reality for all students.

The Department notes that although some commenters formed opinions of the proposed rules based on Christian or Jewish teachings or other religious views, the Department does not evaluate legal or policy approaches on that basis. The Department believes that the final regulations mark progress under Title IX, not regression, by treating sexual harassment under Title IX as a matter deserving of legally binding regulatory requirements for when and how recipients must respond. In no way do the final regulations permit recipients to "turn back the clock" to ignore sexual assault or excuse sexual harassment as

"boys will be boys" behavior; rather, the final regulations obligate recipients to respond promptly and supportively to complainants and provide a grievance process fair to both parties before determining remedies and disciplinary sanctions.

The Department disagrees that changing the status quo approach to Title IX will negatively impact women, children, students of color, or LGBTQ individuals, because the final regulations define the scope of Title IX and recipients' legal obligations under Title IX without regard to the race, ethnicity, sexual orientation, age, or other characteristic of a person.

The Department is committed to the rule of law and robust enforcement of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate for the benefit of individuals in protected classes designated by Congress in

Federal civil rights laws such as Title IX. Contrary to a commenter's assertion, the Department is acutely concerned about the way that sexual harassment – and recipients' responses to it – have ruined lives and deprived students of educational opportunities. The Department aims through these final regulations to create legally enforceable requirements for the benefit of all persons participating in education programs or activities, including graduate students, for whom commenters asserted that sexual harassment is especially prevalent.

The Department understands that some commenters opposed the proposed regulations because they want Title IX to be protected and left alone. For reasons explained in the "Notice and Comment Rulemaking Rather Than Guidance" and "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" sections of this preamble, the Department believes that the final regulations create a framework for responding to Title IX sexual harassment that effectuates the Title IX non-discrimination mandate better than the status quo under the Department's guidance documents.

The Department disagrees that the proposed regulations in any manner

limit the rights of alleged victims in favor of the accused; rather, for reasons explained in the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble, the prescribed grievance process gives complainants and respondents equally strong, clear procedural rights during a grievance process.[291] Those procedural rights reflect the seriousness of sexual harassment, the life-altering consequences that flow from a determination regarding responsibility, and the need for each determination to be factually accurate. The Department's intent is to promulgate Title IX regulations that further the dual purposes of Title IX: preventing Federal funds from supporting discriminatory practices, and providing individuals with protections against discriminatory practices. The final regulations in no way cater to the Department or the Department's financial bottom line and the Department will enforce the final regulations vigorously to protect the civil rights of students and employees. While the proposed regulations mainly address sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment, the Department will also continue to enforce Title IX in non-sexual harassment contexts including athletics and equal access to areas of study such as STEM fields.

[291] See also the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

The Department believes that the final regulations protect survivors of sexual violence by requiring recipients to respond promptly to complainants in a non-deliberately indifferent manner with or without the complainant's participation in a grievance process, including offering supportive measures to complainants, and requiring remedies for complainants when respondents are found responsible. For reasons discussed in the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department does not require or prescribe disciplinary sanctions and leaves those decisions to the discretion of recipients, but recipients must effectively implement remedies designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal educational access if a respondent is found responsible for sexual harassment following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

The Department understands commenters' beliefs that the Department should create rules that monitor drinking, teach about interpersonal boundaries, sexuality, bystander intervention, and sexual consent communication, and provide counseling and mental health resources to students. The final regulations do not preclude recipients from offering counseling and mental health services, and while the Department does not mandate educational curricula, nothing in the final regulations impedes recipients' discretion to provide students (or employees) with educational information. While these final regulations are concerned with setting forth requirements for recipients' responses to sexual harassment, the Department agrees with commenters that educators, experts, students, and employees should also endeavor to prevent sexual harassment from occurring in the first place. The 2001

Guidance took a similar position on prevention of sexual harassment.[292]

The Department appreciates and has considered the many alternative approaches proposed by commenters, including that the Department should require behavioral therapy for offenders, establish best practices for supporting survivors, require restorative justice programs, require that State

---

[292] The 2001 Guidance under the heading "Prevention" states: "Further, training for administrators, teachers, and staff and age-appropriate classroom information for students can help to ensure that they understand what types of conduct can cause sexual harassment and that they know how to respond." 2001 Guidance at 19.

investigatory bodies independent of school systems conduct Title IX investigations, and address the root causes of sexual harassment. The Department does not require particular sanctions – or therapeutic interventions – for respondents who are found responsible for sexual harassment, and leaves those decisions in the sound discretion of State and local educators. Under the final regulations, recipients and States remain free to consider alternate investigation and adjudication models, including regional centers that outsource the investigation and adjudication responsibilities of recipients to highly trained, interdisciplinary experts. Some regional center models proposed by commenters and by Title IX experts rely on recipients to form voluntary cooperative organizations to accomplish this purpose, while other, similar models involve independent, professional investigators and adjudicators who operate under the auspices of State governments. The Department will offer technical assistance to recipients with respect to pursuing a regional center model for meeting obligations to investigate and adjudicate sexual harassment allegations under Title IX.

Similarly, recipients remain free to adopt best practices for supporting survivors and standards of competence for conducting impartial grievance processes, while meeting obligations imposed under the final regulations. The final regulations address recipients' required responses to sexual harassment incidents; identifying the root causes and reducing the prevalence of sexual harassment in our Nation's schools remains within the province of schools, colleges, universities, advocates, and experts.

Changes: None.

Comments: Some commenters contended that the proposed rules would have a negative impact on specific populations, including women, persons of color, children, and LGBTQ individuals, and supported keeping Title IX as-is. One commenter believed that many people hold an inaccurate stereotype that sexual assault does not happen at all-women's colleges and felt that the proposed rules would make it harder for students in such environments to get justice or to feel safe in their own dorms.

Some commenters were concerned about the negative impact of the proposed rules on victims and the message the proposed rules send to the public. Commenters asserted that the proposed rules perpetuate the acceptance of sexual assault and harassment and will result in people not believing victims despite how difficult it is to come forward. Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules will place an additional burden on victims and make it less likely victims will come forward, allowing perpetrators to go unpunished. One commenter asserted that the proposed rules signal to the public and potential sexual harassers and assaulters that their actions will be excused by the Department and not sufficiently investigated by their campuses. Some commenters contended that the proposed rules, if enacted, would: protect abusers and those accused of assault; insulate harassers from punishment or make them feel like they can sexually harass others without consequence; give boys and young men who behave badly or have a sense of entitlement a free pass when it comes to their actions against girls, rather than teaching men to respect women; make it easier for harassers to get away with it rather than ensuring accountability; allow rapists to escape consequences; continue a culture of impunity; strengthen rape culture; perpetuate

systemic gender oppression; undermine efforts to ensure young people understand consent; disempower survivors and reinforce myths that they are at fault for being assaulted; prevent deterrence of sexual abuse; and be designed to protect rich and privileged boys.

Many commenters expressed general concern that the proposed rules would make schools less safe for all students, including LGBTQ students. Commenters identified an array of harms they believed the proposed rules would impose on victims. Commenters argued the proposed rules would: make it less likely victims will be protected, believed, or supported; make it harder for survivors to report their sexual assaults, to get their cases heard, to prove their claims, and to receive justice, despite a process that is already difficult, painful, convoluted, confusing, and lacking in resources, and in which victims fear coming forward; attack survivors in ways that make it harder for them to get help; restrict their rights and harm them academically and psychologically (e.g., dropping out of school, trauma, post-traumatic stress disorder, institutional betrayal, suicide). Commenters argued that the proposed rules would: discourage survivors from coming forward and subject them to retraumatizing experiences in order to seek redress; make schools dangerous by making it easier for perpetrators to get away with heinous acts of gender-based violence; encourage sexually predatory behavior; fail to prioritize the safety of survivors and students; make students feel less safe at school and on campus; jeopardize students' well-being; increase the helplessness

survivors feel; and leave victims without recourse. Commenters argued that the proposed rules: put victims at greater risk of retaliation by schools eager to hide misconduct from the public; treat some people as less than others based on gender; signal that survivors do not matter and that sexual assault can be ignored; hurt real women or show disdain for women and girls; and deny victims due process. Commenters believed that the proposed rules were antithetical to bodily autonomy and reproductive justice values, fail to advance the goal of stopping sexual violence, and shift the costs and burdens to those already suffering from trauma.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that the proposed regulations will negatively impact women, people of color, LGBTQ individuals, or any other population. The proposed regulations are designed to provide supportive measures for all complainants and remedies for a complainant when a respondent is found responsible for sexual harassment, and the Department believes that, contrary to commenters' assertions, the final regulations will help protect against sex discrimination regardless of a person's race or ethnicity, age, sexual orientation, or gender identity and will give complainants greater autonomy to receive the kind of school-level response to a reported incident of sexual harassment that will best help the complainant overcome the effects of sexual harassment and retain educational access. The Department notes that the final regulations do not differentiate between sexual assault occurring at an all-women's college and sexual assault occurring at a college enrolling women and men.

The Department believes that students, employees, recipients, and the public will benefit from the clarity, consistency, and predictability of legally enforceable rules for responding to sexual harassment set forth in the final regulations, and believes that the final regulations will communicate and incentivize these goals, contrary to some commenters' assertions that the final regulations will communicate negative messages to the public. The final regulations, including the § 106.45 grievance process, are motivated by fair treatment of both parties in order to avoid sex discrimination in the way either party is treated and to reach reliable determinations so that victims receive remedies that restore or preserve access to education after suffering sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment. The Department recognizes that anyone can be a victim, and anyone can be a perpetrator, of sexual harassment, and that each individual deserves a fair process designed to accurately resolve the truth of allegations.

The Department disagrees that the proposed regulations perpetuate acceptance of sexual harassment, rape culture, or systemic sex inequality; continue a culture of impunity; will result in people not believing victims; will disempower survivors or increase victim blaming, are designed to protect rich, privileged boys; or will make schools less safe. The Department recognizes that reporting a sexual harassment incident is difficult for many complainants for a variety of reasons, including fear of being blamed, not believed, or retaliated against, and fear that the authorities to whom an incident is reported will ignore the situation or fail or refuse to respond in a meaningful way, perhaps due to negative stereotypes that make women feel shamed in the aftermath of sexual violence. The final regulations require recipients to respond promptly to every complainant in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, including by offering supportive measures (irrespective of whether a formal complaint is filed) and explaining to the complainant options for filing a formal complaint. The final regulations impose duties on recipients and their Title IX personnel to maintain impartiality and avoid bias and conflicts of interest, so that no complainant or respondent is automatically believed or not believed.

Complainants must be offered supportive measures, and respondents may receive supportive measures, whether or not a formal complaint has been filed or a determination regarding responsibility has been made.

The Department is sensitive to the effects of trauma on sexual harassment victims and appreciates that choosing to make a report, file a formal complaint, communicate with a Title IX Coordinator to arrange supportive measures, or participate in a grievance process are often difficult steps to navigate in the wake of victimization. The Department disagrees, however, that the final regulations place additional burdens on victims or make it more difficult for victims to come forward. Rather, the final regulations place burdens on recipients to promptly respond to a complainant in a non-deliberately indifferent manner. The Department disagrees that the final regulations will excuse sexual harassment or result in insufficient investigations of sexual harassment allegations. Section 106.44(a) obligates recipients to respond by offering supportive measures to complainants, and § 106.45 obligates recipients to conduct investigations and provide remedies to complainants when respondents are found responsible.

Thus, a recipient is not permitted under the final regulations to excuse or ignore sexual harassment, nor to avoid investigating where a formal complaint is filed.

Changes: We have revised § 106.44(a) to state that as part of a recipient's response to a complainant, the recipient must offer the complainant supportive measures, irrespective of whether a complainant files a formal complaint, and the Title IX Coordinator must contact the complainant to discuss availability of supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.

Comments: One commenter asked what statistics the proposed rules were based on and stated that the proposed rules seem to not have been thought through.

A number of commenters expressed concerns that the proposed rules are not based on sufficient facts, evidence, or research, lack adequate justification, or demonstrate a lack of competence, knowledge, background, and awareness. A number of these commenters suggested gathering further evidence, best practices, and input from students, educators, administrators, advocates, survivors, and others. One commenter stated that the way to make American life and society safer was to address domestic violence on campuses.

Some commenters expressed concerns that the proposed rules would reduce reporting and investigations of sexual assault. Some commenters argued that many elements of the proposed rules are based on the misleading claim that those accused of sexual misconduct should be protected against false accusations even though research shows that false accusations are rare. Several commenters contended that women are more likely to be sexually assaulted than a man is to be falsely accused and similarly, a man is more likely to be sexually assaulted than to be falsely accused of sexual assault.

One commenter stated that the proposed rules would create a two-tiered system to deal with sexual assault cases and would put undue financial burden on the marginalized to pay for representation in an already flawed reporting system. One commenter stated that Title IX should protect all female students from rape, and they should be believed until facts prove them wrong.

Some commenters expressed opposition because the proposed rules protect institutions. Some of these commenters contended that the proposed rules would allow schools to avoid dealing with cases of sexual misconduct and abdicate their responsibility to take accusations seriously. One of these commenters argued it was the Department's job to protect the civil rights of students, not to help shield schools from accountability. One commenter argued that the proposed regulations had been pushed for by education lobbyists. Some commenters expressed concerns about reducing schools' Title IX obligations noting that schools have a long history of not adequately addressing sexual misconduct, have reputational, financial, and other incentives not to fully confront such behavior, and need to be kept accountable under Title IX. A few commenters felt that the proposed regulations would give school officials too much discretion and that the proposed regulations would result in inconsistencies among institutions in handling cases and in the support provided to students.

A number of commenters felt that the proposed rules prioritize the interests of schools, by narrowing their liability and saving them money, over protections for students. One commenter stated that universities that discriminate on the basis of sex should get no Federal money. One commenter was concerned that the proposed rules would create an environment in which institutions will refuse to take responsibility to avoid the financial aspect of having to make restitution rather than focusing on the well-being of victims. One commenter contended that the proposed rules enable school administrators to sexually abuse students by reducing a school's current Title IX responsibilities. One commenter stated that the proposed rules would hurt victims and perpetrators and leave institutions vulnerable to lawsuits.

Other commenters expressed a belief that the changes may violate constitutional safeguards, such as the rights to equal protection and to life and liberty. Some commenters believed that the proposed rules are in line with regressive laws regarding rape, sexual assault, and women's rights in less democratic countries. A few commenters felt that the proposed rules would signal an increased tolerance internationally for sexual violence, cause international students to avoid U.S. colleges where sexual assault is more prevalent, or compromise the country's ability to compete internationally in STEM fields where U.S.

women are reluctant to focus given the prevalence of sexual harassment.

Discussion: The final regulations reflect the Department's legal and policy decisions of how to best effectuate the non-discrimination mandate of Title IX, after extensive internal deliberation, stakeholder engagement, and public comment. The Department is aware of statistics that describe the prevalence of sexual harassment in educational environments and appreciates the many commenters who directed the Department's attention to such statistics.[293] The Department believes that these final regulations are needed precisely because statistics support the numerous personal accounts the Department has heard and that commenters have described regarding the problem of sexual harassment. The perspectives of survivors of sexual violence have been prominent in the public comments considered by the Department throughout the process of promulgating these final regulations. In response to commenters concerned about addressing domestic violence, the Department has revised the definition of "sexual harassment" in § 106.30 to expressly include domestic violence (and dating violence, and stalking) as those offenses are defined under VAWA, amending the Clery Act.

[293] Many such statistics are referenced in the "Commonly Cited Sources" and "Data – Overview" subsections of this "General Support and Opposition" section of the preamble.

The Department does not believe the final regulations will reduce reporting or investigations of conduct that falls under the purview of Title IX. Section 106.44(a) requires recipients to respond supportively to complainants regardless of whether a complainant also wants to file a formal complaint. When a formal complaint is filed, the § 106.45 grievance process prescribes a consistent framework, fair to both complainants and respondents, with respect to the investigation and adjudication of Title IX sexual harassment allegations. Thus, both complainants and respondents receive due process protections, and where a § 106.45 grievance process concludes with a determination that a respondent is responsible, the complainant is entitled to remedies.

Whether false accusations of sexual harassment occur frequently or infrequently, the § 106.45 grievance process requires allegations to be investigated and adjudicated impartially, without bias, based on objective evaluation of the evidence relevant to each situation.

As to all sexual harassment covered by Title IX, including sexual assault, the final regulations obligate recipients to respond and prescribe a consistent, predictable grievance process for resolution of formal complaints. Nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from applying the § 106.45 grievance process to address sexual assaults that the recipient is not required to address under Title IX. The Department disagrees that the proposed regulations put undue financial burden on marginalized individuals to pay for representation. Contrary to the commenter's assertions, § 106.45(b)(5)(iv) gives each party the right to choose an advisor to assist the party, but does not require that the advisor be an attorney (or other advisor who may charge the party a fee for their representation).[294]

[294] The Department also notes that where cross-examination is required at a live hearing (for postsecondary institutions), the cross-examination must be conducted by an advisor (parties must never personally question each other), and if a party does not have their own advisor of choice at the live hearing, the postsecondary institution must provide that party (at no fee or charge) with an advisor of the recipient's choice, for the purpose of conducting cross-examination, and such a provided advisor may be, but does not need to be, an attorney. § 106.45(b)(6)(i).

The Department believes that schools, colleges, and universities desire to maintain a safe environment and that many have applied substantial effort and resources to address sexual harassment in particular; however, the Department acknowledges that reputational and financial interests have also influenced recipients' approaches to sexual violence problems. Contrary to some commenters' assertions, the proposed regulations neither "protect institutions" nor shield them from liability, but rather impose clear legal obligations on recipients to protect students' civil rights. The Department disagrees that the proposed regulations give recipients too much discretion; instead, the Department believes that the deliberate indifference standard requiring a response that is not clearly unreasonable in the light of known circumstances, combined with particular requirements for a prompt response that includes offering supportive measures to complainants, strikes an appropriate balance between requiring all recipients to respond meaningfully to each report, while permitting recipients sufficient flexibility and discretion to address the unique needs of each complainant.

While the Department is required to estimate costs and cost savings associated with the final regulations, cost considerations have not driven the Department's legal and policy approach as to how best to ensure that the benefits of Title IX extend to all persons participating in education programs or activities. With respect to sexual harassment covered by Title IX, the final regulations require recipients to take accusations seriously and deal with cases of sexual misconduct, not avoid them. Regardless of whether a recipient wishes to dodge responsibility (to avoid reputational, financial, or other perceived institutional harms), recipients are obligated to comply with all Title IX regulations and the Department will vigorously enforce Title IX obligations. The Department disagrees with a commenter's contention that the final regulations enable school administrators to sexually abuse students; § 106.30 defines Title IX sexual harassment to include quid pro quo harassment by any recipient's employee, and includes sexual assault perpetrated by any individual whether the perpetrator is an employee or not. Indeed, if a school administrator engages in any conduct on the basis of sex that is described in § 106.30, then the recipient must respond promptly whenever any elementary or secondary school employee (or any school, college, or university Title IX Coordinator) has notice of the conduct.

The Department believes that the framework in these final regulations for responding to Title IX sexual harassment effectuates the non-discrimination mandate of Title IX for the protection and benefit of all persons in recipients' education programs and activities and disagrees that the final regulations leave institutions vulnerable to lawsuits. A judicially implied right of private action exists under Title IX, and other Federal and State laws permit lawsuits against schools, but the Department's charge and focus is to administratively enforce Title IX, not to address the potential for lawsuits against institutions. However, by adapting for administrative purposes the general framework used by the Supreme Court for addressing Title IX sexual harassment (while adapting that framework for administrative enforcement) and prescribing a grievance process rooted in due process principles for resolving allegations, the Department believes that these final regulations may have the ancillary benefit of decreasing litigation.

The Department notes that § 106.6(d) expressly addresses the intersection

between the final regulations and constitutional rights, stating that nothing in these final regulations requires a recipient to restrict rights guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution. This would include the rights to equal protection and substantive due process referenced by commenters concerned that the proposed rules violate those constitutional safeguards. The Department does not rely on the laws regarding rape and women's rights in other countries to inform the Department's Title IX regulations, but believes that Title IX's guarantee of non-discrimination on the basis of sex in education programs or activities represents a powerful statement of the importance of sex equality in the United States, and that these final regulations effectuate and advance Title IX's non-discrimination mandate by recognizing

for the first time in the Department's regulations sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination.

Changes: We have revised the definition of "sexual harassment" in § 106.30 to include dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking as those offenses are defined under VAWA, amending the Clery Act. We have revised § 106.44(a) to require recipients to offer supportive measures to each complainant.

Comments: A few commenters argued that any use of personal blogs as a citation or source in Federal regulation is inappropriate and that using a blog as a source in a footnote in the NPRM (for example, a blog maintained by K.C. Johnson, co-author of the book Campus Rape Frenzy), is inappropriate and unprofessional; one commenter contested the accuracy of Professor Johnson's compilation on that blog of information regarding lawsuits filed against institutions relating to Title IX campus proceedings. Commenters argued that although people's personal experiences can be highly valuable, using a blog as a citation in rulemaking does not reflect evidence-based practice. Similarly, a few commenters criticized the Department's footnote reference in the NPRM to Laura Kipnis's book Unwanted Advances as, among things, evidence that the Department's sources listed in the NPRM suggest undue engagement with materials that promote pernicious gender stereotypes.

A few commenters referenced media reports of statements made by President Trump, Secretary DeVos, and former Acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights Candice Jackson as indications that the Department approached the NPRM with a motive of gender bias against women. A few commenters asserted that the Department's footnote citations in the NPRM suggest systematic inattention to the intersection of race and gender relating to Title IX and urged the Department to adopt an intersectional approach because failure to pay attention to how gender interacts with other social identities will result in a failure to effectively meet the Department's goal that all students are able to pursue their educations in federally-funded institutions free from sex discrimination.

Discussion: The source citations in the NPRM demonstrate a range of perspectives about Title IX sexual harassment and proceedings including views both supportive and critical of the status quo approach to campus sexual harassment, all of which the Department considered in preparing the NPRM. The

Department believes that whether commenters are correct or not in characterizing certain NPRM footnoted references as personal opinions instead of case studies, the views expressed in the NPRM references warranted consideration. Similarly, the Department has reviewed and considered the views, perspectives, experiences, opinions, information, analyses, and data expressed in public comments, and the wide range of feedback is beneficial as the Department considers the most appropriate ways in which to regulate recipients' responses to sexual harassment under Title IX in schools, colleges, and universities.

The Department maintains that no reported statement on the part of the President, Secretary, or former Acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights suggests bias against women. The Department proceeded with the NPRM, and the final regulations, motivated by the commitment to the "non-negotiable principles" of Title IX regulations that Secretary DeVos stated in a speech about Title IX: the right of every survivor to be taken seriously and the right of every person accused to know that guilt is not predetermined.[295]

---

[295] Betsy DeVos, U.S. Sec'y of Education, Prepared Remarks on Title IX Enforcement (Sept. 7, 2017), https://www.ed.gov/news/speeches/secretary-devos-prepared-remarks-title-ix-enforcement.

The Department appreciates that some commenters made assertions that the impact of sexual harassment, and the impact of lack of due process procedures, may differ across demographic groups based on sex, race, and the intersection of sex and race (as well as other characteristics such as disability status, sexual orientation, and gender identity). The Department emphasizes that these final regulations apply to all individuals reporting, or accused of, Title IX sexual harassment, irrespective of race or other demographic characteristics. The Department believes that these final regulations provide the best balance to supportively, fairly, and accurately address allegations of sexual harassment for the benefit of every individual.

Changes: None.

Comments: Some commenters argued that the proposed regulations will cause social discord and make campuses unsafe because survivors will underreport and rates of sexual harassment will increase. Many commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules will discourage or have a chilling effect on reporting sexual harassment and violence, that reporting rates are already low, that the proposed rules would make things worse, and that schools could use the proposed rules to discourage students from reporting against faculty or staff in order to maintain the school's reputation. Commenters contended that this will adversely impact the ability of victims, especially from marginalized populations, to access their education.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that these final regulations will cause

social discord or make campuses unsafe, because a predictable, consistent set of rules for when and how a recipient must respond to sexual harassment increases the likelihood that students and employees know that sexual harassment allegations will be responded to promptly, supportively, and fairly. The Department acknowledges data showing that reporting rates are lower than prevalence rates with respect to sexual harassment, including sexual violence, but disagrees that the final regulations will discourage or chill reporting. In response to commenters' concerns that students need greater clarity and ease of reporting, the final regulations provide that a report to any Title IX Coordinator, or any elementary or secondary school employee, will obligate the school to respond,[296] require recipients to prominently display the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator on recipients' websites,[297] and specify that any person (i.e., the complainant or any third party) may report sexual harassment by using the Title IX Coordinator's listed contact information, and that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address (or by mail to the listed office address).[298] Recipients must respond by offering the complainant supportive measures, regardless of whether the complainant also files a formal complaint or otherwise participates in a grievance process.[299] Such supportive measures are designed precisely to help complainants preserve equal access to their education.

---

[296] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge").
[297] Section 106.8(b).

---

[298] Section 106.8(a).
[299] Section 106.44(a).

Changes: The Department has expanded the definition of "actual knowledge" in § 106.30 to include reports to any elementary or secondary school employee. We have revised § 106.8 to require recipients to prominently display on recipient websites the contact information for the recipient's Title IX Coordinator, and to state that any person may report sexual harassment by using the Title IX Coordinator's listed contact information, and that reports may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or e-mail address, or by mailing to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator. We have revised § 106.44(a) to require recipients to offer supportive measures to every complainant whether or not a formal complaint is filed.

Comments: Many commenters stated that student survivors often rely on their academic institutions to allow them some justice and protection from their assailant and that the provisions provided by Title IX, as enforced under the Department's withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and withdrawn 2014 Q&A, are important for the continued safety of student victims during and after assault and harassment investigations.

One commenter shared the commenter's own research showing that one of the benefits of the post-2011 Dear Colleague Letter era is that campuses have prioritized fairness and due process, creating more robust investigative and adjudicative procedures that value neutrality and balance the rights of claimants and respondents. Overall, campus administrators that this commenter has interviewed and surveyed say that the attention to Title IX has led to vast improvements on their campuses. Some commenters urged the Department to codify the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter.

Other commenters asserted that research suggests that few accused

students face serious sanctions like expulsion. Commenters referred to a study that found up to 25 percent of respondents were expelled for being found responsible of sexual assault prior to the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter,[300] while a media outlet reported that data obtained under the Freedom of Information Act showed that among 100 institutions of higher education and 478 sanctions for sexual assault issued between 2012 and 2013, only 12 percent of those sanctions were expulsions.[301] Commenters argued that studies suggest that campuses with strong protections for victims also have the strongest protections for due process, such that campuses that have devoted the most time and resources to addressing campus sexual assault are, in fact, protecting due process. Inconsistent implementation, commenters argued, is not a reason to change the regulations.

---

[300] Commenters cited: Kristen Lombardi, A Lack of Consequences for Sexual Assault, THE CENTER FOR PUBLIC INTEGRITY (Feb. 24, 2010).

---

[301] Commenters cited: Nick Anderson, Colleges often reluctant to expel for sexual violence, THE WASHINGTON POST (Dec. 15, 2014).

Other commenters argued that there is insufficient factual support for the Department's claim that educational institutions were confused about their legal obligations under previous guidance. They noted that the Department did not commission any research or study to specifically analyze schools' understanding of their legal obligation or determine whether there were any areas in which administrators were confused about their responsibilities. Commenters argued that under the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, compliance with expectations under Title IX significantly increased in nearly every major category including compliance with important aspects of due process, such as providing notice and procedural information to students participating in campus sexual violence proceedings. Commenters stated that under the prior administration, the pendulum did not swing "too far" in favor of victims, but instead was placed exactly where it should have been for a population that had previously been dismissed, ignored, and disenfranchised. Commenters argued that any issues with the Title IX grievance process are the result of individual colleges or Title IX Coordinators not following the process correctly and not due to issues with the process itself. Commenters argued that the solution should be additional resources and training for colleges rather than revising the process to favor respondents and make it more difficult for victims to report thereby increasing the already abysmal rate of under reporting.

Commenters asserted that the current Title IX regulations and withdrawn guidance have been supported by universities and the public. Commenters pointed out that when the Department called for public comment on Department regulations in 2017 before withdrawing the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, 12,035 comments were filed: 99 percent (11,893) were in support of Title IX and 96 percent of them explicitly supported the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter. When all of the individual comments as well as the petitions and jointly-signed comments are included, commenters stated that 60,796 expressions of support were filed by the public, and 137 comments were in opposition. Commenters requested that the Department build off the framework of the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter for a fair and compassionate method of reporting and adjudication so that both the victims and the accused are treated justly. Many of these commenters argued that due process is important, yet due process rights were always important in previous Department guidance and certainly are best practice. If the Department moves forward with its plans to revise the regulations regarding sexual assault and harassment, commenters argued the Department would be knowingly encouraging a continued culture of rape on campuses all across our country.

Discussion: The Department agrees with commenters who noted that many student survivors rely on their academic institutions to provide justice and protection from their assailant; for these reasons, the final regulations require recipients to offer supportive measures to every complainant whether or not a grievance process is pending, and prescribe a grievance process under which complainants and respondents are treated fairly and under which a victim of sexual harassment must be provided with remedies designed to restore or preserve the victim's equal access to education. The Department recognizes that educational institutions

largely have strived in good faith over the last several years to provide meaningful support for complainants while applying grievance procedures fairly and that many institutions have made improvements in their Title IX compliance over the past several years. However, the Department disagrees with commenters' assertions that the only deficiency with Department guidance (including withdrawn guidance such as the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and current guidance such as the 2001 Guidance) was inconsistent implementation. Because guidance documents do not have the force and effect of law, the Department's Title IX guidance could not impose legally binding obligations on recipients. By following the regulatory process, the Department through these final regulations ensures that students and employees can better hold their schools, colleges, and universities responsible for legally binding obligations with respect to sexual harassment allegations. The Department appreciates that members of the public expressed support for the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter in 2017; however, the need for regulations to replace mere guidance on a subject as serious as sexual harassment weighed in favor of undertaking the rulemaking process to develop these final regulations. The Department believes that issuing regulations rather than guidance brings clarity, permanence, and accountability to Title IX enforcement. As discussed in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section and the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the approach in these final regulations is similar in some ways, and different in other ways, from Department guidance, including the 1997 Guidance, the 2001 Guidance, the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, the withdrawn 2014 Q&A, and the 2017 Q&A. The Department believes that these final regulations provide protections for complainants while ensuring that investigations and adjudications of sexual harassment are handled in a grievance process designed to impartially evaluate all relevant evidence so that determinations regarding responsibility are accurate and reliable, ensuring that victims of sexual harassment receive justice in the form of remedies.

The Department disputes that the approach in these final regulations governing recipient responses to sexual harassment in any way encourages a culture of rape; to the contrary, the Department specifically included sexual assault in the definition of Title IX sexual harassment to ensure no confusion would exist as to whether even a single instance of rape is tolerable under Title IX.

Changes: None.

Comments: The Department received many comments opposing the proposed rules, including personal experiences shared by: survivors; parents, relatives, and friends of survivors; students; educators (current and retired); medical and mental health professionals who treat and work with sexual assault victims; Title IX college officials; law enforcement officials; business owners; religious figures; and commenters who have been accused of sexual assault, who recounted the devastating effects of sexual assault on survivors, stated their opposition to the proposed rules, and affirmed their belief the proposed rules will retraumatize victims, worsen Title IX protections, and embolden predators by making schools less safe. Some commenters believed that if a student is being harassed in the classroom, the proposed rules would lessen the teacher's ability to protect the class effectively.

Commenters also stated that the proposed rules failed to acknowledge how traumatic experiences like sexual violence can impact an individual's neurobiological and physiological functioning. Such commenters asserted that the brain processes traumatic experiences differently than day-to-day, non-threatening experiences; often physiological reactions, emotional responses, and somatic memories react at different times in different parts of the brain, resulting in a non-linear recall (or lack of recall at all) of the traumatic event. Other commenters argued that trauma-informed approaches result in sexual harassment investigations and adjudications that prejudge the facts and bias proceedings in favor of complainants.

Commenters viewed the proposed rules as allowing schools to intervene only when they deem the abuse is pervasive and severe enough, leaving many survivors in the position to prove their abuse is worthy of their school's attention and action. These commenters asserted that Title IX needs reformation and greater enforcement so that survivors have more recourse in their healing experiences, in addition to preventing these incidents from occurring in the first place, as this is a deeply cultural and systemic problem. Some commenters asserted that those who start these harassing behaviors at a young age will escalate such behaviors in future years, and, as such, the proposed rules would negatively impact the behaviors of our future generations by curtailing punishment and reporting at an early age.

Some commenters stated that, through the proposed rules, many sexual assaults would not be covered by Title IX, and survivors, especially students of color, would not feel protected against possible discrimination and retaliation should they consider disclosure of sexual crimes against them. These commenters argued this would impact all future statistical reporting on nationwide sexual assaults and harassment, thereby affecting funding sources that support survivors of sexual assault that rely on accurate data collection.

Another commenter asserted that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has concluded that while risk factors do not cause sexual violence they are associated with a greater likelihood of perpetration, and that "weak community sanctions against sexual violence perpetrators" was a risk factor at the community level while

"weak laws and policies related to sexual violence and gender equity" is a risk factor at the societal level.[302] The commenter argued that the perception and reality is that the proposed rules will weaken efforts to hold perpetrators accountable and increase the likelihood of sexual violence perpetration.

---

[302] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, Division of Violence Prevention, Sexual Violence, Risk and Protective Factors, https://www.cdc.gov/violenceprevention/sexualviolence/riskprotectivefactors.html (last reviewed by the CDC on Jan. 17, 2020); Jenny Dills et al., Continuing the Dialogue: Learning from the Past and Looking to the Future of Intimate Partner Violence and Sexual Violence Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (2019).

Discussion: The Department appreciates that commenters of myriad backgrounds and experiences emphasized the devastating effects of sexual assault on survivors and the need for strong Title IX protections that do not retraumatize victims. The Department believes that the final regulations provide victims with strong protections from sexual harassment under Title IX and set clear expectations for when and how a school must respond to restore or preserve complainants' equal educational access. Nothing in the final regulations reduces or limits the ability of a teacher to respond to classroom behavior. If the in-class behavior constitutes Title IX sexual harassment, the school is responsible for responding promptly without deliberate indifference, including offering appropriate supportive measures to the complainant, which may include separating the complainant from the respondent, counseling the respondent about appropriate behavior, and taking other actions that meet the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures" while a grievance process resolves any factual issues about the sexual harassment incident. If the in-class behavior does not constitute Title IX sexual harassment (for example, because the conduct is not severe, or is not pervasive), then the final regulations do not apply and do not affect a decision made by the teacher as to how best to discipline the offending student or keep order in the classroom.

The Department understands from anecdotal evidence and research studies that sexual violence is a traumatic experience for survivors. The Department is aware that the

neurobiology of trauma and the impact of trauma on a survivor's neurobiological functioning is a developing field of study with application to the way in which investigators of sexual violence offenses interact with victims in criminal justice systems and campus sexual misconduct proceedings.[303] The final

[303] E.g., Jeffrey J. Nolan, Fair, Equitable Trauma-Informed Investigation Training (Holland & Knight updated July 19, 2019) (white paper summarizing trauma-informed approaches to sexual misconduct investigations, identifying scientific and media support and opposition to such approaches, and cautioning institutions to apply trauma-informed approaches carefully to ensure impartial investigations).

regulations require impartiality in investigations and emphasize the truth-seeking function of a grievance process. The Department wishes to emphasize that treating all parties with dignity, respect, and sensitivity without bias, prejudice, or stereotypes infecting interactions with parties fosters impartiality and truth-seeking. Further, the final regulations contain provisions specifically intended to take into account that complainants may be suffering results of trauma; for instance, § 106.44(a) has been revised to require that recipients promptly offer supportive measures in response to each complainant and inform each complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without filing a formal complaint. To protect traumatized complainants from facing the respondent in person, cross-

examination in live hearings held by postsecondary institutions must never involve parties personally questioning each other, and at a party's request, the live hearing must occur with the parties in separate rooms with technology enabling participants to see and hear each other.[304]

The Department disagrees that the final regulations make survivors prove

---

[304] Section 106.45(b)(6)(i).

their abuse is worthy of attention or action, because the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment includes sexual assault, domestic violence, dating violence, and stalking. Such abuse jeopardizes a complainant's equal educational access and is not subject to scrutiny or question as to whether such abuse is worthy of a recipient's response. Title IX coverage of sexual assault requires that the recipient have actual knowledge that the incident occurred in the recipient's education program or activity against a person in the United States. We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" to include notice to any elementary and secondary school employee, and to expressly include a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a) (which, in turn, requires a recipient to notify its educational community of the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator and allows any person to report using that contact information, whether or not the person who reports is the alleged victim or a third party). We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "complainant" to mean any individual "who is alleged to be the victim" of sexual harassment, to clarify that a recipient must offer supportive measures to any person alleged to be the victim, even if the complainant is not the person who made the report of sexual harassment. We have revised § 106.44(a) to require the Title IX Coordinator promptly to contact a complainant to discuss supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process and option of filing a formal complaint. Within the scope of Title IX's reach, no sexual assault needs to remain unaddressed.

The Department understands that sexual harassment occurs throughout society and not just in educational environments, that data support the proposition that harassing behavior can escalate if left unaddressed, and that prevention of sexual harassment incidents before they occur is a worthy and desirable goal. The final regulations

describe the Title IX legal obligations to which the Department will vigorously hold schools, colleges, and universities accountable in responding to sexual harassment incidents. Identifying the root causes and reducing the prevalence of sexual harassment across our Nation's schools and campuses remains within the province of schools, colleges, universities, advocates, and experts.

In response to commenters' concerns that many complainants fear retaliation for reporting sexual crimes, the final regulations add § 106.71 expressly prohibiting retaliation, which protects complainants (and respondents and witnesses) regardless of race, ethnicity, or other characteristic. The Department intends for complainants to understand that their right to report under Title IX (including the right to participate or refuse to participate in a grievance process) is protected against retaliation. The Department is aware that nationwide data regarding the prevalence and reporting rates of sexual assault is challenging to assess, but does not believe that these final regulations will impact the accuracy of such data collection efforts.

The Department does not dispute the proposition that weak sanctions against sexual violence perpetrators and weak laws and policies related to sexual violence and sex equality are associated with a greater likelihood of perpetration. The Department believes that Title IX is a strong law, and that these final regulations constitute strong policy, standing against sexual violence and aiming to remedy the effects of sexual violence in education programs and activities. Because Title IX is a civil rights law concerned with equal educational access, these final regulations do not require or prescribe disciplinary sanctions. The Department's charge under Title IX is to preserve victims' equal access to access, leaving discipline decisions within the discretion of recipients.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" to include notice to any elementary and secondary school employee, and to expressly include a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a). We have revised § 106.8(a) to expressly allow any person (whether the alleged victim, or a third party) to report sexual harassment using the contact information that must be listed for the Title IX Coordinator. We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "complainant" to mean any individual "who is alleged to be the victim" of sexual harassment. We have revised § 106.44(a) to require the Title IX Coordinator promptly to contact a complainant to discuss supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process and option of filing a formal complaint. We have also added § 106.71, prohibiting retaliation against individuals exercising rights under Title IX including participating or refusing to participate in a Title IX grievance process.

Comments: Some commenters suggested alternate approaches to the proposed rules or offered alternative practices. For example, commenters suggested: zero-tolerance policies; requiring schools to install cameras in public or shared spaces on campus to discourage sexual harassment, provide proof and greater fairness for all parties involved, and decrease the cost and time spent in such cases; requiring recipients to provide an accounting of all funds used to comply with Title IX; creating Federal or State-individualized written protocols with directions on interviewing parties in Title IX investigations; requiring schools to adopt broader harassment policies that allow complaints to be addressed by an independent board with parent, educational, medical or law enforcement professionals, and peers with appeal to a second board; providing increased funding and staff for Title IX programs; third-party monitoring of Title IX compliance; and requiring universities to provide more thorough reports on gender-based violence in their systems. Some commenters emphasized the importance of prevention practices, suggesting various approaches such as: adopting the prevention measures in the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter; setting incentives to reward schools for fewer Title IX cases; and curtailing schools' use of confidential sexual harassment settlement payments that hide or erase evidence of harassment and protect predatory behavior.

Other commenters requested more training for organizations such as fraternities, arguing that sexual assault statistics would improve by enforcing better standards of behavior at fraternities. Commenters proposed the Department should rate schools on their compliance to Title IX standards similar to FIRE's "Spotlight on Due Process"[305] or the Human Rights Campaign's Equality Index.[306] Commenters proposed

---

[305] Commenters cited: Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE), Spotlight on Due Process 2018 (2018), https://www.thefire.org/resources/spotlight/due-process-reports/due-process-report-2018/#top.

[306] Commenters referenced how the Human Rights Campaign (HRC) rates workplaces and health care providers on an Equality Index, for example the Corporate Equality Index Archive, https://www.hrc.org/resources/corporate-equality-index-archives.

that any new rule should build upon, rather than abrogate, the requirements of the Campus Sex Crimes Prevention Act of 2000, which requires institutions of higher education to advise the campus community where it can obtain information about sex offenders provided by the State. One commenter urged the Department to add into the final regulations the statutory exemptions from the Title IX non- discrimination mandate found in the Title IX statute including Boys State/Nation or Girls State/Nation conferences (20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(7)); father-son or mother-daughter activities at educational institutions (20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(8)); and institution of higher education scholarship awards in "beauty" pageants (20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(9)).

Another commenter requested that the final regulations commit to ensuring culturally-sensitive services for students of color, who experience higher rates of sexual violence and more barriers to reporting, to help make prevention and support more effective. Commenters proposed to have each educational institution follow a guideline when employing staff from "Women Centers" as Title IX Coordinators and staff in Title IX offices, and as student residence hall directors, to ensure that there is fair judgment in every case of sexual misconduct that occurs. Commenters argued that justice for all could be served by less press coverage of high-profile incidents and that investigations should be kept private until all facts are gathered, preserving the reputation of all involved.

Discussion: The Department appreciates and has considered the numerous approaches suggested by commenters, some of whom urged the Department to take additional measures and others who desired alternatives to the proposed rules.

The Department has determined, in light of the Supreme Court's framework for responding to Title IX sexual harassment and extensive stakeholder feedback concerning those procedures most needed to improve the consistency, fairness, and accuracy of

Title IX investigations and adjudications, that the final regulations reasonably and appropriately obligate recipients to respond supportively and resolve allegations fairly without encroaching on recipients' discretion to control their internal affairs (including academic, administrative, and disciplinary decisions). Many of the commenters' suggestions for additions or alternatives to the final regulations concern subjects that lie within recipients' discretion and it may be possible for recipients to adopt them while also complying with these final regulations. To the extent that the commenters' suggestions require action by the Department, we decline to implement or require those practices, in the interest of preserving recipients' flexibility and retaining the focus of these regulations on prescribing recipient responses to Title

IX sexual harassment. The Department cannot enforce Title IX in a manner that requires recipients to restrict any rights protected under the First Amendment, including freedom of the press.[307] We have added § 106.71 which prohibits retaliation against an individual for the purpose of interfering with the exercise of Title IX rights. Section 106.71(a) requires recipients to keep confidential

---

[307] See Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U.S. 244 (1963); Truax v. Raich, 239 U.S. 33, 38 (1915); § 106.6(d)(1).

the identity of any individual who has made a report or complaint of sex discrimination, including any individual who has made a report or filed a formal complaint of sexual harassment, any complainant, any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of sex discrimination, any respondent, and any witness (unless permitted by FERPA, or required under law, or as necessary to conduct proceedings under Title IX), and § 106.71(b) states that exercise of rights protected by the First Amendment is not retaliation. Section 106.30 defining "supportive measures" instructs recipients to keep confidential the provision of supportive measures except as necessary to provide the supportive measures. These provisions are intended to protect the confidentiality of complainants, respondents, and witnesses during a

Title IX process, subject to the recipient's ability to meet its Title IX obligations consistent with constitutional protections.

The statutory exceptions to Title IX mentioned by at least one commenter (i.e., Boys State or Girls' State conferences, father-son or mother-daughter activities, certain "beauty" pageant scholarships) have full force and effect by virtue of their express inclusion in 20 U.S.C. 1681(a), and the Department declines to repeat those exemptions in these final regulations, which mainly address a recipient's response to sexual harassment.

Changes: We have added § 106.71 which prohibits retaliation against an individual for the purpose of interfering with the exercise of Title IX rights. Section 106.71(a) requires recipients to keep confidential the identity of any individual who has made a report or complaint of sex discrimination, including any individual who has made a report or filed a formal complaint of sexual harassment, any complainant, any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of sex discrimination, any respondent, and any witness (unless permitted by FERPA, or required under law, or as necessary to conduct proceedings under Title IX), and §

106.71(b) states that exercise of rights protected by the First Amendment is not retaliation.

Comments: Some commenters suggested broadening the scope of the proposed rules to address other issues, for example: providing guidance on pregnancy and parenting obligations under Title IX; evaluating coverage of fraternities and sororities under Title IX; funding to protect women and young adults on campus; girls losing access to sports, academic, and vocational programs as schools choose to save money by cutting girls' programs; investigating whether speech and conduct codes impose a disparate impact on men; covering other forms of harassment (e.g., race, age, national origin).

A few commenters expressed concern about the lack of clarity for cases alleging harassment on multiple grounds, such as whether the proposed provisions regarding mandatory dismissal, the clear and convincing evidence standard, interim remedies, and cross-examination would apply to the non-sex allegations. A few commenters requested that the final regulations address student harassment of staff and faculty by changing

“employee” or “student” to “member” in the final regulations.

Discussion: The NPRM focused on the problem of recipient responses to sexual harassment, and the scope of matters addressed by the final regulations is defined by the subjects presented in the NPRM. Therefore, the Department declines to address other topics outside of this original scope, such as pregnancy, parenting, or athletics under Title IX, coverage of Title IX to fraternities and sororities, whether speech codes discriminate based on sex, funding intended to protect women or young adults on campus, funding cuts to girls' programs by recipients, or forms of harassment other than sexual harassment. The Department notes that inquiries about the application of Title IX to particular organizations may be referred to the organization's Title IX

Coordinator or to the Assistant Secretary as indicated in § 106.8(b)(1), and that complaints alleging sex discrimination that does not constitute sexual harassment may be referred to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator for handling under the equitable grievance procedures that recipients must adopt under § 106.8(c).

The Department appreciates commenters' questions regarding the handling of allegations that involve sexual harassment as well as harassment based on race (or on a basis other than sex) and appreciates the opportunity to clarify that the response obligations in § 106.44 and the grievance process in § 106.45 apply only to allegations of Title IX sexual harassment; the final regulations impose no new obligations or requirements with respect to non-Title IX

sexual harassment and do not alter existing regulations under civil rights laws such as Title VI (discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin) or regulations under disability laws such as IDEA, Section 504, or ADA. The Department will continue to enforce regulations under those laws and recipients must comply with all regulations that apply to a particular allegation of discrimination (including allegations of harassment on multiple bases) accordingly.

The Department declines to change the words "students" and "employees" to "members" in the final regulations, because doing so could create inconsistencies with the current regulations, and the meaning of the term "member" is not readily understood by reference to other State and Federal laws, in the way that "employee" is.

However, the Department appreciates the opportunity to reiterate that the definitions of "complainant"[308] and "respondent"[309] do not restrict either party to being a student or employee, and, therefore, the final regulations do apply to allegations that an employee was sexually harassed by a student.

Changes: None.

---

[308] Section 106.30 (Complainant "means an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment.").
[309] Section 106.30 (Respondent "means an individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment.").

Comments: Commenters expressed concern that there is no point in revising a rule without enforcement and proposed that the Department should use its enforcement authority to sanction non-compliance of Title IX, since no school has ever had its funding withdrawn. Other commenters asked the Department to disallow private rights of action and the payment of attorney fees, damages, or costs. Other commenters proposed that the Department revise OCR's existing Case Processing Manual to: eliminate biases toward specific groups when handling charges of rape, sexual harassment, and assault; protect undocumented students who file Title IX complaints with OCR so they do not have to fear doing so would lead to their deportation; avoid psychological bias by OCR investigators; and revise the 180-day complaint timeliness requirement to allow for complaints to be filed after the 180-day filing time frame with OCR for allegations involving sexual misconduct, under certain conditions. Other commenters proposed adding a provision that expressly releases institutions that are currently subject to settlement agreements with the Department from provisions that set forth ongoing obligations that are inconsistent with the new regulations.

Discussion: The Department agrees with commenters who asserted that administrative enforcement of Title IX obligations is vital to the protection of students' and employees' civil rights, and the Department will vigorously enforce the final regulations. Nothing in these final regulations alters the existing statutory and regulatory framework under which the Department exercises its administrative authority to take enforcement actions against recipients for non-compliance with Title IX including the circumstances under which a recipient's Federal financial assistance may be terminated. The Department does not have authority or ability to affect the existence of judicially-implied private rights of action under Title IX or the remedies available through such private lawsuits.

Changes to OCR's Case Processing Manual are outside the scope of this rulemaking process. The Department will not enforce the final regulations retroactively; whether prospective enforcement of the final regulations will impact any existing resolution agreements between recipients and OCR requires examination of the circumstances of those resolution agreements. The Department will provide technical assistance to recipients with questions about the enforceability of existing resolution agreements.

Changes: None.

Comments: Some commenters expressed general support for Title IX without reference to sexual misconduct or the proposed rules, for example, asserting: that Title IX is important to rebuilding the country's education system; that Title IX has made great strides for equality in girls' sports; and that Title IX has helped equalize the power imbalance between women and men. Other commenters expressed opposition to Title IX generally, for example, arguing: that Title IX has become a war on men, is biased against men, has set up kangaroo courts against males, and has fed into destructive identity politics; that women and men are different and men need to be men; and that Title IX is no longer needed because women outperform men in several areas (e.g., college admissions).

A number of commenters expressed support for equality and non-discrimination, or support for safe schools, public education, environments conducive to learning, schools operating in loco parentis, the well-being of children, protection of sex workers, fighting rape culture, respect for everyone's feelings, or anti-bullying, without expressing a position on the proposed rules. Without expressing a view about the proposed rules, some commenters expressed concern about a young woman murdered at a prominent university, and others expressed concern that it is too easy to get away with rape already due to "date rape" drugs, online dating sites, and powerful networks of people with bad intentions helping cover up incidents. A few commenters asked rhetorical questions such as: Does the government as "Protector of Citizens" devalue sexual assaults in educational institutions? Three million college students will be sexually assaulted this year: What are you going to do about it? What if something happened to your child?

A few commenters suggested changes to other agencies' rules, such as one suggestion that the Department of Labor employment discrimination rules should address the loss of jobs for female coaches due to gender-separate sports teams.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the range of opinions expressed by commenters on the general impact of Title IX. The Department believes that

Title IX has improved educational access for millions of students since its enactment decades ago, and believes that these final regulations continue the national effort to make Title IX's non-discrimination mandate a meaningful reality for all students. The Department also appreciates commenters' viewpoints about topics related to gender equality and sexual abuse unrelated to the proposed rules. As an executive branch agency of the Federal government charged with enforcing Title IX, the Department believes that sexual assaults in education programs or activities warrant the extensive attention and concern demonstrated by the obligations set forth in these final regulations and that these final regulations will provide millions of college (and elementary and secondary school) students with clarity about what to expect from their educational institutions in response to any incident of sexual assault or other sexual harassment that constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX.

Comments regarding other agencies' regulations are outside the scope of this rulemaking process and the Department's jurisdiction.

The Department notes that for comments submitted with no

substantive text, names of survivor advocacy organizations, or pictures or graphics depicting, e.g., feminist icons, protest marches featuring cardboard signs with slogans such as "We Stand With Survivors" or "Hands Off IX," and similar depictions, the Department has considered the viewpoints that such pictures, graphics, and slogans appear to convey.

Changes: None.

Commonly Cited Sources

In explaining opposition to many provisions of the NPRM (most commonly, use of the Supreme Court's framework to address sexual harassment, i.e., the definition of sexual harassment, the actual knowledge requirement, the deliberate indifference standard, the education program or activity and "against a person in the U.S." jurisdictional limitations, and

aspects of the grievance process, e.g., permitting a clear and convincing evidence standard, live hearings with cross-examination in postsecondary institutions, presumption of the respondent's non-responsibility, permitting informal resolution processes such as mediation) commenters urged the Department to consult works in the literature concerning the prevalence and impact of sexual harassment, dynamics of sexual violence, sexual abuse, and violence against women, institutional betrayal, rates of reporting, and reasons why victims do not report sexual harassment. These sources included:

- W. David Allen, The Reporting and Underreporting of Rape, 73 S. ECON. J. 3 (2007).

- The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015) (commonly referred to as "AAU/Westat Report" or "AAU Survey").

- American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011).

- American Association of University Women Educational Foundation, Drawing the Line: Sexual Harassment on Campus (2005).

- Elizabeth A. Armstrong et al., Silence, Power, and Inequality: An Intersectional Approach to Sexual Violence, 44 ANN. REV. OF SOCIOLOGY 99 (2018).

- Claudia Avina & William O'Donohue, Sexual harassment and PTSD: Is sexual harassment diagnosable trauma?, 15 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 1 (2002).

- Victoria Banyard et al., Academic Correlates of Unwanted Sexual Contact, Intercourse, Stalking, and Intimate Partner Violence: An Understudied but Important Consequence for College Students, JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE (2017).

- Kelly Alison Behre, Ensuring Choice and Voice for Campus Sexual Assault Victims: A Call for Victims' Attorneys, 65 DRAKE L. REV. 293 (2017).

- Joseph H. Beitchman et al., A review of the long-term effects of child sexual abuse, 16 CHILD ABUSE & NEGLECT 1 (1992).

- Jennifer J. Berdahl, Harassment based on sex: Protecting social status in the context of gender hierarchy, 32 ACAD. OF MGMT. REV. 641 (2007).

- Jennifer J. Berdahl & Jana Raver, "Sexual harassment," in APA Handbook of Indus. and Organizational Psychol. (Sheldon Zedeck ed., 2010).

- Linda L. Berger et al., Using Feminist Theory to Advance Equal Justice under Law, 17 NEV. L. J. 539 (2017).

- Dana Bolger, Gender Violence Costs: Schools' Financial Obligations Under Title IX, 125 YALE L. J. 2106 (2016).

- Kimberly H. Breitenbecher, Sexual assault on college campuses: Is an ounce of prevention enough?, 9 APPLIED & PREVENTIVE PSYCHOL. 1 (2000).

- Rebecca Campbell & Sheela Raja, The Sexual Assault and Secondary Victimization of Female Veterans: Help-Seeking Experiences with Military and Civilian Social Systems, 29 PSYCHOL. OF WOMEN QUARTERLY 1 (2005).

- Rebecca Campbell, What Really Happened? A Validation Study of Survivors' Help-Seeking Experiences with the Legal and Medical Systems, 20 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2005).

- Rebecca Campbell, The psychological impact of rape victims' experiences with the legal, medical and mental health systems, 63 AM. PSYCHOL. 8 (2008).

- Nancy Chi Cantalupo, Burying Our Heads in the Sand: Lack of Knowledge, Knowledge Avoidance, and the Persistent Problem of Campus Peer Sexual Violence, 43 LOY. UNIV. CHI. L. J. 205 (2011).

- Nancy Chi Cantalupo & William C. Kidder, A Systematic Look at a Serial Problem: Sexual Harassment of Students by University Faculty, 2018 UTAH L. REV. 671 (2018).

- Amy Chmielewski, Defending the Preponderance of the Evidence Standard in College Adjudications of Sexual Assault, 2013 BYU EDUC. & L. J. 143 (2013).

- Colleen Cleere & Steven Jay Lynn, Acknowledged Versus Unacknowledged Sexual Assault Among College Women, 28 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 12 (2013).

- Samantha Craven et al., Sexual grooming of children: Review of literature and theoretical considerations, 12 JOURNAL OF SEXUAL AGGRESSION 3 (2006).

- Andrea Anne Curcio, Institutional Failure, Campus Sexual Assault and Danger in the Dorms:

Regulatory Limits and the Promise of Tort Law, 78 MONT. L. REV. 31 (2017).

- David DeMatteo et al., Sexual Assault on College Campuses: A 50-State Survey of Criminal Sexual Assault Statutes and Their Relevance to Campus Sexual Assault, 21 PSYCHOL., PUB. POL'Y, & L. 3 (2015).

- Dorothy Espelage et al., Longitudinal Associations Among Bullying, Homophobic Teasing, and Sexual Violence Perpetration Among Middle School Students, 30 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 14 (2014).

- Lisa Fedina et al., Campus Sexual Assault: A Systematic Review of

Prevalence Research From 2000 to 2015, 19 TRAUMA, VIOLENCE, & ABUSE 1 (2018).

- Louise F. Fitzgerald et al., Measuring sexual harassment: Theoretical and psychometric advances, 17 BASIC & APPLIED SOCIAL PSYCHOL. 4 (1995).

- Louise F. Fitzgerald et al., The incidence and dimensions of sexual harassment in academia and the workplace, 32 JOURNAL OF VOCATIONAL BEHAVIOR 2 (1988).

- Rachel E. Gartner & Paul R. Sterzing, Gender Microaggressions as a Gateway to Sexual Harassment and Sexual Assault: Expanding the Conceptualization of Youth Sexual Violence, 31 AFFILIA: J. OF WOMEN & SOCIAL WORK 4 (2016).

- Suzanne B. Goldberg, Keep Cross-examination Out of College Sexual-Assault Cases, CHRONICLE OF HIGHER EDUCATION (Jan. 10, 2019).

- Joanne L. Grossman & Deborah L. Brake, A Sharp Backward Turn: Department of Education Proposes to Protect Schools, Not Students, in Cases of Sexual Violence, VERDICT (Nov. 29, 2018).

- Sarah Harsey et al., Perpetrator Responses to Victim Confrontation: DARVO and Victim Self-Blame, 26 JOURNAL OF AGGRESSION, MALTREATMENT & TRAUMA 6 (2017).

- Judith Lewis Herman, The mental health of crime victims: impact of legal intervention, 16 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 2 (2003).

- Heather R. Hlavka, Normalizing Sexual Violence: Young Women Account for Harassment and Abuse, 28 GENDER & SOC'Y 3 (2014).

- Ivy K. Ho et al., Sexual Harassment and Posttraumatic Stress Symptoms among Asian and White Women, 21 JOURNAL OF AGGRESSION, MALTREATMENT & TRAUMA 1 (2012).

- Kathryn J. Holland & Lilia M. Cortina, "It happens to girls all the time": Examining sexual assault

survivors' reasons for not using campus supports, 59 AM. J. OF COMMUNITY PSYCHOL. 1-2 (2017).

- Kathryn J. Holland & Lilia M. Cortina, The evolving landscape of Title IX: Predicting mandatory reporters' responses to sexual assault disclosures, 41 LAW & HUM. BEHAVIOR 5 (2017).

- Wendy Adele Humphrey, "Let's Talk About Sex": Legislating and Educating on the Affirmative Consent Standard, 50 UNIV. OF S.F. L. REV. 1 (2016).

- Irina Iles et al., The unintended consequences of rape disclosure: The effects of disclosure content, listener gender, and year in college on listener's reactions,

JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE (2018).

- Jeffrey S. Jones et al., Why women don't report sexual assault to the police: The influence of psychosocial variables and traumatic injury, 36 JOURNAL OF EMERGENCY MED. 4 (2009).

- Carol E. Jordan et al., An Exploration of Sexual Victimization and Academic Performance Among College Women, 15 TRAUMA, VIOLENCE, & ABUSE 3 (2014).

- Kaiser Family Foundation & The Washington Post, Survey of Current and Recent College Students on Sexual Assault (2015).

- Shamus Khan et al., "I Didn't Want to Be 'That Girl'": The Social Risks of Labeling, Telling, and Reporting Sexual Assault, 5 SOCIOLOGICAL SCI. 432 (2018).

- National Victim Center and Crime Victims Research and Treatment Center, Rape in America: A Report to the Nation (1992).

- Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN), The 2017 National School Climate Survey: The Experiences of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer Youth in Our Nation's Schools (2018).

- Mary P. Koss, The Scope of Rape: Incidence and Prevalence of

Sexual Aggression and Victimization in a National Sample of Higher Education Students, 55 JOURNAL OF CONSULTING & CLINICAL PSYCHOL. 2 (1987).

- Mary P. Koss, "Hidden Rape: Sexual Aggression and Victimization in a National Sample of Students in Higher Education," in Confronting Rape and Sexual Assault 51-69 (M.E. Odom & J. Clay-Warner eds., 1998).

- Christopher Krebs et al., Bureau of Justice Statistics Research and Development Series: Campus Climate Survey Validation Study Final Technical Report (2016).

- Christopher Krebs et al., College Women's Experiences with

Physically Forced, Alcohol- or Other Drug-Enabled, and Drug-Facilitated Sexual Assault Before and Since Entering College, 57 JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 6 (2009).

- Emily Leskinen et al., Gender harassment: Broadening our understanding of sex-based harassment at work, 35 LAW & HUM. BEHAVIOR 1 (2011).

- David Lisak & Paul Miller, Repeat Rape and Multiple Offending Among Undetected Rapists, 17 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2002).

- David Lisak et al., False Allegations of Sexual Assault: An Analysis of Ten Years of Reported

Cases, 16 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 12 (2010).

- Kimberly A. Lonsway et al., False reports: Moving beyond the issue to successfully investigate and prosecute non-stranger sexual assault, 3 THE VOICE 1 (2009).

- Kimberly A. Lonsway & Joanne Archambault, The "justice gap" for sexual assault cases: Future directions for research and reform, 18 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 2 (2012).

- Catharine A. MacKinnon, In Their Hands: Restoring Institutional Liability for Sexual Harassment in Education, 125 YALE L. J. 2038 (2016).

- Shana L. Maier, "I have heard horrible stories . . .": rape victim advocates' perceptions of the revictimization of rape victims by the police and medical system, 14 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 7 (2008).

- Shana L. Maier, The emotional challenges faced by Sexual Assault Nurse Examiners: "ER nursing is stressful on a good day without rape victims", 7 JOURNAL OF FORENSIC NURSING 4 (2011).

- Patricia Yancey Martin, Rape Work: Victims, Gender, and Emotions in Organization and Community Context (Taylor & Francis Group 2005).

- Patricia Yancey Martin, The Rape Prone Culture of Academic

Contexts: Fraternities and Athletics, 30 GENDER & SOC'Y 1 (2016).

- Anne-Marie Mcalinden, Setting 'Em Up': Personal, Familial and Institutional Grooming in the Sexual Abuse of Children, 15 SOCIAL & LEGAL STUD. 3 (2006).

- Elizabeth McDonald & Yvette Tinsley, Use of Alternative Ways of Giving Evidence by Vulnerable Witnesses: Current Proposals, Issues and Challenges, VICTORIA UNIV. OF WELLINGTON L. REV. (July 2, 2012) (forthcoming Victoria University of Wellington Legal Research Paper No. 2/2011).

- Sarah McMahon et al., Measuring Bystander Attitudes and Behavior

to Prevent Sexual Violence, 62 JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 1 (2014).

- Cecilia Mengo & Beverly M. Black, Violence Victimization on a College Campus: Impact on GPA and School Dropout, 18 JOURNAL OF COLL. STUDENT RETENTION: RESEARCH, THEORY & PRACTICE 2 (2015).

- Audrey Miller et al., Stigma-Threat motivated nondisclosure of sexual assault and sexual revictimization: A prospective analysis, 35 PSYCHOL. OF WOMEN QUARTERLY 1 (2011).

- Ted R. Miller et al., Victim Costs of Violent Crime and Resulting

Injuries, 12 HEALTH AFFAIRS 4 (1993).

- Emma Millon et al., Stressful Life Memories Relate to Ruminative Thoughts in Women with Sexual Violence History, Irrespective of PTSD, FRONTIERS IN PSYCHIATRY (Sept. 5, 2018).

- National Association of Student Affairs Administrators in Higher Education (NASPA) & Education Commission of the States, State Legislative Developments on Campus Sexual Violence: Issues in the Context of Safety (2015).

- Charlene L. Muehlenhard, et al., Evaluating the One-in-Five Statistic: Women's Risk of Sexual Assault While in College, 54 THE J. OF SEX RESEARCH 4-5 (2017).

- National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

- Jim Parsons & Tiffany Bergin, The impact of criminal justice involvement on victims' mental health, 23 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 2 (2010).

- Debra Patterson & Rebecca Campbell, Why rape survivors participate in the criminal justice system, 38 JOURNAL OF COMMUNITY PSYCHOL. 2 (2010).

- Cora Peterson et al., Lifetime Economic Burden of Rape Among U.S. Adults, 52 AM. J. OF PREVENTIVE MED. 6 (2017).

- Melissa Platt et al., "A Betrayal Trauma Perspective on Domestic Violence," in Violence Against Women in Families and Relationships 185-207 (Evan Stark & Eve S. Buzawa eds., Greenwood Press 2009).

- Sharyn Potter et al., Long-term impacts of college sexual assaults on women survivors' educational and career attainments, 66 JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 6 (2018).

- Elizabeth Quinlan et al., Enhancing Care and Advocacy for Sexual Assault Survivors on Canadian Campuses, 46 CANADIAN J. OF HIGHER EDUCATION 2 (2016).

- Andrea J. Ritchie, Invisible No More: Police Violence against Black Women and Women of Color (Beacon Press 2017).

- Andrea Roberts et al., Pervasive trauma exposure among US sexual orientation minority adults and risk of posttraumatic stress disorder, 100 AM. J. OF PUB. HEALTH 12 (2010).

- Emily A. Robey-Phillips, Federalism in Campus Sexual Violence: How States Can Protect Their Students When a Trump

Administration Will Not, 29 YALE J. OF L. & FEMINISM 373 (2018).

- Marina N. Rosenthal et al., Still second class: Sexual harassment of graduate students, 40 PSYCHOL. OF WOMEN QUARTERLY 3 (2016).

- Maria Rotundo et al., A Meta-Analytic Review of Gender Differences in Perceptions of Sexual Harassment, 86 JOURNAL OF APPLIED PSYCHOL. 5 (2001).

- Chaira Sabina & Lavina Ho, Campus and college victim responses to sexual assault and dating violence: Disclosure, service utilization, and service provision, 15 TRAUMA, VIOLENCE, & ABUSE 3 (2014).

- Marjorie R. Sable et al., Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault for Women and Men: Perspectives of College Students, 55 AM. COLL. HEALTH 3 (2006).

- Lauren Schroeder, Cracks in the Ivory Tower: How the Campus Sexual Violence Elimination Act Can Protect Students from Sexual Assault, 45 LOY. UNIV. CHI. L. J. 1195 (2014).

- Diana Scully & Joseph Marolla, Convicted rapists' vocabulary of motive: Excuses and justifications, 31 SOCIAL PROBLEMS 5 (1984).

- Charol Shakeshaft, Educator Sexual Misconduct: A Synthesis of Existing Literature (2004)

(prepared for the U.S. Dep't. of Education).

- Tracey J. Shors & Emma Millon, Sexual trauma and the female brain, 41 FRONTIERS IN NEUROENDOCRINOLOGY 87 (2016).

- Carly Parnitzke Smith & Jennifer J. Freyd, Dangerous Safe Havens: Institutional Betrayal Exacerbates Sexual Trauma, 26 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 1 (2013).

- Carly Parnitzke Smith & Jennifer J. Freyd, Institutional betrayal, 69 AM. PSYCHOL. 6 (2014).

- Carly Parnitzke Smith & Jennifer J. Freyd, Insult, then injury: Interpersonal and institutional betrayal linked to health and dissociation, 26 JOURNAL OF AGGRESSION, MALTREATMENT & TRAUMA 10 (2017).

- Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2010-2012 State Report (2017).

- Kathryn M. Stanchi & Jan M. Levine, Gender and Legal Writing: Law Schools' Dirty Little Secrets, 16 BERKELEY WOMEN'S L. J. 3 (2001).

- Kathryn M. Stanchi & Linda L. Berger, "Gender Justice: The Role of Stories and Images," in Metaphor, Narrative and the Law (Michael Hanne & Robert Weisberg eds., Cambridge Univ. Press 2018).

- Kathryn M. Stanchi, Feminist Legal Writing, 39 SAN DIEGO L. REV. 387 (2002).

- Kathryn M. Stanchi, Who Next, the Janitors? A Socio-Feminist Critique of the Status Hierarchy of Law Professors, 73 UNIV. OF MISSOURI-KANSAS L. REV. 2 (2004).

- Tara K. Streng & Akiko Kamimura, Sexual Assault Prevention and Reporting on College Campuses in the US: A Review of Policies and Recommendations, 6 JOURNAL OF EDUCATION & PRACTICE 3 (2015).

- Janet K. Swim et al., Everyday sexism: Evidence for its incidence, nature, and psychological impact from three daily diary studies, 57 JOURNAL OF SOCIAL ISSUES 1 (2001).

- John F. Tedesco & Steven V. Schnell, Children's reactions to sex abuse investigation and litigation, 11 CHILD ABUSE & NEGLECT 2 (1987).

- Bessel A. van der Kolk & Rita Fisler, Dissociation & the fragmentary nature of traumatic memories: Overview & exploratory study, 8 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 4 (1995).

- Bessel A Van Der Kolk, The Body Keeps the Score: Brain, Mind, and Body in the Healing of Trauma (Penguin Books 2014).

- Erica van Roosmalen & Susan A. McDaniel, Sexual harassment in academia: A hazard to women's health, 28 WOMEN & HEALTH 2 (1999).

- Grayson S. Walker, The Evolution and Limits of Title IX Doctrine on Peer Sexual Assault, 45 HARV. C.R.-C.L. L. REV. 95 (2010).

- Wendy Walsh et al., Disclosure and Service Use on a College Campus After an Unwanted Sexual Experience, 11 JOURNAL OF TRAUMA & DISSOCIATION 2 (2010).

- Lavinia M. Weizel, The Process That is Due: Preponderance of the Evidence as the Standard of Proof for University Adjudications of Student-on-Student Sexual Assault Complaints, 53 BOSTON COLL. L. REV. 1613 (2012).

- Nicole Westmarland & Sue Alderson, The Health, Mental Health, and Well-Being Benefits of Rape Crisis Counseling, 28 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 17 (2013).

- Jacqueline M. Wheatcroft et al., Revictimizing the Victim? How Rape Victims Experience the UK Legal System, 4 VICTIMS & OFFENDERS 3 (2009).

- Helen Whittle et al., A Comparison of Victim and Offender Perspectives of Grooming and Sexual Abuse, 36 DEVIANT BEHAVIOR 7 (2015).

- Jacquelyn D. Wiersma-Mosley & James DiLoreto, The Role of Title IX Coordinators on College and University Campuses, 8 BEHAVIORAL SCI. 4 (2018).

- Joyce E. Williams & Karen A. Holmes, The Second Assault: Rape and Public Attitudes (Praeger Publishers 1981).

- Laura C. Wilson & Katherine E. Miller, Meta-Analysis of the Prevalence of Unacknowledged Rape, 17 TRAUMA, VIOLENCE, & ABUSE 2 (2016).

- Kate B Wolitzky-Taylor et al., Reporting rape in a national sample of college women, 59

JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 7 (2011).

- Anne B. Woods et al., The mediation effect of posttraumatic stress disorder symptoms on the relationship of intimate partner violence and IFN-γ levels, 36 AM. J. OF COMMUNITY PSYCHOL. 1-2 (2005).

- Corey R. Yung, Concealing Campus Sexual Assault: An Empirical Examination, 21 PSYCHOL., PUB. POL'Y, & L. 1 (2015).

- Sarah Zydervelt et al., Lawyers' Strategies for Cross-examining Rape Complainants: Have we Moved Beyond the 1950s?, 57 BRITISH J. OF CRIMINOLOGY 3 (2016).

The Department has considered the sources cited to by commenters. For reasons described in this preamble, the Department believes that the final regulations create a predictable framework governing recipients' responses to allegations of sexual harassment in furtherance of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.

Data – Overview

Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies about the prevalence of sexual harassment, the impact of sexual harassment, the cost to victims of sexual harassment, underreporting of sexual harassment, problematic patterns of survivors facing negative stereotypes or being accused of "lying" when reporting sexual harassment, and rates of false accusations. Many commenters pointed to such data and information as part of general opposition to the proposed rules, expressing concern that the proposed rules as a whole would exacerbate the prevalence and negative impact of sexual harassment for all victims and with respect to specific demographic groups. Many commenters cited to such data and information in opposition to specific parts of the proposed rules, most commonly: use of the Supreme Court's framework to address sexual harassment (i.e., the definition of sexual harassment, the actual knowledge requirement, the deliberate indifference standard), the education program or activity and "against a person in the U.S." jurisdictional limitations, and aspects of the grievance process (e.g., permitting a clear and convincing evidence standard, live hearings with cross-examination in postsecondary institutions, presumption of the respondent's non-responsibility, permitting informal resolution processes such as mediation). The Department has carefully considered the data and information presented by commenters with respect to the aforementioned aspects of the final regulations and with respect to the overall approach and framework of the final regulations.

Prevalence Data – Elementary and Secondary Schools

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment against children and adolescents, and in elementary and secondary schools, including as follows:

- Data show that sexual assault is most prevalent among adolescents

as compared to any other group. School was reported as the most common location for this peer-on-peer victimization to occur. Fifty-one percent of high school girls and 26 percent of high school boys experienced adolescent peer-on-peer sexual assault victimization.[310]

[310] Commenters cited: Amy M. Young et al., Adolescents' Experiences of Sexual Assault by Peers: Prevalence and Nature of Victimization Occurring Within and Outside of School, 38 JOURNAL OF YOUTH & ADOLESCENCE 1072 (2009).

- One in four young women experiences sexual assault before the age of 18.[311]
- One study found that ten percent of children were targets of educator sexual misconduct by the time they graduated from high school.[312]
- Nearly half (48 percent) of U.S. students are subject to sexual

---

[311] Commenters cited: Girls, Inc., 2018 Strong, Smart, and Bold outcomes survey report (2018) (citing David Finklehor et al., The lifetime prevalence of child sexual abuse and sexual assault assessed in late adolescence, 55 JOURNAL OF ADOLESCENT HEALTH 3 (2014)).

[312] Commenters cited: Charol Shakeshaft, Educator Sexual Misconduct: A Synthesis of Existing Literature (2004) (prepared for the U.S. Dep't. of Education).

harassment or assault at school before they graduate high school (56 percent of girls and 40 percent of boys).[313] There were at least 17,000 official reports of sexual assaults of K-12 students by their peers between 2011 and 2015.[314] A longitudinal study found that 68 percent of girls and 55 percent of boys surveyed had

[313] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011).
[314] Commenters cited: Robin McDowell et al., Hidden Horror of school sex assaults revealed by AP, ASSOCIATED PRESS (May 1, 2017).

at least one sexual harassment victimization experience in high school.[315] A survey of 2,064 students in grades eight through11 indicated: 83 percent of girls have been sexually harassed; 78 percent of boys have been sexually harassed; 38 percent of the students were harassed by teachers or school employees; 36 percent of school employees or teachers were harassed by students; and 42 percent of school employees or teachers had been harassed by each other.[316]

---

[315] Commenters cited: Dorothy Espelage et al., Longitudinal Associations Among Bullying, Homophobic Teasing, and Sexual Violence Perpetration Among Middle School Students, 30 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 14 (2014).

- One sexual assault study surveyed 18,030 high school students and found that 18.5 percent reported victimization and eight percent reported perpetration in the past year; although females were more likely to report unwanted sexual activities due to feeling pressured, there were no significant sex differences among those reporting physical force or unwanted sexual activities due to alcohol or drug use.[317] In another study in which 18,090 high school students completed a survey, 30 percent disclosed sexual harassment

---

[316] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women Educational Foundation, Hostile Hallways: Bullying Teasing, and Sexual Harassment in School (2001).

[317] Commenters cited: Corrine M. Williams et. al., Victimization and Perpetration of Unwanted Sexual Activities Among High School Students: Frequency and Correlates, 20 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 10 (2014).

victimization (37 percent of females, 21 percent of males) and 8.5 percent reported perpetration (five percent of females, 12 percent of males).[318]

- In one study designed to examine sexual harassment victimization among American middle school youth (grades five through eight), verbal victimization was more frequent than physical victimization

---

[318] Commenters cited: Emily R. Clear et al., Sexual Harassment Victimization and Perpetration Among High School Students, 20 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 10 (2014).

and sexual assault; the types of sexual harassment experienced and the perpetrators varied by sex, race, and grade level; nearly half (43 percent) of middle school students experienced verbal sexual harassment the previous year; 21 percent of middle school students reported having been pinched, touched, or grabbed in a sexual way, 14 percent reported having been the target of sexual rumors, and nine percent had been victimized with sexually explicit graffiti in school locker rooms or bathrooms.[319]

- One study's data reveal that, while boys' violence towards girls comprises a substantial proportion of sexual violence in the middle school population, same-sex violence and

[319] Commenters cited: Dorothy L. Espelage et al., Understanding types, locations, & perpetrators of peer-to-peer sexual harassment in U.S. middle schools: A focus on sex, racial, and grade differences, 71 CHILDREN & YOUTH SERV. REV. 174 (2016).

girls' violence towards boys are also prevalent.[320]

- In the 2010-2011 school year, 36 percent of girls, 24 percent of boys, and 30 percent of all students in grades seven through 12 experienced sexual harassment online.[321]
- Analysis of the Civil Rights Data Collection for 2015-16, with data from

---

[320] Commenters cited: Ethan Levin, Sexual Violence Among Middle School Students: The Effects of Gender and Dating Experience, 32 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 14 (2015).
[321] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011).

96,000 public and public charter P-12 educational institutions including magnet schools, special education schools, alternative schools, and juvenile justice facilities showed that: more than three-fourths (79 percent) of the 48,000 public schools with students in grades seven through 12 disclosed zero reported allegations of harassment or bullying on the basis of sex, showing that students experience far more sexual harassment than schools report.[322]

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects children, adolescents, and students throughout elementary and secondary schools across the country. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the

---

[322] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Schools are Still Underreporting Sexual Harassment and Assault (Nov. 2, 2018), https://www.aauw.org/article/schools-still-underreporting-sexual-harassment-and-assault/.

final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – Postsecondary Institutions

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment in

postsecondary institutions, including as follows:

- One in five college women experience attempted or completed sexual assault in college;[323] some studies state one in four.[324] One in 16 men are sexually assaulted while in college.[325] One poll reported that

---

[323] Commenters cited: Christopher Krebs et al., Bureau of Justice Statistics Research and Development Series: Campus Climate Survey Validation Study Final Technical Report (2016); Lisa Wade, American Hookup: The New Culture of Sex on Campus (W.W. Norton & Co. 2016).
[324] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).
[325] Commenters cited: National Sexual Violence Resource Center: Info and Stats for Journalists, Statistics About Sexual Violence (2015) (citing National Institute of Justice, The Campus Sexual Assault (CSA) Study: Final Report (2007)).

20 percent of women, and five percent of men, are sexually assaulted in college.[326]

- 62 percent of women and 61 percent of men experience sexual harassment during college.[327]
- Among undergraduate students, 23.1 percent of females and 5.4 percent of males experience rape

---

[326] Commenters cited: Kaiser Family Foundation & The Washington Post, Survey of Current and Recent College Students on Sexual Assault (2015).
[327] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women Educational Foundation, Drawing the Line: Sexual Harassment on Campus (2005).

or sexual assault; among graduate and undergraduate students 11.2 percent experience rape or sexual assault through physical force, violence, or incapacitation; 4.2 percent have experienced stalking since entering college.[328]

- More than 50 percent of college sexual assaults occur in August,

[328] Commenters cited: Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN), Campus Sexual Violence: Statistics, https://www.rainn.org/statistics/campus-sexual-violence.

September, October, or November, and students are at an increased risk during the first few months of their first and second semesters in college; 84 percent of the women who reported sexually coercive experiences experienced the incident during their first four semesters on campus.[329]

---

[329] Commenters cited: Matthew Kimble et al., Risk of Unwanted Sex for College Women: Evidence for a Red Zone, 57 JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 3 (2010).

- Seven out of ten rapes are committed by someone known to the victim;[330] for most women victimized by attempted or completed rape, the perpetrator was a boyfriend, ex-boyfriend, classmate, friend, acquaintance, or coworker. [331]

[330] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, National Crime Victimization Survey (2015).
[331] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice, Research Report: The Sexual Victimization of College Women (2000).

- A study showed that 63.3 percent of men at one university who self-reported acts qualifying as rape or attempted rape admitted to committing repeat rapes.[332]
- Of college students in fraternity and sorority life, 48.1 percent of females and 23.6 percent of males have experienced nonconsensual sexual contact, compared with

---

[332] Commenters cited: David Lisak & Paul Miller, Repeat Rape and Multiple Offending Among Undetected Rapists, 17 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2002).

33.1 percent of females and 7.9 percent of males not in fraternity and sorority life.[333]

- Fifty-eight percent of female academic faculty and staff experienced sexual harassment across all U.S. colleges and universities, and one in ten female graduate students at most major research universities reports

---

[333] Commenters cited: Jennifer J. Freyd, The UO Sexual Violence and Institutional Betrayal Surveys: 2014, 2015, and 2015-2016, https://dynamic.uoregon.edu/jjf/campus/.

being sexually harassed by a faculty member.[334]

- Twenty-one to 38 percent of college students experience faculty/staff-perpetrated sexual harassment and 39 to 64.5 percent experience student-perpetrated sexual harassment during their time at their university.[335]

---

[334] Commenters cited: National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

[335] Commenters cited: Marina N. Rosenthal et al., Still second class: Sexual harassment of graduate students, 40 PSYCHOL. OF WOMEN QUARTERLY 3 (2016).

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects students and employees in postsecondary institutions across the country. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold colleges and universities accountable for responding in ways that restore or

preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – Women

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment against girls and women, including as follows:

- Sexual assault disproportionately harms women; 84 percent of sexual assault and rape victims are female.[336] Among females, the highest rate of domestic abuse victimization occurs between the ages of 16-24, ages when someone is most likely to be a high school or college student.[337]

---

[336] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, National Crime Victimization Survey (2017).
[337] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics Factbook: Violence by Intimates (1998).

Among college-aged female homicide victims, 42.9 percent were killed by an intimate partner.[338]

- One out of every six American women has been the victim of an attempted or completed rape in her lifetime (14.8 percent completed rape, 2.8 percent attempted rape for a total of 17.6

[338] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Homicide Trends in the United States: 1980-2008: Annual Rates for 2009 and 2010 (2011).

percent).[339] The national rape-related pregnancy rate is five percent among victims of reproductive age (aged 12 to 45); among adult women an estimated 32,101 pregnancies result from rape each year.[340] Fifty-six percent of girls ages 14-18 who are pregnant or parenting are kissed

---

[339] Commenters cited: Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN), Campus Sexual Violence: Statistics, https://www.rainn.org/statistics/campus-sexual-violence.

[340] Commenters cited: Melissa M. Holmes, Rape-related pregnancy: estimates and descriptive characteristics from a national sample of women, 17 AM. J. OF OBSTETRICS & GYNECOLOGY 2 (1996).

or touched without their consent.[341]

- A few commenters argued that the prevalence rate for sexual assault against college-age women is lower than shown by the above data, with the rate of rape and sexual assault being lower for female college students (6.1 per

[341] Commenters cited: National Women's Law Center (NWLC), Let Her Learn: Stopping Push Out for Girls who are Pregnant or Parenting (2017).

1,000) than for female college-age nonstudents (7.6 per 1,000). [342]

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects girls and women in significant numbers. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that

---

[342] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics Special Report: Rape and Sexual Assault Victimization Among College-Age Females, 1995-2013 (2014).

restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – Men

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment against boys and men, including as follows:

- Approximately one in six men have experienced some form of sexual violence in their lifetime.[343] Sixteen percent of men were sexually assaulted by the age of 18.[344] Approximately one in 33 American men has experienced an attempted or completed rape in their lifetime.[345]

---

[343] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2010 Summary Report (Nov. 2011).
[344] Commenters cited: Shanta R. Dube, Long-term consequences of childhood sexual abuse by gender of victim, 28 AM. J. OF PREVENTIVE MED. 5 (2005).
[345] Commenters cited: Rape, Abuse, & Incest National Network (RAINN), Scope of the Problem: Statistics, https://www.rainn.org/statistics/scope-problem.

- College-age male victims accounted for 17 percent of rape and sexual assault victimizations against students and four percent against nonstudents.[346] Approximately 15 percent of college men are victims of forced sex during their time in college.[347]

[346] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Special Report: Rape and Sexual Assault Victimization Among College-Age Females, 1995-2013 (2014).
[347] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice, Research Report: The Sexual Victimization of College Women (2000).

- Approximately 26 percent of gay men, and 37 percent of bisexual men, experience rape, physical violence, or stalking by an intimate partner.[348]
- Men are more likely to be assaulted than falsely accused of assault.[349]

---

[348] Commenters cited: Human Rights Campaign, Sexual Assault and the LGBTQ Community, https://www.hrc.org/resources/sexual-assault-and-the-lgbt-community; Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): An Overview of 2010 Findings on Victimization by Sexual Orientation.

[349] Commenters cited: Tyler Kingkade, Males are More Likely to Suffer Sexual Assault Than to be Falsely Accused of it, THE HUFFINGTON POST (Dec. 8, 2014).

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects boys and men in significant numbers. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – LGBTQ Persons

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment against LGBTQ individuals, including as follows:

- A 2015 survey found that 47 percent of transgender people are sexually assaulted at some point in their lifetime: transgender

women have been sexually assaulted at a rate of 37 percent; nonbinary people assigned male at birth have been sexually assaulted at a rate of 41 percent; transgender men have been sexually assaulted at a rate of 51 percent; and nonbinary people assigned female at birth have been sexually assaulted at a rate of 58 percent.[350] Another study, which drew from interviews of over 16,500 adults, indicated that gay and bisexual individuals experienced a higher lifetime prevalence of sexual violence than their heterosexual counterparts.[351]

---

[350] Commenters cited: National Center for Transgender Equality, The Report of the 2015 U.S. Transgender Survey (Dec. 2016).

[351] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): An Overview of 2010 Findings on Victimization by Sexual Orientation.

- A study found that transgender students, who represented 1.8 percent of high school respondents to a survey, faced far higher rates of assault and harassment than their peers: 24 percent of transgender students had been forced to have sexual intercourse, compared to four percent of male cisgender students and 11 percent of female

cisgender students; 23 percent of transgender students experienced sexual dating violence, compared to four percent of male cisgender students and 12 percent of female cisgender students; more than one-quarter (26 percent) experienced physical dating violence, compared to six percent of male cisgender students and nine percent of female cisgender

students; transgender students were more likely to face bullying and violence in school overall compared to cisgender students.[352]

- Lesbian, gay, and bisexual students are more likely to experience nonconsensual sexual contact by physical force or incapacitation than heterosexual

---

[352] Commenters cited: Michelle M. Johns et al., Transgender Identity and Experiences of Violence Victimization, Substance Use, Suicide Risk, and Sexual Risk Behaviors Among High School Students – 19 States and Large Urban School Districts, 2017, 68 MORBIDITY & MORTALITY WEEKLY REPORT 3 (Jan. 25, 2019).

students: 14 percent of gay or lesbian students and 25 percent of bisexual students reported experiencing nonconsensual sexual contact while in college or graduate school compared to 11 percent of heterosexual students.[353]

- A 2018 study found that 57.3 percent of LGBTQ students were

[353] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).

sexually harassed at school during the past year.[354] Another survey showed that 38 percent of LGBTQ girls had been kissed or touched without their consent.[355] Eighty-six percent of high school transgender individuals had experienced a form of sexual violence due to their gender identity, often perpetrated by other students.[356] Nearly 25 percent of transgender, genderqueer, and gender nonconforming or questioning students experience sexual violence during their undergraduate education.[357]

[354] Commenters cited: Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN), The 2017 National School Climate Survey: The Experiences of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer Youth in Our Nation's Schools (2018).
[355] Commenters cited: National Women's Law Center (NWLC), Let Her Learn: Stopping Push Out for Girls who are Pregnant or Parenting (2017).

[356] Commenters cited: Rebecca L. Stotzer, Violence Against Transgender People: A Review of United States Data, 14 AGGRESSION & VIOLENT BEHAVIOR 3 (2009).
[357] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).

- Twenty-two percent of lesbian, gay, and bisexual youth have experienced sexual violence, more than double the rate reported by heterosexual youth.[358] According to another survey: 44 percent of lesbians and 61 percent of bisexual women experience rape, physical violence, or stalking by an intimate partner,

---

[358] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control & Prevention, Division of Adolescent & School Health, Youth Risk Behavior Survey Data Summary and Trends Report: 2007-2017 (2018).

compared to 35 percent of heterosexual women; 26 percent of gay men and 37 percent of bisexual men experience rape, physical violence, or stalking by an intimate partner, compared to 29 percent of heterosexual men; 46 percent of bisexual women have been raped, compared to 17 percent of heterosexual women; 13 percent of lesbians and 22

percent of bisexual women have been raped by an intimate partner, compared to nine percent of heterosexual women; 40 percent of gay men and 47 percent of bisexual men have experienced sexual violence other than rape, compared to 21 percent of heterosexual men; and 46.4 percent of lesbians, 74.9 percent of bisexual women, and 43.3

percent of heterosexual women, reported sexual violence other than rape during their lifetimes, while 40.2 percent of gay men, 47.4 percent of bisexual men, and 20.8 percent of heterosexual men reported sexual violence other than rape during their lifetimes.[359]

- More than eight in ten LGBTQ students experienced harassment

---

[359] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): An Overview of 2010 Findings on Victimization by Sexual Orientation.

or assault at school and more than half (57 percent) were sexually harassed at school; 70 percent of LGBTQ students said that they were verbally harassed, 29 percent said that they were physically harassed, and 12 percent said that they were physically assaulted because of their sexual orientation; 60 percent of LGBTQ students said that they were verbally harassed, 24 percent said that they were physically harassed, and 11 percent said that they were physically assaulted because of their gender expression.[360]

- A survey of students in grades nine through 12 found that lesbian, gay, and bisexual ("LGB") students were more likely to say that they experienced bullying than heterosexual students: one-third of LGB students said that they had been bullied on school property in the past year compared to 17 percent of heterosexual students; 27 percent of LGB students reported that they had been electronically bullied in the past year compared to 13 percent of heterosexual

---

[360] Commenters cited: Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN), The 2017 National School Climate Survey: The Experiences of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer Youth in Our Nation's Schools (2018).

students; nearly half of middle and high school students report being sexually harassed, with harassment especially extensive among LGBTQ students, causing nearly one-third to say that they felt unsafe or uncomfortable enough to miss school.[361]

- Seventy-three percent of LGBTQ college students have been

[361] Commenters cited: Laura Kann et al., Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance – United States, 2017, 67 MORBIDITY & MORTALITY WEEKLY REPORT 8 (Jun. 15, 2018).

sexually harassed, compared to 61 percent of non-LGBTQ students;[362] 75.2 percent of undergraduate and 69.4 percent of graduate/professional students who identify as transgender, queer, and gender nonconforming reported being sexually harassed, compared with 62 percent of cisgender female undergraduates,

---

[362] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women Educational Foundation, Drawing the Line: Sexual Harassment on Campus (2005).

43 percent of cisgender male undergraduates, 44 percent of cisgender female graduate students, and 30 percent of cisgender male graduate students.[363]

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects LGBTQ individuals in significant numbers. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

[363] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – Persons of Color

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data,

research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment against persons of color, including as follows:

- Women who have intersecting identities, for example women who are women of color and LGBTQ, experience certain types of harassment, including gender and sexual harassment, at even greater rates than other women, and often experience sexual harassment as a manifestation of both gender and other kinds of discrimination.[364] A survey of 1,003 girls between the ages of 14 and 18, with a focus on Black, Latina, Asian, Native American, and LGBTQ individuals, found that 31 percent had survived sexual assault.[365] Of women who identify as multiracial, 32.3 percent are sexually assaulted.[366]

[364] Commenters cited: National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

- Of Black women in school, 16.5 percent reported being raped in high school and 36 percent were raped in college.[367] Among Black women, 21.2 percent are survivors

---

[365] Commenters cited: National Women's Law Center (NWLC), Let Her Learn: Stopping Push Out for Girls who are Pregnant or Parenting (2017).
[366] Commenters cited: Matthew J. Breiding et al., Prevalence and Characteristics of Sexual Violence, Stalking, and Intimate Partner Violence Victimization – National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey, United States, 2011, 63 MORBIDITY & MORTALITY WEEKLY REPORT 8 (Sept. 5, 2014).
[367] Commenters cited: Carolyn M. West & Kalimah Johnson, Sexual Violence in the Lives of African American Women: Risk, Response, and Resilience, VAWNET.ORG: NATIONAL ONLINE RESOURCE CENTER ON DOMESTIC VIOLENCE (2013).

of sexual assault.[368] Sixty percent of Black girls are sexually harassed before the age of 18.[369]

- Among Hispanic women, 13.6 percent are survivors of sexual assault.[370]
- In a 2015 study of 313 participants of Korean, Chinese, Filipino, and other Asian backgrounds: 53.5

---

[368] Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, STOP SV: A Technical Package to Prevent Sexual Violence (2016).
[369] Commenters cited: Hannah Giorgis, Many women of color don't go to the police after sexual assault for a reason, THE GUARDIAN (Mar. 25, 2015).
[370] Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, STOP SV: A Technical Package to Prevent Sexual Violence (2016).

percent of female participants reported experiencing sexual violence, including forced sexual relations (12.4 percent), sexual harassment (17.3 percent), unwanted touching (31.7 percent), or pressure to have unwanted sex (25.2 percent); out of all participants, 38.7 percent said they knew someone who had experienced sexual violence, and,

of those, 70 percent said they knew two or more survivors. Of male participants, 8.1 percent reported experiencing sexual violence; 56.1 percent of the survivors first experienced sexual violence when they were ten to 19 years old and 26.3 percent when they were in their twenties.[371]

[371] Commenters cited: KAN-WIN, Community Survey Report on Sexual Violence in the Asian American/Immigrant Community (2017), http://www.kanwin.org/downloads/sareport.pdf.

- Of Asian Pacific Islander women, 23 percent experienced sexual violence. Of Asian Pacific Islander men, nine percent experienced sexual violence.[372]
- Of women who identify as American Indian or Alaska Native, over one-quarter have experienced rape and 56 percent have experienced rape, physical

[372] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2010-2012 State Report (2017).

violence, or stalking by an intimate partner in their lifetime.[373] Seven out of every 1,000 American Indian (including Alaska Native) women experience rape or sexual assault, compared to two out of every 1,000 women of all races.[374]

[373] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2010 Summary Report (Nov. 2011).
[374] Commenters cited: U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, American Indians and Crime (1999).

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects persons of color, particularly girls and women of color and persons with intersecting identities, in significant numbers. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – Individuals with Disabilities

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the prevalence of sexual harassment against individuals with disabilities, including as follows:

- Students with disabilities are 2.9 times more likely than their peers to be sexually assaulted.[375] As many as 40 percent of women with disabilities experience sexual assault or physical violence in their lifetimes. [376] Almost 20 percent of women with disabilities

[375] Commenters cited: National Women's Law Center (NWLC), Let Her Learn: Stopping Push Out for Girls who are Pregnant or Parenting (2017).
[376] Commenters cited: University of Michigan Sexual Assault Awareness and Prevention Center, Sexual Assault and Survivors with Disabilities, https://sapac.umich.edu/article/56.

will have undesired sex with an intimate partner.[377]

- An exploratory study conducted to learn the rates of abuse among university students who have identified as having a disability found: 22 percent of participants reported some form of abuse over the last year and nearly 62 percent had experienced some form of

---

[377] Commenters cited: Disabled World, People with Disabilities and Sexual Assault (2012), https://www.disabled-world.com/disability/sexuality/assaults.php.

physical or sexual abuse before the age of 17; only 27 percent reported the incident, and 40 percent of students with disabilities who reported abuse in the past year said they had little or no knowledge of abuse-related resources.[378]

- More than 90 percent of all people with developmental disabilities

---

[378] Commenters cited: Patricia A. Findley et al., Exploring the experiences of abuse of college students with disabilities, 31 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 17 (2015).

will experience sexual assault.[379] Forty-nine percent of people with developmental disabilities who are victims of sexual violence will experience ten or more abusive incidents.[380] Thirty percent of men and 80 percent of women with intellectual disabilities have been sexually assaulted. [381]

---

[379] Commenters cited: University of Michigan Sexual Assault Awareness and Prevention Center, Sexual Assault and Survivors with Disabilities, https://sapac.umich.edu/article/56.
[380] Commenters cited: Valenti-Hein & Schwartz, The Sexual Abuse Interview for Those with Developmental Disabilities (James Stanfield Co. 1995).
[381] Commenters cited: Disabled World, People with Disabilities and Sexual Assault (2012), https://www.disabled-world.com/disability/sexuality/assaults.php.

- Individuals with intellectual disabilities are sexually assaulted and raped at more than seven times the rate of individuals without disabilities; women with intellectual disabilities are 12 times more likely to be sexually assaulted or raped than women without disabilities.[382]

[382] Commenters cited: Joseph Shapiro, The Sexual Assault Epidemic No One Talks About, NPR (Jan. 8, 2018).

- Fifty-four percent of boys who are deaf and 25 percent of girls who are deaf, have been sexually assaulted, compared to ten percent of boys who are hearing and 25 percent of girls who are hearing.[383]

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicates that sexual harassment affects

---

[383] Commenters cited: Disabled World, People with Disabilities and Sexual Assault (2012), https://www.disabled-world.com/disability/sexuality/assaults.php.

individuals with disabilities in significant numbers. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Prevalence Data – Immigrants

Comments: Commenters referred the Department to data showing that immigrant girls and young women are almost twice as likely as their non-immigrant peers to have experienced incidents of sexual assault.[384]

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data,

---

[384] Commenters cited: National Immigrant Women's Advocacy Project, Empowering Survivors: Legal Rights of Immigrant Victims of Sexual Assault (Leslye Orloff ed., 2013), https://www.evawintl.org/library/documentlibraryhandler.ashx?id=456 (using the term "immigrant" to include documented persons, refugees and migrants, others present in the United States on temporary visas, such as visitors, students, temporary workers, as well as undocumented individuals.).

indicates that sexual harassment affects immigrant girls and women in significant numbers. When sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination covered by Title IX, the final regulations hold schools accountable for responding in ways that restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

Changes: None.

Impact Data

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies showing the impact of sexual harassment on victims, including as follows:

- Among students who are harassed, a vast majority of students (87 percent) report that the harassment had a negative effect on them, causing 37 percent of girls to not want to go to school, versus 25 percent of boys; female students were more likely in every case to say they continued to feel detrimental effects for "quite a while" compared with male students.[385]

- Approximately half of LGBTQ students who said that they experienced frequent or severe verbal harassment because of their sexual orientation or gender identity missed school at least once a month, and about 70 percent who said they experienced frequent or severe physical harassment missed school more than once a month.[386]

[385] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011).

- In one study of transgender students, of those who faced harassment, 16 percent left college or vocational school because of the severity of the

[386] Commenters cited: Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN), The 2017 National School Climate Survey: The Experiences of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer Youth in Our Nation's Schools (2018).

mistreatment they faced; and 17 percent of people who were out as transgender when they were K-12 students said that they experienced such severe harassment as a student that they had to leave school as a result.[387]

- The negative emotional effects of sexual harassment take a toll on girls' education, resulting in

[387] Commenters cited: National Center for Transgender Equality, The Report of the 2015 U.S. Transgender Survey (Dec. 2016).

decreased productivity and increased absenteeism from school; in the 2010-2011 school year, 18 percent of abused children and teens did not want to go to school, 13 percent found it hard to study, 17 percent had trouble sleeping, and eight percent stayed home from school.[388]

- The impact of sexual harassment on students occurs at all grade levels

---

[388] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011).

and includes lowered motivation to attend class, paying less attention in class, lower grades, avoiding teachers with a reputation for engaging in harassment, dropping classes, changing majors, changing advisors, avoiding informal activities that enhance the educational experience, feeling less safe on campus, and dropping out of school.[389]

- Twenty percent of children and youth in schools have an identified mental health problem;[390] bullying, sexual harassment, and sexual assault contribute to mental health challenges for individuals when left unreported.

---

[389] Commenters cited: National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

[390] Commenters cited: Amy J. Houtrow & Megumi J. Okumura, Pediatric Mental Health Problems and Associated Burden on Families, 6 VULNERABLE CHILDREN & YOUTH STUDIES 3 (2011).

- Adverse childhood experiences can contribute significantly to negative adult physical and mental health outcomes and affect more than 60 percent of adults; every instance of sexual harassment against women undermines their potential for long-term economic productivity and, by extension, the productivity of their family, their community, and the United States.[391]

- Secondary victimization and institutional betrayal have been shown to exacerbate trauma symptoms following a sexual assault, including increased anxiety, and more than 40 percent of college students who were sexually victimized reported experiences of institutional betrayal.[392]

[391] Commenters cited: American Academy of Pediatrics, Adverse Childhood Experiences and the Lifelong Consequences of Trauma (2014), https://www.aap.org/en-us/Documents/ttb_aces_consequences.pdf.

- Being a victim of sexual assault can cause both immediate and long-term physical and mental health consequences; at least 89 percent of victims face emotional and physical consequences.[393] Approximately 70 percent of rape or sexual assault

---

[392] Commenters cited: Carly Parnitzke Smith & Jennifer J. Freyd, Dangerous Safe Havens: Institutional Betrayal Exacerbates Sexual Trauma, 26 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 1 (2013); John Briere & Carol E. Jordan, Violence Against Women: Outcome Complexity and Implications for Assessment and Treatment, 19 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 11 (2004).

[393] Commenters cited: Andrew Van Dam, Less than 1% of rapes lead to felony convictions. At least 89% of victims face emotional and physical consequences, THE WASHINGTON POST (Oct. 6, 2018).

victims experience moderate to severe distress, a larger percentage than for any other violent crime.[394] The dropout rate of sexual harassment victims is much higher than percentage of college students who drop out of school; 34 percent of victims dropout of college.[395] Many schools have expelled survivors

---

[394] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Special Report: Socio-emotional impact of violent crime (2014).
[395] Commenters cited: Cecilia Mengo & Beverly M. Black, Violence Victimization on a College Campus: Impact on GPA and School Dropout, 18 JOURNAL OF COLL. STUDENT RETENTION: RESEARCH, THEORY & PRACTICE 2 (2015).

when their grades suffer as a result of trauma.[396]

- Eighty-one percent of women and 35 percent of men report significant short- or long-term impacts of sexual assault, such as post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD); women who are sexually assaulted or abused are over twice as likely to have PTSD, depression, and chronic pain

---

[396] Commenters cited: Alexandra Brodsky, How much does sexual assault cost college students every year, THE WASHINGTON POST (Nov. 18, 2014).

following the violence compared to non-abused women.[397] Thirty percent of the college women who said they had been raped contemplated suicide after the incident.[398] Male victims of sexual abuse experience problems such as depression, suicidal ideation, anxiety, sexual dysfunction,

[397] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2010 Summary Report (Nov. 2011).
[398] Commenters cited: National Victim Center and Crime Victims Research and Treatment Center, Rape in America: A Report to the Nation (1992).

loss of self-esteem, and long-term relationship difficulties.[399]

- Rape victims suffer long-term negative outcomes including PTSD, depression, generalized anxiety, eating disorders, sexual dysfunction, alcohol and illicit drug use, nonfatal suicidal behavior and suicidal threats, attempted and completed suicide, physical symptoms in the absence of medical conditions, low self-esteem, self-blame, and severe preoccupations with physical appearances; short-term negative impacts include shock, denial, fear, confusion, anxiety, withdrawal, shame or guilt, nervousness, distrust of others, symptoms of PTSD, emotional detachment, sleep

---

[399] Commenters cited: Lara Stemple, The Sexual Victimization of Men in America: New Data Challenge Old Assumptions, 104 AM. J. OF PUB. HEALTH 6 (2014).

disturbances, flashbacks, and mental replay of the assault.[400]

- If a sexual assault survivor ends up dropping out of high school, the survivor will earn 84 percent less than a typical graduate from a four-year college; student debt is a greater burden for low income students who drop out, as those

[400] Commenters cited: Nicole P. Yuan, The Psychological Consequences of Sexual Trauma, VAWNET.ORG: NATIONAL RESOURCE CENTER ON DOMESTIC VIOLENCE (2006); Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, Division of Violence Prevention, Preventing Sexual Violence (last reviewed by the CDC on Jan. 17, 2020), https://www.cdc.gov/violenceprevention/sexualviolence/fastfact.html?CDC_AA_refVal=https%3A%2F%2Fwww.cdc.gov%2Fviolenceprevention%2Fsexualviolence%2Fconsequences.html; Rape, Abuse, & Incest National Network (RAINN), Victims of Sexual Violence: Statistics, https://www.rainn.org/statistics/victims-sexual-violence.

students will earn significantly less; and dropping out can have dire consequences as the lack of a high school diploma or General Equivalency Diploma (GED) directly correlates with higher risks of experiencing homelessness. [401]

Discussion: The data referred to by commenters, among other data, indicate that many sexual harassment victims

---

[401] Commenters cited: Eduardo Porter, Dropping Out of College, and Paying the Price, THE NEW YORK TIMES (June 26, 2013).

suffer serious, negative consequences. Because sexual harassment causes serious detriment to victims, when sex discrimination covered by Title IX takes the form of sexual harassment, the final regulations require recipients to respond to complainants by offering supportive measures (irrespective of whether the complainant files a formal complaint), and when a complainant chooses to file a formal complaint, requiring remedies for a complainant when a respondent is found responsible. Supportive measures, and remedies, are designed to restore or preserve equal access to education.

Recognizing that Title IX governs the conduct of recipients themselves, the Department believes that the final regulations appropriately prescribe the actions recipients must take in response to reports and formal complaints of sexual harassment, so that complainants are not faced with institutional betrayal from a recipient's refusal to respond, or non-supportive response.

Changes: None.

Cost Data

Comments: Many commenters referred to data showing that rape and sexual assault survivors often incur significant financial costs such as medical and psychological treatment, lost time at work, and leaves of absence from school, including as follows:

- The average lifetime cost of being a rape victim is estimated at $122,461, which calculates to roughly $3.1 trillion of lifetime costs across the 25 million reported victims in the United States.[402] A single rape costs a victim between $87,000 to $240,776.[403]

- More than one-fifth of intimate partner rape survivors lose an average of eight days of paid work per assault, and that does not include the subsequent job loss, psychological trauma, and cost (of treatment and to society at large).[404]

---

[402] Commenters cited: Cora Peterson et al., Lifetime Economic Burden of Rape Among U.S. Adults, 52 AM. J. PREVENTIVE MED. 6 (2017).
[403] Commenters cited: Ted R. Miller et al., Victim Costs of Violent Crime and Resulting Injuries, 12 HEALTH AFFAIRS 4 (1993).
[404] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, Costs of Intimate Partner Violence Against Women in the United States (2003).

Many commenters asserted that the proposed rules would exacerbate the economic costs suffered by sexual assault survivors.

Discussion: The Department understands that sexual assault survivors often incur significant financial costs, both in the short-term and long-term. The final regulations require recipients to offer supportive measures to complainants and provide remedies to complainants when a fair grievance process has determined that a respondent is responsible for sexual harassment. Supportive measures and remedies are designed to restore or preserve equal access to education. The Department believes these responses by recipients will help complainants avoid costs that flow from loss of educational opportunities.

Changes: None.

Reporting Data

Comments: Many commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies regarding rates of reporting of sexual harassment and sexual violence, and reasons why some victims do not report their victimization to authorities, including as follows:

- Only about half of all adolescent victims of peer-on-peer sexual assault will tell anyone about having been sexually harassed or assaulted and only six percent will actually report the incident to an official who might be able help them. Such underreporting may be due to individual student fears of reporting to school authorities or law enforcement; procedural gaps in how institutions record or respond to incidents; a reluctance on the part of institutions to be associated with these problems; or a combination of these factors.[405]

- At least 35 percent of college students who experience sexual harassment do not report it[406] because shame, fear of retaliation, and fear of not being believed prevent victims from coming forward. Only five to 28 percent of sexual harassment incidents are reported to Title IX offices; less than 30 percent of the most serious incidents of nonconsensual sexual contact are reported to an organization or agency like a university's Title IX office or law enforcement; the most common reason for not reporting was the victim did not consider the incident serious enough, while other reasons included embarrassment, shame, feeling it would be too emotionally difficult, and lack of confidence that anything would be done about it.[407]

---

[405] Commenters cited: Amy M. Young et al., Adolescents' Experiences of Sexual Assault by Peers: Prevalence and Nature of Victimization Occurring Within and Outside of School, 38 JOURNAL OF YOUTH & ADOLESCENCE 1072 (2009).

[406] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women Educational Foundation, Drawing the Line: Sexual Harassment on Campus (2005).

- Survivors often do not report cases of sexual violence to their schools because they do not know how to report on their campus, because of fear of being disbelieved, or because of fear of having their assault not taken seriously.[408] Some survivors choose not to report sexual violence to authorities for a multitude of reasons, one of which is a fear that their perpetrator will retaliate or escalate the violence.[409]

[407] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).

- Research shows that students are deterred from reporting sexual harassment and assault for the

---

[408] Commenters cited: Kathryn J. Holland & Lilia M. Cortina, "It happens to girls all the time": Examining sexual assault survivors' reasons for not using campus supports, 59 AM. J. OF COMMUNITY PSYCHOL. 1-2 (2017).
[409] Commenters cited: Marjorie R. Sable et al., Barriers to Reporting Sexual Assault for Women and Men: Perspectives of College Students, 55 JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 3 (2006); Ruth E. Fleury et al., When Ending the Relationship Does Not End the Violence, 6 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 12 (2000); T.K. Logan & Robert Walker, Stalking: A Multidimensional Framework for Assessment and Safety Planning, 18 TRAUMA, VIOLENCE, & ABUSE 2 (2017).

following reasons: policies that compromise or restrict the victim's ability to make informed choices about how to proceed; concerns about confidentiality; a desire to avoid public disclosure; uncertainty as to whether they can prove the sexual violence or whether the perpetrator will be punished; campus policies on drug and alcohol use; policies requiring victims to participate in adjudication; trauma response; the desire to avoid the perceived or real stigma of having been victimized.[410]

- According to one study, 20 percent of students ages 18-24 did not report assault because they feared reprisal, nine percent believed the police would not or could not do anything to help, and four percent reported, but not to police.[411]

---

[410] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice, Sexual Assault on Campus: What Colleges and Universities Are Doing About It (2005).

- One national survey found that of 770 rapes on campus during the 2014-2015 academic year, only 40 were reported to authorities under the Clery Act guidelines.[412]
- Campus sexual assault is grossly underreported with only two percent

---

[411] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Special Report: Rape and Sexual Assault Victimization Among College-Age Females, 1995-2013 (2014).
[412] Commenters cited: New Jersey Task Force on Campus Sexual Assault, 2017 Report and Recommendations (June 2017).

of incapacitated sexual assault survivors and 13 percent of forcible rape survivors reporting to crisis or healthcare centers and even fewer to law enforcement.[413] About 65 percent of surveyed rape victims reported the incident to a friend, a family member, or roommate but only ten percent

[413] Commenters cited: National Sexual Violence Resource Center: Info and Stats for Journalists, Statistics About Sexual Violence (2015) (citing National Institute of Justice, The Campus Sexual Assault (CSA) Study: Final Report (2007)).

reported to police or campus officials.[414]

- Male victims often resist reporting due to contemporary social narratives, including jokes about prison rape, the notion that "real men" can protect themselves, the fallacy that gay male victims likely

[414] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Office for Victims of Crime, 2017 National Crime Victims' Rights Week Resource Guide: Crime and Victimization Fact Sheets (2017).

"asked for it," and the belief that reporting itself is "un-masculine."[415]

- Some students – especially students of color, undocumented students, LGBTQ students, and students with disabilities – are less likely than their peers to report sexual assault to the police due to increased risk of being subjected to police violence or

---

[415] Commenters cited: Lara Stemple, The Sexual Victimization of Men in America: New Data Challenge Old Assumptions, 104 AM. J. OF PUB. HEALTH 6 (2014).

deportation.[416] Survivors of color may not want to report to the police and add to the criminalization of men and boys of color; for these students, schools are often the only avenue for relief. Many LGBTQ students and students of color may feel mistrustful, unwelcomed, invisible, or discriminated against, which makes [416] Commenters cited: Jennifer Medina, Too Scared to Report Sexual Abuse. The Fear: Deportation, THE NEW YORK TIMES (April 30, 2017); National Center for Transgender Equality, The Report of the 2015 U.S. Transgender Survey (Dec. 2016); Audrey Chu, I Dropped Out of College Because I Couldn't Bear to See My Rapist on Campus, VICE (Sept. 26, 2017).

reporting their experience of sexual assault even more difficult.[417]

- LGBTQ students also experience unique barriers that prevent them from reporting these incidents:[418] the most common reason students gave for their failure to report were doubts that the school staff would do anything about the harassment;

---

[417] Commenters cited: L. Ebony Boulware, Race and trust in the health care system, 118 PUB. HEALTH REPORTS 4 (2003).
[418] Commenters cited: Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN), The 2017 National School Climate Survey: The Experiences of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer Youth in Our Nation's Schools (2018).

almost two-thirds (60 percent) of students who did report their harassment said that school staff did nothing in response or just told the students to ignore the harassment; and more than one in five students were told to change their behavior to avoid harassment, such as changing the way they dress or acting less "gay." Another reason LGBTQ students gave for not reporting was fear they would be “outed” to the school staff or their families, or face additional violence from their harasser. Over 40 percent of LGBTQ students stated that they did not report because they were not comfortable with school staff, often because of the belief that staff was discriminatory or complicit in the harassment.

- Sixty-nine percent of sexual abuse survivors said that police officers discouraged them from filing a report and one-third of survivors had police refuse to take their report; 80 percent of sexual assault survivors are reluctant to seek help and 91 percent report feeling depressed after their interaction with law enforcement.[419]

---

[419] Commenters cited: Rebecca Campbell, Survivors' Help-Seeking Experiences with the Legal and Medical Systems, 20 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2005).

- Native American women are reluctant to report crimes because of the belief that nothing will be done; according to a 2010 study, the government declined to prosecute 67 percent of sexual abuse, homicide, and other violent crimes against Native American women.[420]
- Students with disabilities are less likely to be believed when they report

[420] Commenters cited: Gender Based Violence and Intersecting Challenges Impacting Native American & Alaskan Village Communities, VAWNET.ORG: NATIONAL ONLINE RESOURCE CENTER ON DOMESTIC VIOLENCE (2016), https://vawnet.org/sc/gender-based-violence-and-intersecting-challenges-impacting-native-american-alaskan-village.

sexual harassment experiences and often have greater difficulty describing the harassment they experience, because of stereotypes that people with disabilities are less credible or because they may have greater difficulty describing or communicating about the harassment they experienced,

particularly if they have a cognitive or developmental disability.[421]

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' concerns that sexual harassment is underreported and references to data explaining the variety of factors that contribute to complainants choosing not to report incidents of sexual harassment.

---

[421] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute for Justice, The Many Challenges Facing Sexual Assault Survivors with Disabilities (2017).

We have revised the final regulations in several ways in order to provide students, employees, and third parties with clear, accessible reporting channels, predictability as to how a recipient must respond to a report, informed options on how a complainant may choose to proceed, and requirements that Title IX personnel serve impartially, free from bias. Under the final regulations, any person may report sexual harassment to trigger the recipient's response obligations, and the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim) retains the right to receive available supportive measures irrespective of whether the complainant also decides to file a formal complaint that initiates a grievance process.

To emphasize that any person may report sexual harassment (not just the complainant), we have revised § 106.8 to state that any person may report sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment) using the contact information listed for the Title IX Coordinator, which must include an office address, telephone number, and e-mail address, or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report. In elementary and secondary schools, § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" now provides that notice of sexual harassment to any employee triggers the recipient's response obligations, and in postsecondary institutions, students retain more autonomy and control over deciding whether, when, or to whom to disclose a sexual harassment experience without automatically triggering a report to the Title IX office.[422] The Department therefore aims to give every complainant (i.e., person alleged to be the victim) and all third parties clear reporting channels (which differ for postsecondary institution students than for elementary and secondary school students), and predictability as to the recipient's response obligations (i.e., under revised § 106.44(a) the Title IX Coordinator must

---

[422] See discussion in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble.

contact the complainant to discuss supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explain the option for filing a formal complaint).

Every Title IX Coordinator must be free from conflicts of interest and bias and, under revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), trained in how to serve impartially and avoid prejudgment of the facts at issue. No recipient is permitted to ignore a sexual harassment report, regardless of the identity of the person alleged to have been victimized, and whether or not a school administrator might be inclined to apply harmful stereotypes against believing complainants generally or based on the complainant's personal characteristics or identity. The Department will enforce the final regulations vigorously to ensure that each complainant receives the response owed to them by the recipient.

We have added § 106.71 prohibiting retaliation against any individual exercising Title IX rights (including the right to refuse to participate in a grievance process). When complainants do decide to initiate a grievance process, or participate in a grievance process, recipients also may choose to offer informal resolution processes as alternatives to a full investigation and adjudication of the formal complaint, with the voluntary consent of both the complainant and respondent, which may encourage some complainants to file a formal complaint where they may have been reluctant to do so if a full investigation and adjudication was the only option. Where a respondent is found responsible for sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, the recipient must provide remedies to the complainant designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal access to education. In response to comments concerned that such remedies may not be effective, the final regulations expressly require the Title IX Coordinator to be responsible for the effective implementation of remedies.

The final regulations present a consistent, predictable framework for when and how a recipient must respond to Title IX sexual harassment. Although reporting sexual harassment is often inherently difficult, complainants who desire supportive measures, or factual investigation and adjudication, or both, may expect prompt, meaningful responses from their schools, colleges, or universities.

Changes: We have revised § 106.8 to state that any person may report sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) by using the contact information listed for the Title IX Coordinator, which must include an office address, telephone number, and e-mail address; reports may be made at any time, including during non-business hours, by using the telephone number or e-mail address or by mailing to the office address. We have revised §

106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to provide that notice of sexual harassment to any elementary and secondary school employee constitutes actual knowledge to the recipient, and to state that "notice" includes but is not limited to reporting to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a).

We have revised § 106.44(a) to specifically require the Title IX Coordinator to contact the complainant to discuss supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explain the process for filing a formal complaint. We have revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to require that Title IX personnel be trained on how to serve impartially, without prejudgment of the facts. We have added § 106.71 prohibiting retaliation against any person exercising rights under Title IX, and § 106.45(b)(7)(iv) requiring Title IX Coordinators to be responsible for effective implementation of any remedies.

Stereotypes / Punishment for "Lying"

Comments: Some commenters asserted that the proposed rules will be particularly harmful to women and girls of color, who experience explicit and implicit bias in the investigation of claims of sexual harassment and assault. Commenters argued that due to harmful race and sex stereotypes that label women of color as "promiscuous," schools are more likely to ignore, blame, and punish women and girls of color who report sexual harassment.[423] Student concerns about reporting are especially common among members of historically marginalized communities,

---

[423] Commenters cited: Nancy Chi Cantalupo, And Even More of Us Are Brave: Intersectionality & Sexual Harassment of Women Students of Color, 42 HARV. J. OF L. & GENDER 1 (2018); National Women's Law Center & Girls for Gender Equity, Listening Session on the Needs of Young Women of Color (2015); Sonja C. Tonnesen, Commentary: "Hit It and Quit It": Responses to Black Girls' Victimization in School, 28 BERKELEY J. OF GENDER, L. & JUSTICE 1 (2013); NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. & National Women's Law Center, Unlocking Opportunity for African American Girls: A Call to Action for Educational Equity (2014).

who are often more likely to be disbelieved or even punished by schools for reporting sexual assault. Commenters stated that Black women and girls are commonly stereotyped as "Jezebels," Latina women and girls as "hot-blooded," Asian American and Asian Pacific Islander women and girls as "submissive, and naturally erotic," Native American women and girls as "sexually violable as a tool of war and colonization," and multiracial women and girls as "tragic and vulnerable, historically, products of sexual and racial domination." Commenters stated that schools are also more likely to punish Black women and girls by labeling them as aggressors based on stereotypes that they are "angry" and "aggressive." Commenters pointed out that the Department's 2013-14 Civil Rights Data Collection shows that Black girls are five times more likely than white girls to be suspended in K-12, and that while Black girls represented 20 percent of all preschool enrolled students, they were 54 percent of preschool students who were suspended. Commenters argued that schools should require all officials involved in Title IX proceedings to attend implicit bias trainings.

One commenter argued that the negative effects of harmful stereotypes are exacerbated by the fact that the proposed rules would allow schools to punish students whom the school believes are lying, and this could have a significant effect on survivors of color. Commenters asserted that many Black girls who defend themselves against perpetrators are often misidentified as the aggressors. Similarly, commenters asserted that the proposed rules would allow a school to punish any person, including a witness, who "knowingly provides false information" to the school, which makes it even easier for schools to punish girls and women of color who report sexual harassment for "lying" about it, when such a conclusion by the school is often based on negative stereotypes rather than the truth.

Commenters also expressed concern that many students who report sexual assault and other forms of sexual harassment to their school face discipline instead of support: for example, schools punish complainants for engaging in so-called "consensual" sexual activity; for engaging in premarital sex; for defending themselves against their harassers; or for merely talking about their assault with other students in violation of a "gag order" or nondisclosure agreement imposed by their school.

Discussion: The Department shares the concerns of commenters who asserted, and cited to data and articles showing, that some complainants, including or especially girls of color, face school-level responses to their reports of sexual harassment infected by bias, prejudice, or stereotypes. In response to such concerns, the Department adds to § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), prohibiting Title IX Coordinators, investigators, and decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolution processes from having conflicts of interest or bias against complainants or respondents generally, or against an individual complainant or respondent, training that also includes "how to serve impartially, including by avoiding prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias." No complainant reporting Title IX sexual harassment or respondent defending against allegations of sexual harassment should be ignored or be met with prejudgment, and the final regulations require recipients to meet response obligations impartially and free from bias. The Department will vigorously enforce the final regulations in a manner that holds recipients responsible for responding to complainants, and treating all parties during any § 106.45 grievance process, impartially without prejudgment of the facts at issue or bias, including bias against an individual's sex, race, ethnicity, sexual orientation, gender identity, disability or immigration status, financial ability, or other characteristic. Any person can be a complainant, and any person can be a respondent, and every individual is entitled to impartial, unbiased treatment regardless of personal characteristics. The Department declines to specify that training of Title IX personnel must include implicit bias training; the nature of the training required under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) is left to the recipient's discretion so long as it achieves the provision's directive that such training provide instruction on how to serve impartially and avoid prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias, and that materials used in such training avoid sex stereotypes.

In response to commenters' concerns that biases and stereotypes may lead a recipient to punish students reporting sexual harassment allegations, the Department adds § 106.71(a) to expressly prohibit retaliation and specifically state that intimidation, threats, coercion, discrimination, or charging an individual with a code of conduct violation, arising out of the same facts or circumstances as a report or formal complaint of sexual harassment, for the purpose of interfering with any right or privilege secured by Title IX, constitutes retaliation. This provision draws recipients' attention to the fact that punishing a complainant with non-

sexual harassment conduct code violations (e.g., "consensual" sexual activity when the complainant has reported the activity to be nonconsensual, or underage drinking, or fighting back against physical aggression) is retaliation when done for the purpose of deterring the complainant from pursuing rights under Title IX. The Department notes that this section applies to respondents as well.

In further response to commenters' concerns about parties being unfairly punished for lying, § 106.71(b)(2) provides that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation for making a materially false statement in bad faith in the course of a grievance proceeding does not constitute retaliation but a determination regarding responsibility, alone, is not sufficient to conclude that any party made a materially false statement in bad faith. This provision leaves open the possibility that punishment for lying or making false statements might be retaliation, unless the recipient has concluded that the party made a materially false statement in bad faith (and that conclusion cannot be based solely on the outcome of the case).

While commenters are correct that § 106.45(b)(2) requires the written notice of allegations to inform the parties of any provision in the recipient's code of conduct that prohibits knowingly making false statements or knowingly submitting false information during the grievance process, this provision appropriately alerts parties where the recipient's own code of conduct has a policy against making false statements during a disciplinary proceeding so that both parties understand that risk.

Section 106.71 protects complainants – and respondents and witnesses – from being charged with code of conduct violations arising from the same facts or circumstances as sexual harassment allegations if such a charge is brought for the purpose of curtailing rights or privileges secured by Title IX or these final regulations, and leaves open the possibility that punishment for lying might be retaliation unless the disciplined party made a materially false statement in bad faith.

The Department notes that commenters' concerns that complainants are sometimes punished unfairly for merely talking about their assault with fellow students in violation of a school-imposed "gag order" is addressed by § 106.45(b)(5)(iii).

Changes: The Department has revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to include in the required training how to serve impartially, including by avoiding prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias. We have added § 106.71(a), which prohibits retaliation and states that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation that does not involve sexual harassment but arises out of the same facts or circumstances as sexual harassment allegations, for the purpose of interfering with rights under Title IX, constitutes retaliation. The Department has also added § 106.71(b)(2) to provide that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation for making a materially false statement in bad faith does not constitute retaliation, provided that a determination regarding responsibility, alone, is not sufficient to conclude that any party made a such a false statement.

False Allegations

Comments: A number of commenters referred the Department to statistics, data, research, and studies relating to the frequency of false accusations of sexual misconduct. Most commenters who raised the issue of false allegations cited data for the proposition that somewhere between two to ten percent of sexual assault reports are false or unfounded.[424] Commenters asserted that despite the low frequency of false allegations, police officers tend to believe false allegations of rape are much more common than they actually are,[425] reflecting a society-wide misconception about women falsely alleging rape.

---

[424] Commenters cited: National Sexual Violence Resource Center, False Reporting: Overview (2012); David Lisak et al., False Allegations of Sexual Assault: An Analysis of Ten Years of Reported Cases, 16 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 12 (2010); Kimberly A. Lonsway, et al., False reports: moving beyond the issue, 3 THE VOICE 1 (2009); U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Crime in the United States: 1996 Uniform Crime Reports (1997); State of Victoria, Office of Women's Policy, Study of Reported Rapes in Victoria 2000-2003: Summary Research Report (2006).

[425] Commenters cited: David Lisak et al., False Allegations of Sexual Assault: An Analysis of Ten Years of Reported Cases, 16 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 12 (2010).

Many commenters concluded that such data shows that nationwide, overreporting and false allegations are not nearly as concerning as underreporting and perpetrators "getting away with it," and thus protection of respondents from false allegations should not be the motive or purpose of Title IX rules.

Other commenters argued that whether the rate of false allegations is as low as two to ten percent or somewhat higher, the reality is that some complainants do bring false or unfounded accusations for a variety of reasons.[426] A few commenters referred to the Duke lacrosse rape case and the University of Virginia gang rape situation as specific instances where rape accusations were revealed to be

---

[426] Commenters cited, e.g., Cassia Spohn & Katharine Tellis, Policing and Prosecuting Sexual Assault in Los Angeles City and County: A Collaborative Study in Partnership with the Los Angeles Police Department, the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department, and the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office (2012) ("Complainants' motivations for filing false reports, which fell into five overlapping categories, included a desire to avoid trouble or a need for an alibi for consensual sex with someone other than a current partner, a desire to retaliate against a current or former partner, a need for attention or sympathy, and guilt or remorse as a result of consensual sexual activity. Many complainants in the unfounded cases also had mental health issues that made it difficult for them to separate fact from fantasy.").

false only after prejudgment of the facts in favor of the complainants had led to unfair penalization of the accused students. One commenter referred to a 2017 National Center for Higher Education Risk Management (NCHERM) report that noted that the recent trend of increased reports "brings allegations of all kinds out of the woodwork, some based strongly in fact, others that are

baseless, and most that are somewhere in between."[427]

One commenter, on behalf of an organization representing student affairs professionals in higher education, described campus sexual assault proceedings as complicated under the best of circumstances because these

---

[427] Commenters cited: National Center for Higher Education Risk Management (NCHERM), The 2017 NCHERM Group Whitepaper: Due Process and the Sex Police 15 (2017) ("What is needed for all of our students is a balanced process that centers on their respective rights while showing favoritism to neither. Not only is that best, it is required by law. Title IX Coordinators write to us, worried that their annual summaries show that they are finding no violation of policy 60% of the time in their total case decisions. They feel like somehow that is wrong, or not as it should be, as if there is some proper ratio of findings that we are supposed to be reaching. . . . With all the training and education being directed at students, more are coming forward, and that education brings allegations of all kinds out of the woodwork, some based strongly in fact, others that are baseless, and most that are somewhere in between.").

cases involve navigating allegations that frequently involve different personal recollections of what happened, with few or no witnesses or physical evidence, and possibly colored by alcohol use by one or both parties. Commenters argued that just because a victim does not have corroborating evidence does not mean that a sexual assault claim is false.

Discussion: Under the final regulations, recipients must offer supportive measures to a complainant; the final regulations make this an explicit part of a recipient's prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response.[428] Such a requirement advances the non-discrimination mandate of Title IX by imposing an obligation on recipients to support complainants even without a factual determination regarding the allegations. In order to determine that a

[428] Section 106.44(a).

complainant has been victimized and is entitled to remedies (which, unlike supportive measures, need not avoid burdening a respondent),[429] allegations of Title IX sexual harassment must be resolved through the § 106.45 grievance process, designed to reach reliable factual determinations. This approach is necessary to promote accurate

[429] The final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(1)(i) to expressly state that remedies, unlike supportive measures, may be punitive or disciplinary and need not avoid burdening the respondent. This distinction between supportive measures and remedies is because remedies are required after a respondent has been determined responsible under a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

resolution of allegations in each situation presented in a formal complaint, regardless of how frequently or infrequently false accusations statistically occur.

The Department disputes that a choice must be made between caring about underreporting and caring about overreporting, or prioritizing protection of complainants' right to receive support and remedies, over protection of respondents from unfounded accusations. The Department understands that false allegations may occur infrequently, but believes that in every case in which Title IX sexual harassment is alleged, the facts must be resolved accurately to further the non-discrimination mandate of Title IX, including providing remedies to victims and ensuring that no party is treated differently based on sex. Under the final regulations, complainants are entitled to a prompt response that is not clearly unreasonable under the known circumstances, which response must include offering supportive measures even in the absence of factual investigation into the allegations. Complainants and respondents are owed an impartial grievance process that reaches reliable factual determinations of the allegations before remedies are owed to a victim or disciplinary sanctions are imposed on the respondent. Such an approach protects the interests of complainants and respondents in each unique situation, without assuming the truth or falsity of particular allegations based on statistical information about the prevalence or reasons for false accusations.

The Department appreciates the commenters who described campus sexual assault proceedings as difficult to navigate and complex because they nearly always involve different personal recollections about what happened, with few or no witnesses or physical evidence, possibly influenced by alcohol use by one or both parties. Some commenters emphasized, and the Department agrees, that the difficult, complex nature of Title IX sexual harassment situations cautions against concluding that allegations are "false" based solely on the outcome of the case, because lack of evidence sufficient to conclude responsibility does not necessarily imply that the allegations were unfounded or false. In response to commenters addressing this topic, these final regulations contain a provision expressly prohibiting retaliation[430] and specifying that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation for making a materially false statement in bad faith does not constitute retaliation, but a determination regarding responsibility, alone, is not sufficient to conclude that any party made a materially false statement in bad faith. This provision cautions recipients to avoid stating or

[430] Section 106.71.

implying to complainants whose formal complaints end in a determination of non-responsibility that the determination, alone, means that the complainant's allegations were false or show bad faith on the part of the complainant, because such statements or implications may constitute retaliation. The Department further notes that the new provision in § 106.71(b)(2) applies equally to respondents and complainants, such that a determination of responsibility against a respondent, alone, is insufficient to justify punishing the respondent for making a materially false statement in bad faith. The Department agrees with commenters who asserted that a complainant's allegations may be determined to be accurate and valid even if there is no evidence corroborating the complainant's statements. The final regulations are designed to result in accurate outcomes regardless of the type of evidence available in particular cases.

Changes: The Department has added § 106.71(b)(2), which provides that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation for making a materially false statement in bad faith does not constitute retaliation, provided that a determination regarding responsibility, alone, is not sufficient to conclude that such a false statement was made.

General Support and Opposition for Supreme Court Framework Adopted in § 106.44(a)

Comments: A number of commenters expressed general support for § 106.44(a). Several commenters supported the provision because they believed it was fair and thoughtful or made common sense. Commenters stated that this provision brings clarity and accountability. One commenter opined that the proposed rules would restore public confidence in these proceedings.

Other commenters expressed satisfaction that the provisions in § 106.44(a) are consistent with basic constitutional principles and operative practices in our criminal justice system. A number of commenters argued that the proposed rules were necessary because the processes under previous rules have been inadequate. Some commenters argued that this provision is necessary because there needs to be more due process provided after the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter. Commenters expressed concern the previous approach in guidance lacked protections for the accused, and the proposed rules balance protection for the accused with justice for victims. Commenters asserted the proposed rules bring back the rule of law to these proceedings. Other commenters expressed concern that past Department guidance has led to violations of students' free speech rights. Another commenter asserted that by nature, universities are ill-equipped to handle criminal assault charges and asserted that if universities are going to deal with serious charges like sexual assault, it is critical that the sanctions they wield, which often can have significant consequences, are applied only after a fair process to determine facts and guilt; the commenter supported the process that the proposed regulations provide.

Commenters expressed support for the Department's general approach because it is flexible. Commenters supported the "not clearly unreasonable standard" in particular for this reason. Commenters also expressed support for this approach because it brings clarity to a very confusing and complicated issue. Some commenters expressed support for the proposed rules because they are pro-women. Other commenters asserted that the proposed rules add needed clarity to what is required by recipients under Title IX. Some commenters also stated that responding to sexual harassment is a uniquely difficult challenge because, unlike sexual assault, it is intertwined with free speech.

Commenters also expressed support for the Department's choice to respect survivors' autonomy in deciding whether to initiate a grievance process in the higher education setting. Some commenters suggested expanding the deliberately indifferent standard to include the respondent so that recipients must respond in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent toward a complainant or respondent. Other commenters asserted that not all cases of sexual harassment warrant discipline because sometimes a reporting party just wants the respondent to understand why what they did was wrong.

Some commenters suggested adding a statute of limitations requirement in the filing of a complaint that aligns to that jurisdiction so as to preserve evidence and protect both parties.

Other commenters expressed disapproval of the notion of third-party reporting and bystander intervention because posters plastered all over campuses that command students to make reporting a habit have a totalitarian feel. Other commenters asked if the Department would consider encouraging schools to inquire into anonymous and third-party reports as a means of preventing harassment from worsening.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the comments in support of the deliberate indifference standard in § 106.44(a). The deliberate indifference standard provides consistency with the Title IX rubric for judicial and administrative enforcement and gives a recipient sufficient flexibility and discretion to address sexual harassment. At the same time, for reasons explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department has tailored a deliberate indifference standard for administrative enforcement purposes by adding specific obligations that every recipient must meet as part of every response to sexual harassment, including offering supportive measures to complainants through the Title IX Coordinator engaging in an interactive discussion with the complainant about the complainant's wishes, and explaining to the complainant the option and process for filing a formal complaint.

The Department acknowledges that some commenters think that these final regulations are pro-women while others think that these final regulations are pro-men. The final regulations are structured to avoid any favoritism on the basis of sex, and the Department will enforce them in a manner that does not discriminate on the basis of sex.

The Department appreciates the commenters who would like the Department to make it clear that the deliberate indifference standard applies to both complainants and respondents. To address this concern, the Department is revising § 106.44(a) to clarify that a recipient must treat complainants and respondents equitably, which for a respondent means following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30.

We also appreciate commenters who would like us to respect the autonomy of the complainant. A complainant may only want supportive measures, may wish to go through an informal process, or may want to file a formal complaint. The Department revised § 106.44(a) to clarify that an equitable response for a complainant means offering supportive measures irrespective of whether the complainant also chooses to file a formal complaint. Additionally, a recipient may choose to offer an informal resolution process under § 106.45(b)(9) (except as to allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student). These final regulations thus respect a complainant's autonomy in determining how the complainant would like to proceed after a recipient becomes aware (through the complainant's own report, or any third party reporting the complainant's alleged victimization) that a complainant has allegedly suffered from sexual harassment.

The Department does not wish to impose a statute of limitations for filing a formal complaint of sexual harassment under Title IX. Each State may have a different statute of limitations for filing a complaint, which goes against the Department's objective of creating uniformity and consistency.

Additionally, a State's statute of limitations for each category of sexual harassment may be different as jurisdictions may have a different statute of limitations for criminal offenses versus civil torts, adding yet another level of complexity to a recipient's response. The Department notes that a complainant must be participating in or attempting to participate in the education program or activity of the

recipient with which the formal complaint is filed as provided in the revised definition of "formal complaint" in § 106.30; this provision tethers a recipient's obligation to investigate a complainant's formal complaint to the complainant's involvement (or desire to be involved) in the recipient's education program or activity so that recipients are not required to investigate and adjudicate allegations where the complainant no longer has any involvement with the recipient while recognizing that complainants may be affiliated with a recipient over the course of many years and sometimes complainants choose not to pursue remedial action in the immediate aftermath of a sexual harassment incident. The Department believes that applying a statute of limitations may result in arbitrarily denying remedies to sexual harassment victims. At the same time, the § 106.45 grievance process contains procedures designed to take into account the effect of passage of time on a recipient's ability to resolve allegations of sexual harassment. For example, if a formal complaint of sexual harassment is made several years after the sexual harassment allegedly occurred, § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) provides that if the respondent is no longer enrolled

or employed by the recipient, or if specific circumstances prevent the recipient from gathering evidence sufficient to reach a determination as to the formal complaint or allegations therein, then the recipient has the discretion to dismiss the formal complaint or any allegations therein.

Similarly, the Department does not take a position in the NPRM or these final regulations on whether recipients

should encourage anonymous reports of sexual harassment, but we have revised § 106.8(a) and § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to emphasize that third party (including "bystander") reporting, as well as anonymous reporting (by the complainant or by a third party) is a permissible manner of triggering a recipient's response obligations.[431]

[431] Section 106.8(a) states that any person may report sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) by using the contact information listed for the Title IX Coordinator, and that such a report may be made "at any time (including during non-business hours)" by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the listed office address. Section 106.30 defines "actual knowledge" and includes a statement that "notice" charging a recipient with actual knowledge includes a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a). See also discussion of anonymous reporting in the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble.

Irrespective of whether a report of sexual harassment is anonymous, a recipient with actual knowledge of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment in an education program or activity of the recipient against a person in the United States, must respond promptly in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent generally and must meet the specific obligations set forth in revised § 106.44(a). On the other hand, if a recipient cannot identify any of the parties involved in the alleged sexual harassment based on the anonymous report, then a response that is not clearly unreasonable under light of these known circumstances will differ from a response under circumstances where the recipient knows the identity of the parties involved in the alleged harassment, and the recipient may not be able to meet its obligation to, for instance, offer supportive measures to the unknown complainant.

Changes: The Department revised § 106.44(a) to require recipients to respond promptly in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent. We also added to that paragraph: A recipient's response must treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering supportive measures as defined in § 106.30 to a complainant, and by following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, against a respondent. The Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.

The Department also has revised § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) to state that if a respondent is no longer enrolled or employed by a recipient, or if specific circumstances prevent the recipient from gathering evidence sufficient to reach a determination as to the formal complaint or allegations therein, then the recipient may dismiss the formal complaint or any allegations therein.

We have also revised § 106.8(a) and § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to expressly state that any person may report sexual harassment in person, by mail, telephone, or e-mail, by using the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator.

Comments: A number of commenters asserted that § 106.44(a) does not adequately protect students in both elementary and secondary and postsecondary education. Some commenters stated that no harassment at all should be tolerated under Title IX. Other commenters asserted that the provision would hinder Title IX enforcement. Still other commenters opined that the provision creates a situation in which systematic sexual harassment and misconduct can continue. Other commenters gave examples of the need to protect students evidenced by high-profile sexual abuse scandals at postsecondary institutions. Some commenters asserted that the proposed rules change schools' current responsibilities to take prompt and effective steps to end harassment, arguing that the current standard is more protective of students than the new deliberate indifference standard. Other commenters stated that the provision allows schools to "check boxes" in investigating complaints of sexual misconduct and will lead to a less prompt, less equitable response. Commenters stated the proposed rules would require schools to ignore all sexual harassment unless the student has been denied equal access to education, even if the student has to sit next to their harasser or rapist in class every day, which creates a hostile environment for victims and negatively affects victims' ability to proceed with their education. Commenters argued schools will become more dangerous because the proposed rules perpetuate rape culture.

Discussion: The Department agrees with commenters inasmuch as proposed §

106.44(a), in conjunction with the way that actual knowledge was defined in § 106.30, did not adequately protect students in the elementary and secondary context. As discussed in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, we have revised § 106.30 defining actual knowledge to include notice to any elementary and secondary school employee.

We also agree with commenters to the extent that proposed § 106.44(a) did not impose sufficient specific, mandatory requirements as to what a recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response must consist of in order to protect complainants and be fair to respondents, in the context of elementary and secondary schools as well as the postsecondary institution context. As revised, § 106.44(a) requires all recipients to treat complainants and respondents equitably when responding to a report or formal complaint of sexual harassment (by offering supportive measures to complainants, and by disciplining respondents only after applying a grievance process that complies with § 106.45).

When a recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment in its education program or activity, the Department will not tolerate, and the final regulations do not allow recipients to tolerate, sexual harassment, including systematic sexual harassment or the perpetuation of a rape culture. Contrary to commenters' assertions, recipients will not be allowed to ignore sexual harassment until it leads to the denial of equal access to education and must respond to every report of sexual harassment by offering supportive measures by engaging in an interactive discussion with the complainant to consider the complainant's wishes regarding available supportive measures, with or without the filing of a formal complaint. Supportive measures for complainants may include a different seating assignment or other accommodation so that the complainant does not need to sit next to the respondent in class every day. By requiring a recipient to offer supportive measures, these final regulations do not create or further a hostile environment and expressly require recipients to provide measures designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.

In response to comments, the Department also revised § 106.44(a) to clarify that a recipient must respond promptly in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent. This clarifies that whether or not a formal complaint triggers a grievance process, the recipient must promptly offer supportive measures to the complainant. Where a formal complaint does trigger a grievance process, § 106.45(b)(1)(v) requires recipients to have a reasonably prompt time frame for the conclusion of the grievance process, including any appeals or informal resolution process.

Changes: As previously noted, the Department revised § 106.44(a) to require that the recipient respond promptly, and by offering supportive measures to complainants while refraining from punishing a respondent without following the § 106.45 grievance process.

Comments: Commenters expressed concern that the trauma suffered by victims is too great to hold schools to the deliberate indifference standard, which commenters characterized as too low a standard. Commenters noted the severe long-term effects of sexual assault and harassment on victims, including depression and suicide.

Commenters expressed concern with the "clearly unreasonable" standard because false reporting is much less likely to happen than actual rape. Commenters stated the proposed rules promote the misconception that survivors are making false accusations of sexual assault.

Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules allow perpetrators in positions of authority to abuse the system. Commenters stated that by allowing institutions to create complex and opaque systems for reporting sexual harassment or sexual assault, perpetrators in positions of authority can continue to victimize students over long periods.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that the deliberate indifference standard in § 106.44(a) is too low of a standard to protect complainants and hold schools, colleges, and universities responsible for responding to sexual harassment in education programs or activities. As adapted from the Gebser/Davis framework and revised in these final regulations, this standard requires recipients to offer supportive measures to a complainant through an interactive process whereby the Title IX Coordinator must contact the complainant to discuss availability of supportive measures (with or without the filing of a formal complaint), consider the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. The Department has not previously imposed a legally binding requirement on recipients to offer supportive measures to a complainant in response to a report of sexual harassment. The Department acknowledges that sexual assault and sexual harassment may have severe, long-term consequences, which is why the Department requires recipients to respond promptly and to offer a complainant supportive measures. The final regulations' emphasis on supportive measures recognizes that educational institutions are uniquely positioned to take prompt action to protect complainants' equal access to education when the educational institution is made aware of sexual harassment in its education program or activity, often in ways that even a court-issued restraining order or criminal prosecution of the respondent would not accomplish (e.g., approving a leave of absence for a complainant healing from trauma, or accommodating the re-taking of an examination missed in the aftermath of sexual violence, or arranging for counseling or mental health therapy for a sexual harassment victim experiencing PTSD symptoms). While we recognize that the range of supportive measures (defined in § 106.30 as individualized services, reasonably available, without fee or charge to the party) will vary among recipients, we believe that every recipient has the ability to consider, offer, and provide some kind of individualized services reasonably available, designed to meet the needs of a particular complainant to help the complainant stay in school and on track academically and with respect to the complainant's educational benefits and opportunities, as well as to protect parties' safety or deter sexual harassment. These final regulations impose on recipients a legal obligation to do what recipient educational institutions have the ability and responsibility to do to respond promptly and supportively to help complainants, while treating respondents fairly.

Commenters erroneously asserted that the Department is adopting the standard in § 106.44(a) because of a belief that false reporting occurs more frequently than rape; these final regulations are not premised on, and do not promote, this notion. As explained previously, the Department is adopting this standard to require recipients to respond promptly and in a manner that provides a complainant with supportive measures and presents the complainant with more control over the process by which the recipient will respond to the report of sexual harassment.

This standard will not allow perpetrators in positions of authority to abuse the system or to continue to victimize students over long periods of time. Contrary to the commenters' assertions, these final regulations do not allow institutions to create complex and opaque systems for reporting sexual harassment or sexual assault. These final regulations require recipients to notify all students and employees (and parents and guardians of elementary and secondary school students) of the name or title, office address, electronic mail address, and telephone number of the employee or employees designated as the Title IX Coordinator pursuant to § 106.8(a) so that students and employees will know to whom they may report sexual harassment and how to make such a report, including options for reporting during non-business hours. Each recipient also must prominently display the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator on its website, if any, and in each handbook or catalog that it makes available to applicants for admission and employment, students, parents or legal guardians of elementary and secondary school students, employees, and all unions or professional organizations holding collective bargaining or professional agreements with the recipient, pursuant to § 106.8(c).

Additionally, a recipient must respond when the recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment, even if the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim) is not the person who reports the sexual harassment. As explained above, "actual knowledge" is defined in § 106.30 as notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to a recipient's Title IX Coordinator or any official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient, or to any employee of an elementary and secondary school. Far from being complex or opaque, the final regulations ensure that recipients and their educational communities (including their students, employees, and parents of elementary and secondary school students) understand how to report sexual harassment and what the recipient's response will be. Regardless of whether a recipient desires to absolve itself of actual knowledge of sexual harassment, a recipient cannot avoid actual knowledge triggering prompt response obligations, because any person (not only the complainant – i.e., the alleged victim – but any third party) may report sexual harassment allegations to the Title IX Coordinator, to an official with authority to take corrective action, or to any elementary or secondary school employee.[432] The final regulations require recipients to post on their websites the contact information for the recipient's Title IX Coordinator and to send notice to every student, employee, and parent of every elementary and secondary school student of the Title IX

[432] See § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" and § 106.44(a) requiring a prompt response to actual knowledge of sexual harassment in a recipient's program or activity against a person in the United States.

Coordinator's contact information.[433] The final regulations thus create clear, accessible channels for any person to report sexual harassment in a way that triggers a recipient's response obligations. A recipient must promptly respond if it has actual knowledge that any person, including someone in a position of authority, is sexually

[433] Section 106.8 (expressly stating that any person may report sexual harassment by using the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report; requiring the contact information to be prominently displayed on recipients' websites; and stating that reports may be made at any time including during non-business hours by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address or by mail to the listed office address).

harassing or assaulting students; failure to do so violates these final regulations. As previously stated, the deliberate indifference standard is flexible and may require a different response depending on the unique circumstances of each report of sexual harassment. lf a recipient has actual knowledge of a pattern of alleged sexual harassment by a perpetrator in a position of authority, then a response that is not deliberately indifferent or clearly unreasonable may require the recipient's Title IX Coordinator to sign a formal complaint obligating the recipient to investigate in accordance with § 106.45, even if the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim) does not wish to file a formal complaint or participate in a grievance process.

Changes: None.

Comments: A number of commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules create more obstacles for survivors. Commenters stated that the proposed rules are not based in science and that reducing existing standards by not providing support and services to survivors of sexual assault and harassment is harmful and out of step with data and research. Other commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules prevent survivors from coming forward by cutting off their access to resources. Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules are unfair to, unreasonable, or indifferent toward survivors and allows schools to do very little to help survivors. Commenters stated the proposed rules make it impossible for survivors to seek meaningful redress

from their schools after having experienced sexual harassment.

Some commenters expressed concern that the standard for opening an investigation is too high. Other commenters suggested that the standard for opening an investigation into an individual student's complaint of harassment should not be as high as the standard for actually holding a school liable as an institution. Commenters stated that the Title IX Coordinator determining if a complaint meets certain criteria is an unnecessary obstacle.

Commenters argued that requiring a formal complaint places additional burdens on the individual who has experienced trauma. Commenters stated the process could retraumatize the survivor and discourage others from coming forward. Commenters stated a plaintiff would normally be able to access equitable relief to remedy unintentional discrimination through a court order, but the Department would not attempt to secure a remedy on the same facts.

Discussion: Contrary to commenters' assertions, these final regulations remove obstacles for complainants by clearly requiring recipients to offer supportive measures irrespective of whether the complainant files a formal complaint and without any showing of proof of the complainant's allegations. The final regulations provide greater choice and control for complainants. Complainants may choose whether to receive supportive measures without filing a formal complaint, may choose to receive supportive measures and file a formal complaint, or may choose to receive supportive measures and request any informal resolution process that the recipient may offer. Accordingly, these final regulations respect complainants' autonomy and require recipients to consider the wishes of each complainant with respect to the type of response that best suits a complainant's particular needs.[434]

We disagree that the standard for opening an investigation is the same

---

[434] While the final regulations at § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint") give Title IX Coordinators discretion to sign a formal complaint even where the complainant does not wish to participate in a grievance process, the final regulations also protect every complainant's right not to participate. § 106.71 (prohibiting retaliation against any person exercising rights under Title IX, including participation or refusal to participate in any grievance process).

standard for holding a recipient liable and that this standard is too high. If a recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment (or allegations of sexual harassment) in its education program or activity against a person in the United States, then it must begin an investigation as soon as the complainant requests an investigation by filing a formal complaint (or when the Title IX Coordinator determines that circumstances require or justify signing a formal complaint). The actual knowledge standard is discussed in greater depth under the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble.

Title IX Coordinators have always had to consider whether a report satisfies the criteria in the recipient's policy, and these final regulations are not creating new obstacles in that regard. The criteria that the Title IX Coordinator must consider are statutory criteria under Title IX or criteria under case law interpreting Title IX's non-discrimination mandate with respect to discrimination on the basis of sex in the recipient's education program or activity against a person in the United States, tailored for administrative enforcement.[435] Additionally, these final regulations do not preclude action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct, as clearly stated in revised § 106.45(b)(3)(i), if the conduct alleged does not meet the definition of Title IX sexual harassment.

The Department understands commenters' concerns that requiring complainants to go through a formal

---

[435] See the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble.

complaint process may cause further trauma, which is why the Department's final regulations provide that a recipient must offer supportive measures even if the complainant does not choose to file a formal complaint. We do not think that giving a complainant the choice to file a formal complaint will further traumatize the complainant. Giving complainants the option to choose a formal complaint process rather than mandating such a process gives complainants more autonomy and control over their circumstances, which survivor advocates have emphasized is crucial to supporting survivors, and may make more complainants feel comfortable enough to report allegations of sexual harassment. Where a complainant does file a formal complaint raising allegations of sexual harassment, both parties must have full and fair opportunity to participate in a fair grievance process designed to reach an accurate outcome. The final regulations endeavor to take into account the fact that navigating a formal process can be difficult for both complainants and respondents.[436]

The Department does not understand the comment that these final regulations do not require recipients to address

---

[436] E.g., § 106.45(b)(5)(iv) gives both parties equal opportunity to be assisted by an advisor of choice.

unintentional discrimination that a court would address. These final regulations require a recipient to respond to allegations of sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, irrespective of whether the alleged conduct was intentional or unintentional on the part of the respondent[437] and similarly, a recipient's response obligations will be enforced without any regard for whether a recipient "intentionally" violated these final regulations. If a complainant received a court order remedying unintentional discrimination, the recipient would have to follow any court order that by its terms applied to that recipient.

---

[437] Section 106.30 defining "sexual harassment" does not impose an independent intent or mens rea requirement on conduct that constitutes sexual harassment; however, the Department notes that the sexual offense of "fondling," which is an offense under "sexual assault" as defined under the Clery Act and made part of Title IX sexual harassment under § 106.30, includes as an element of fondling touching "for the purpose of sexual gratification." Courts have interpreted similar "purpose of" elements in sex offense legislation as an intent requirement, and recipients should take care to apply that intent requirement to incidents of alleged fondling so that, for example, unwanted touching committed by young children – with no sexualized intent or purpose – is distinguished from Title IX sexual harassment and can be addressed by a recipient outside these final regulations.

Changes: We have revised § 106.44(a) to require recipients to treat complainants and respondents equitably meaning

offering supportive measures to a complainant and refraining from disciplining a respondent with following the § 106.45 grievance process; specifically, a recipient's Title IX Coordinator must contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures (with or without the filing of a formal complaint), consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.

Comments: Some commenters argued that the proposed rules would allow a school to treat survivors poorly and impose little or no sanctions for rapists. Other commenters stated the proposed rules would dissolve free speech for survivors.

Some commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules allow schools to evade responsibility and accountability. Other commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules give too much deference to school districts. At least one commenter expressed concern that the Department's decision to adopt the deliberate indifference standard essentially negates the Department's ability to perform regulatory oversight, one of its primary functions.

Commenters argued that deferring to a school district's determination is not always appropriate, and accountability is necessary to ensure schools are free of sexual harassment. Other commenters expressed concern that universities can expediently reduce liability by simply checking boxes and doing nothing. Commenters argued that the responsibilities of university administrators and educators extend beyond the minimal standard set by the rule. Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules allow the Department to defer to local leaders rather than ensuring universally agreed-upon standards. Other commenters argued that institutions need to be labeled publicly as offenders.

Discussion: As previously noted, the recipient cannot ignore a complainant's report of sexual harassment, and these final regulations do not prevent punishment of perpetrators of sexual assault; the recipient must offer supportive measures to the complainant under § 106.44(a) and Title IX Coordinators must be trained to serve impartially, without prejudgment of the facts and without bias, under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). A recipient may impose disciplinary sanctions upon a respondent after a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. Requiring recipients to offer supportive measures to the complainant and follow a grievance process under § 106.45 prior to disciplining the respondent helps ensure that a recipient's response treats complainants and respondents fairly. Moreover, the final regulations add § 106.71 to assure complainants and respondents that the recipient cannot retaliate against any party.

Contrary to commenters' assertions, these final regulations do not dissolve free speech for complainants. The Department revised § 106.44(a) to clarify that no recipient is required to restrict a person's rights under the U.S. Constitution, including the First Amendment, to satisfy its obligation not to be deliberately indifferent in response to sexual harassment. Although this premise is expressed in § 106.6(d), which applies to the entirety of Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations, in recognition of commenters' concerns that a recipient subject to constitutional restraints may believe that the recipient must restrict constitutional rights in order to comply with the recipient's obligation to respond to a Title IX sexual harassment incident, the Department reinforces in § 106.44(a) that responding in a non-

deliberately indifferent manner to a complainant does not require restricting constitutional rights.[438]

The Department is not negating its duties or unduly deferring to a recipient with respect to compliance with Title IX. The Department is clarifying the recipient's legally enforceable obligations through these final regulations and providing greater consistency. Every complainant who reports sexual harassment, as defined in § 106.30, will know that the recipient must offer supportive measures in response to such a report, and every respondent will know that a recipient must provide a grievance process under § 106.45 prior to imposing disciplinary sanctions. The Department will continue to exercise regulatory oversight in enforcing these final regulations.

---

[438] Similarly, the Department emphasizes the purpose of § 106.6(d) in new § 106.71(b) (prohibiting retaliation) to remind recipients that in the context of deciding if conduct constitutes retaliation, the Department will interpret the retaliation prohibition in a manner consistent with constitutional rights such as rights under the First Amendment.

Recipients, including universities, will not be able to simply check off boxes without doing anything. Recipients will need to engage in the detailed and thoughtful work of informing a complainant of options, offering supportive measures to complainants through an interactive process described in revised § 106.44(a), and providing a formal complaint process with robust due process protections beneficial to both parties as described in § 106.45. Where a formal complaint triggers a grievance process, § 106.45 requires recipients to do much more than simply have a process "on paper" or "check off boxes." These final regulations require a recipient to investigate and adjudicate a complaint in a way that gives both parties a meaningful opportunity to participate, including by requiring the recipient to objectively evaluate relevant evidence, permitting parties to inspect and review evidence, and providing the parties a copy of an investigative report prior to any hearing or other determination regarding responsibility. These procedures, and all the provisions in § 106.45, must be followed by the recipient using personnel who are free from bias and conflicts of interest and who are trained to serve impartially.

With respect to commenters who asserted that recipients should have greater obligations than those imposed under these final regulations, the Department notes that nothing in these final regulations precludes action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct that these final regulations do not address. For example, a recipient may choose to address conduct outside of or not in its "education program or activity," even though Title IX does not require a recipient to do so. The Department believes that these final regulations hold recipients to appropriately high, legally enforceable standards of compliance to effectuate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.

The Department disagrees that all institutions should be labeled publicly as offenders for violating Title IX. The Department will make findings against recipients that violate these final regulations and will continue to make such letters of findings publicly available.

Changes: The Department revised § 106.44(a) to clarify that the Department will not deem a recipient not deliberately indifferent based on the recipient's restriction of rights protected under the U.S. Constitution, including the First Amendment, the Fifth Amendment, and the Fourteenth Amendment.

Comments: A number of commenters argued that the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter was better for protecting survivors and was fair to both sides. One commenter urged the Department to reject the NPRM and to reinstate the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and 2014 Q&A to keep students safe. This commenter argued that Title IX is a critical safety net because applicable State laws and school policies may vary widely and leave students unprotected. The commenter also cited studies showing a widespread problem of educator sexual misconduct against students.[439] Another commenter suggested that the proposed rules should be replaced with affirmative obligations from the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter requiring the recipient to take immediate action to eliminate the harassment, prevent its reoccurrence, and address its effects.

[439] Commenters cited, e.g.: Magnolia Consulting, Characteristics of School Employee Sexual Misconduct: What We Know from a 2014 Sample (Feb. 1, 2018), https://magnoliaconsulting.org/news/2018/02/characteristics-school-employee-sexual-misconduct (noting one in three employee-respondents in elementary and secondary schools sexually abuse multiple student victims).

A number of commenters argued that the 2001 Guidance was adequate and protected survivors. Commenters asserted that the 2001 Guidance standards were superior to the Gebser/Davis standards. Other commenters expressed concern that even under the 2001 Guidance standards, schools failed to adopt policies that would develop responses to sexual harassment designed to reduce occurrence and remedy effects. Similarly, commenters expressed concern that many cases demonstrate that even when students and parents were well informed on the 2001 Guidance standards, and brought legitimate concerns directly to institutions, institutions continued to fail students. Commenters argued that schools conducted an in-name-only investigation and refused to discipline respondents, resulting in escalating sexual harassment, in some cases leading to rape.

A number of commenters opposed the use of the Gebser/Davis standards. Commenters disapproved of the use of the higher bar erected by the U.S. Supreme Court in the very specific and narrow context of a civil Title IX lawsuit seeking monetary damages against a school due to its response (or lack thereof) to actual notice of sexual harassment. Commenters argued these standards have no place in the far different context of administrative enforcement with its iterative process and focus on voluntary corrective action by schools. Other commenters argued that the 2001 Guidance directly addressed this precedent, concluding that it was inappropriate for the Department to limit its enforcement activities by applying the more stringent standard, stating that the Department would continue to enforce the broader protections provided under Title IX, and noting that the Department acknowledges that it is "not required to adopt the liability standards applied by the Supreme Court in private suits for money damages." Other commenters expressed concern about the Davis progeny, where Federal courts have determined that only the most severe cases can meet the deliberate indifference standard. Other commenters suggested that the liability standard should be higher than what was set by the Supreme Court, and that recipients must be on clear notice of what conduct is prohibited and that recipients must be held liable only for conduct over which they have control.

Discussion: Although the Department is not required to adopt the deliberate indifference standard articulated by the Supreme Court, we are persuaded by the rationales relied on by the Supreme Court and believe that the deliberate indifference standard represents the best policy approach. As the Supreme Court reasoned in Davis, a recipient acts with deliberate indifference only when it responds to sexual harassment in a manner that is "clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances."[440] The Department believes this standard holds recipients accountable for providing a meaningful response to every report, without depriving

---

[440] Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 648-49 (1999).

recipients of legitimate and necessary flexibility to make disciplinary decisions and provide supportive measures that best respond to particular incidents of sexual harassment. Sexual harassment incidents present context-driven, fact-specific needs and concerns for each complainant, and the Department believes that teachers and local school leaders with unique knowledge of the school climate and student body are best positioned to make decisions about supportive measures and potential disciplinary measures; thus, unless the recipient's response to sexual harassment is clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, the Department will not second guess such decisions.[441] In response to commenters' concerns that the liability

---

[441] Id. Indeed, the Supreme Court observed in Davis that courts must not second guess recipients' disciplinary decisions. As a matter of policy, the Department believes that the Department should not second guess recipients' disciplinary decisions through the administrative enforcement process. When a recipient finds a respondent responsible for Title IX sexual harassment, the Department requires the recipient to effectively implement remedies for the complainant, and will not second guess the recipient's determination of responsibility solely based on the fact that the Department would have weighed the evidence in the case differently than the recipient's decision-maker did. §§ 106.45(b)(1)(i), 106.45(b)(7)(iv), 106.44(b)(2).

standard of deliberate indifference gives recipients too much leeway to respond to the sexual harassment ineffectively, the Department has specified certain steps a recipient must take in all circumstances. For example, a response that is not deliberately indifferent must include promptly informing each complainant of the method for filing a formal complaint, offering supportive measures for that complainant, and imposing discipline on a respondent only after complying with the grievance process set forth in § 106.45. Where a respondent has been found responsible for sexual harassment, any disciplinary sanction decision rests within the discretion of the recipient, and the Department's concern under Title IX is to mandate that the recipient provide remedies, as appropriate, to the victim, designed to restore or preserve the victim's equal educational access.[442]

The Department acknowledges that the deliberate indifference standard in § 106.44(a) departs from standards set forth in prior guidance and applied in OCR enforcement of Title IX. In its previous guidance and enforcement practices, the Department took the position that constructive notice – as opposed to actual knowledge – triggered a recipient's duty to respond to sexual harassment; that recipients had a duty to respond to a broader range of sex-based misconduct than the sexual harassment defined in the proposed rules; and that recipients' response to sexual harassment should be effective and should be judged under a reasonableness or even strict liability

---

[442] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i).

standard, rather than under the deliberate indifference standard.[443]

Based on its consideration of the text and purpose of Title IX, of the reasoning underlying the Court's decisions in Gebser and Davis, and over 124,000 comments, the Department departs from its prior guidance that set forth a standard different from the deliberate indifference standard. We discuss the reasons for the ways in which we have adopted, but tailored, the three-part Gebser/Davis framework in these final regulations, in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, including the ways in which these final regulations are similar to, and different from, Department guidance.

---

[443] 2001 Guidance at iv, vi.

In response to commenters who asserted that recipients should only be liable for conduct over which they have control, the Department agrees with that statement and, in response, adds to § 106.44(a) the statement that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs.

The Department derives this language from the holding in Davis that a recipient should be held liable for "circumstances wherein the recipient exercises substantial control over both the harasser and the context in which the known harassment occurs."[444] Accordingly, the Department does not need to adopt a higher standard than what the Gebser/Davis framework set forth in order to hold a recipient responsible for circumstances under the recipient's control. These final regulations apply to employees who sexually harass a student and will provide uniformity and consistency with respect to how a recipient responds to employee-on-student sexual harassment.

---

[444] Davis, 526 U.S. at 645.

The Department acknowledges that some recipients failed to satisfy the requirements in the Department's past guidance and does not believe that the past failures of these recipients require the Department to adopt a different standard. The standards we adopt cannot ensure recipients' compliance in every instance. Any failure to comply would be handled as an enforcement matter, but such failure to comply, alone, does not warrant changing the standard.

Changes: In addition to the changes previously noted, § 106.44(a) now includes a statement that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs.

Comments: Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules would result in less predictable outcomes for schools. Commenters reasoned that if the Department applies a standard for monetary damages to its administrative enforcement scheme, plaintiffs will ask the courts to play the role that the Department abdicated. Commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules will cause a massive increase in lawsuits against colleges because individuals who would have filed administrative complaints with the Department will instead file court actions for equitable relief against recipients of Federal funds thus depriving schools of an opportunity to comply voluntarily. Commenters asserted that such a system would be both less efficient and far slower than the status quo, because the costs of litigation would dwarf the costs of negotiating a voluntary resolution agreement and recipients of Federal funds would be unable to engage in informal negotiations with the court over the extent of the remedy. Commenters argued that if the Department adopts the same standards as the Court adopted for monetary damages, students with viable claims will likely bypass the Department altogether, undercutting the Department's efforts to promote systemic reforms that would benefit individuals without the means to engage in litigation.

Commenters expressed concern that the Department is the wrong entity to enact Title IX reforms and that survivors should be the ones who create or enact these regulations. Commenters likened the proposed rules to laws restricting abortions inasmuch as people who are not women should not dictate how a woman's body is treated, with respect to having an abortion or how a school responds to the sexual assault of a woman's body.

Discussion: The Department respectfully disagrees that the proposed rules or these final regulations would result in less predictable outcomes for schools. As previously explained, the Department revised § 106.44(a) to specify that a recipient must offer supportive measures to a complainant, and must include a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30. Additionally, as explained in more detail below, the Department has revised § 106.44(b) to remove the safe harbors that were proposed in the NPRM, replacing the concept of safe harbors with more specific obligations:

mandatory steps that a recipient must take as part of every response to sexual harassment, in § 106.44(a); and a requirement to investigate and adjudicate in accordance with § 106.45 in response to a formal complaint, in § 106.44(b).

The Department disagrees that it is abdicating its role to courts and that litigation will significantly increase as a result of these final regulations. The

Department recognizes that its approach to Title IX enforcement may have caused much litigation in the past, as recipients that complied with the Department's recommendations in past guidance may have risked not providing adequate due process protections, resulting in litigation. Going forward, the Department believes that the balanced approach in these final regulations will provide complainants with supportive, meaningful responses to all reports, and provide both parties with due process protections during investigations and adjudications, which may result in decreased litigation against recipients by complainants and respondents. The Department will be the arbiter of whether a recipient complies with the requirements of these final regulations. Additionally, failure to comply with the Department's regulations may not always result in legal liability before a court. For example, although the final regulations require that a recipient must offer supportive measures to a complainant, a court may determine that a recipient was not deliberately indifferent even though that recipient did not offer supportive measures. If a recipient complies with the Department's regulations and offers supportive measures in response to a complaint of sexual harassment, then such action may persuade a court that the recipient was not deliberately indifferent. Accordingly, the Department retains its proper role as the enforcer of its regulations, and these final regulations may help decrease litigation.

Congress charged the Department with the responsibility to administer Title IX, and the Department has carefully considered the input of survivors as well as other communities through the notice-and-comment rulemaking process before issuing these final regulations. The Department is sensitive to the unique trauma that sexual violence often inflicts on women (as well as men, and LGBTQ individuals); while the Department disagrees with a commenter's assertion that these regulations are similar to laws restricting abortions, we endeavor in these final regulations to give each complainant (regardless of sex) more control over the response of the complainant's school, college, or university in the wake of sexual harassment that violates a woman or other complainant's physical and emotional dignity and autonomy.

Changes: We have removed the "safe harbor" provisions in proposed § 106.44(b).

Comments: Commenters expressed concern that new sets of formal relationships between faculty members and students are established every four months, when students enroll in new courses each academic term and that any given student may not currently be under the supervision of a particular faculty member, but that situation could change in a matter of a few weeks. Such reconfigurations every semester add to the difficulty of determining whether a particular circumstance is or is not within the scope of Title IX pursuant to § 106.44(a).

Discussion: The Department is aware that students will change classes and also have different instructors throughout their education, and these final regulations provide the same clarity and consistency in case law under the Supreme Court's rubric in Gebser/Davis.

The Department notes that "program or activity" has been defined in detail by Congress[445] and is reflected in existing Department regulations.[446] The Department will interpret a recipient's education "program or activity" in accordance with the Title IX statute and its implementing regulations, which generally provide that an educational institution's program or activity includes

---

[445] 20 U.S.C. 1687.
[446] 34 CFR 106.2(h).

“all of the operations of” a postsecondary institution or elementary and secondary school. For instance, incidents that occur in housing that is part of a recipient’s operations such as dormitories that a recipient provides for students or employees whether on or off campus are part of the recipient’s education program or activity. For example, a recipient must respond to an alleged of sexual harassment between two students in one student's dormitory room provided by the recipient. In order to clarify that a recipient's "education program or activity" may also include situations that occur off campus, the Department adds to § 106.44(a) the statement that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs. This helps clarify that even if a situation arises off campus, it may still be part of the recipient's education program or activity if the recipient exercised substantial control over the context and the alleged harasser. While such situations may be fact specific, recipients must consider whether, for example, a sexual harassment incident between two students that occurs in an off-campus apartment (i.e., not a dorm room provided by the recipient) is a situation over which the recipient exercised substantial control; if so, the recipient must respond to notice of sexual harassment that occurred there. The Department has also revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to specifically require recipients to provide Title IX personnel with training about the scope of the recipient's education program or activity, so that recipients accurately identify situations that require a response under Title IX. We further note that we have revised § 106.45(b)(3) to clarify that even if alleged sexual harassment did not occur in the recipient's education program or activity, dismissal of a formal complaint for Title IX purposes does not preclude the recipient from addressing that alleged sexual harassment under the recipient's own code of conduct. Recipients may also choose to provide supportive measures to any complainant, regardless of whether the alleged sexual harassment is covered under Title IX.

The Department is revising the definition of "formal complaint" in § 106.30 to make it clear that the student must be participating in or attempting to participate in the education program or activity of the recipient with which the formal complaint is filed; no similar condition exists with respect to reporting sexual harassment.[447] Changing classes or changing instructors does not necessarily mean that a student is not participating or attempting to participate in a recipient's education program or activity. To the extent that a recipient needs further clarity in this regard, the Department will be relying on statutory and regulatory definitions of a recipient's education "program or activity."[448]

[447] We have revised § 106.8(a) to clarify that any person may report sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is also the person who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) by using any of the listed contact information for the Title IX Coordinator, and a report can be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator.

Changes: The Department has revised § 106.44(a) to state that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs.

---

[448] For further discussion, see the "Section 106.44(a) 'education program or activity'" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

Comments: Commenters stated the proposed rules constitute clear violations of the purpose of Title IX. Commenters expressed concern that the proposed regulations will eliminate the Department's enforcement of Title IX or hurt Title IX, or are contrary to the congressional purpose of Title IX. Commenters expressed concern that

OCR would not be able to investigate a school or begin the processes required for enforcement unless a school's actions already reached the levels necessary for enforcement, effectively eliminating OCR's ability to seek the informal means of enforcement built into the statute, such as resolution agreements with schools.

Discussion: These final regulations adhere closely to both the plain meaning of Title IX and to Federal case law interpreting Title IX; therefore, they are not a violation of the text or purpose of Title IX. These final regulations provide greater clarity for recipients, as recipients will know how the Department requires recipients to respond to reports of sexual harassment.

OCR will continue to vigorously enforce Title IX to achieve recipients' compliance, including by reaching voluntary resolution agreements. Nothing in these final regulations prevents the Department from carrying out its enforcement obligations under Title IX. For example, if the Department receives a complaint that a recipient did not offer supportive measures in response to a report of sexual harassment, the Department may enter into a resolution agreement with the recipient in which the recipient agrees to offer supportive measures for that complainant and for other complainants prospectively.

Changes: None.

Comments: Commenters suggested the final regulations should abolish or limit peer harassment liability for schools. Commenters argued that the Davis decision applying peer harassment liability does not prevent the Department from abolishing such liability as long as there are informed reasons for doing so. Commenters asserted that courts will defer to agency reinterpretations of statutes when the agency supplies a reasoned explanation for its decision, under Chevron deference.[449]

Discussion: The Department acknowledged in the NPRM that it is not required to adopt the deliberate indifference standard articulated by the

---

[449] Commenters cited: Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Res. Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 844-45 (1984) (holding that "considerable weight should be accorded to an executive department's construction of a statutory scheme it is entrusted to administer").

Supreme Court.[450] As explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department is persuaded by the policy rationales relied on by the Court and continues to believe that the Supreme Court's rubric for addressing sexual harassment – including peer [450] 83 FR 61468. For discussion of the way these final regulations adopt the Supreme Court's deliberate indifference liability standard, but tailor that standard to achieve policy aims of administrative enforcement of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, see the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble.

sexual harassment – is the best policy approach, with the adaptions made in these final regulations for administrative enforcement.

Changes: None.

General Support and Opposition for the Grievance Process in § 106.45

Comments: Many commenters favored the § 106.45 grievance process on grounds that it would provide greater clarity, bring fairness to all parties, increase public confidence in school-level Title IX proceedings, and decrease the likelihood that recipients will be sued in court for mishandling Title IX sexual harassment cases. Several commenters expressed support for § 106.45 on the ground that whether false accusations occur at a low rate or a higher rate, false accusations against accused students and employees, and their support networks of family and friends, have devastating consequences. Several commenters included personal stories of being falsely accused, or having family members falsely accused, including where the complainant recanted the allegations after the commenter's loved one had committed suicide. One commenter asserted that the "fraud triangle" theory that explains the dynamics around fraud-related offenses can also illustrate the importance of due process protections in the sexual misconduct context, because rationalization is one of the three legs of the triangle (the other two being pressure and opportunity), and due process protections serve to discourage people from rationalizing dishonesty by ensuring that allegations are investigated before being acted upon.

Some commenters believed that § 106.45 will rectify sex discrimination against men, and some believed that it will correct sex discrimination against women. A few commenters supported the due process protections in § 106.45 on the ground that lack of due process in any system, whether courts of law or educational institution tribunals, often results in persons of color and persons of low socioeconomic status being wrongly or falsely convicted or punished. Several commenters asserted that men of color are more likely than white men to be accused of sexual misconduct and a system that lacks due process thus results in men of color being unfairly denied educational opportunities. One commenter asserted that due process exists not only to protect all individuals irrespective of sex, race, or ethnicity from persecution

by those in power but also exists to ensure those in authority are enacting real justice, and that when due process is abandoned it is always the most marginalized and vulnerable who suffer; other commenters echoed that theme. A few commenters claimed that innocent people do not need due process, or that due process only helps those who are guilty.

Several commenters noted that principles of due process developed over centuries of Western legal history, while imperfect, are most apt to find truth in matters involving high-stakes factual disputes, and that no cause or movement justifies abandoning such principles to equate an accusation with a determination of responsibility. A few commenters expressed support for the due process protections in § 106.45 by noting that Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg has expressed public support for enhancing campus due process, and that public opinion polls have shown public support for due process on college campuses.

Some commenters supported § 106.45 because Title IX sexual harassment proceedings often involve contested proceedings with plausible competing narratives and a lack of disinterested witnesses, and the proposed rules do not give an advantage to either complainants or respondents, but rather provide a web of protections for both sides formulated to ensure as fair and unbiased a result as possible. One commenter recounted a personal experience managing a university's sexual assault response program and opined that because that university's process was widely viewed as fair and impartial to both sides, the program held students responsible where the evidence showed responsibility, including against star athletes; the commenter believed that due process was essential to the program's credibility.[451]

At least one commenter supported the § 106.45 grievance process as a

[451] Commenters cited: Gary Pavela & Gregory Pavela, The Ethical and Educational Imperative of Due Process, 38 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 567 (2012) (arguing that "due process – broadly defined as an inclusive mechanism for disciplined and impartial decision making – is essential to the educational aims of contemporary higher education and to fostering a sense of legitimacy in college and university policies.").

lawful method of implementing Title IX's directive that the Department "effectuate the provisions of" Title IX, citing 20 U.S.C. 1681 and 1682, arguing that the Department's proposed grievance process: adopts procedures designed to reduce or eliminate sex discrimination; prevents violations of substantive non-discrimination mandates; and constitutes a reasonable means of guarding against sex discrimination and unlawful retaliation, particularly because the § 106.45 requirements are sex neutral and narrowly tailored to prevent sex discrimination. One commenter asserted with approval that the § 106.45 grievance process not only expressly prohibits bias and conflicts of interest, but also promotes full and fair adversarial procedures and requires decision-makers to give reasons that explain their decisions – all of which have been shown to prevent biased outcomes.

One commenter suggested improving § 106.45 by clarifying whether the procedures in the "investigations" section apply throughout the entire grievance process or only to the investigation portion of a grievance process. Another commenter expressed concern that recipients wishing to avoid applying the § 106.45 grievance process will process complaints about sexual misconduct outside their Title IX offices under non-Title IX code of conduct provisions and suggested the Department take action to ensure that recipients cannot circumvent § 106.45 by charging students with non-Title IX student conduct code violations. One commenter asked the Department to clarify whether § 106.45 applies to non-

sexual harassment sex discrimination complaints.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the variety of reasons for which commenters expressed support for the § 106.45 grievance process. The provisions in § 106.45 are grounded in principles of due process to promote equitable treatment of complainants and respondents and protect each individual involved in a grievance process without bias against an individual's sex, race, ethnicity, socioeconomic status, or other characteristics, by focusing the proceeding on unbiased, impartial determinations of fact based on relevant evidence. The Department understands that some commenters believe § 106.45 primarily benefits women and others believe such provisions primarily benefit men; however, the Department agrees with still other commenters who support

§ 106.45 because its procedural protections provide all complainants and respondents with a consistent, reliable process without regard to sex. The Department will enforce § 106.45 in a manner that does not discriminate based on sex. The Department agrees that due process of law exists to protect all individuals, and disagrees with commenters who claim that only guilty people need due process protections;

the evolution of the American concept of due process of law has revolved around recognition that for justice to be done, procedural protections must be offered to those accused of even the most heinous offenses – precisely because only through a fair process can a just conclusion of responsibility be made. Further, the § 106.45 grievance process grants procedural rights to complainants and respondents so that both parties benefit from strong, clear due process protections.

In response to a commenter's request, the final regulations include two changes to clarify that procedures and requirements listed in §106.45 apply throughout the entirety of a grievance process. First, the Department uses the phrase "grievance process" and "a grievance process that complies with § 106.45" throughout the final regulations

rather than "grievance procedures" or "due process protections" to reinforce that the entirety of § 106.45 applies when a formal complaint necessitates a grievance process. Second, and in particular response to the commenter's concern, the final regulations revise the investigation portion of § 106.45 to begin with the phrase "When investigating a formal complaint, and throughout the grievance process, a recipient must…"

(emphasis added) to clarify that the procedures and protections in § 106.45(b)(5) apply to investigations but also throughout the grievance process.

The Department appreciates the commenter's concern that § 106.45 not be circumvented by processing sexual harassment complaints under non-Title IX provisions of a recipient's code of conduct. The definition of "sexual harassment" in § 106.30 constitutes the conduct that these final regulations, implementing Title IX, address. Allegations of conduct that do not meet the definition of "sexual harassment" in § 106.30 may be addressed by the recipient under other provisions of the recipient's code of conduct, and we have revised § 106.45(b)(3) to clarify that intent; however, where a formal complaint alleges conduct that meets the Title IX definition of "sexual harassment," a recipient must comply with § 106.45.[452]

In response to a commenter's request for clarification, § 106.45 applies to formal complaints alleging sexual harassment under Title IX, but not to complaints alleging sex discrimination that does not constitute sexual harassment ("non-sexual harassment sex discrimination"). Complaints of non- sexual harassment sex discrimination may be filed with a recipient's Title IX Coordinator for handling under the "prompt and equitable" grievance procedures that recipients must adopt and publish pursuant to § 106.8(c).

---

[452] Section 106.45(b) ("For the purpose of addressing formal complaints of sexual harassment, a recipient's grievance process must comply with the requirements of this section.").

Changes: To clarify that the ten groups of provisions that comprise § 106.45[453] apply as a cohesive whole to the handling of a formal complaint of sexual harassment, the Department has changed terminology throughout the final regulations to refer to "a grievance process complying with § 106.45" (for example, in § 106.44(a)), and uses the phrase "grievance process" rather than "grievance procedures" within § 106.45. Additionally, § 106.45(b)(5) now clarifies that the procedures a recipient must follow during investigation of a formal complaint also must apply throughout the entire grievance process.

---

[453] See the "Summary of § 106.45" subsection of the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

Comments: Two commenters representing trade associations of men's fraternities and women's sororities requested that the Department specify that an individual's Title IX sexual harassment violation must be adjudicated as an individual case unless specific evidence clearly implicates group responsibility, in which case the

recipient must apply a separate grievance process (with the same due process protections contained in § 106.45) to adjudicate group or organizational responsibility. These commenters asserted that in the past few years more than 20 postsecondary institutions have suspended entire systems of fraternities and sororities upon reports of a group member sexually harassing a complainant, and that such action chills and deters victims from reporting sexual harassment because some victims do not wish to see broad groups of people punished for the wrongdoing of an individual perpetrator.

One commenter supported § 106.45 but asked the Department to require recipients to punish individuals who make false accusations.

Discussion: The final regulations address recipients' obligations to respond to sexual harassment, and § 106.45 obligates a recipient to follow a consistent grievance process to investigate and adjudicate allegations of sexual harassment. In § 106.30, "respondent" is defined as "an individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment." The § sexual harassment because such potential sanctions by the recipient against the group do not involve determining responsibility for perpetrating Title IX sexual harassment but rather involve determination of whether the group violated the recipient's code of conduct. Application of non-Title IX provisions of a recipient's code of conduct lies outside the Department's authority under Title IX.

106.45 grievance process, therefore, contemplates a proceeding against an individual respondent to determine responsibility for sexual harassment.[454] The Department declines to require recipients to apply § 106.45 to groups or organizations against whom a recipient wishes to impose sanctions arising from a group member being accused of

---

[454] As discussed in the "Dismissal and Consolidation of Formal Complaints" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble, § 106.45(b)(4) gives recipients the discretion to consolidate formal complaints involving multiple parties where the allegations of sexual harassment arise from the same facts or circumstances; in such consolidated matters, the grievance process applies to more than one complainant and/or more than one respondent, but each party is still an "individual" and not a group or organization.

For the same reason, the Department declines to require a recipient to punish individuals who make false accusations, even if the accusations involve sexual harassment. An individual, or group of individuals, who believe a recipient has treated them differently on the basis of sex in a manner prohibited under Title IX may file a complaint of sex discrimination with the recipient's Title IX Coordinator for handling under the

"prompt and equitable" grievance procedures recipients must adopt and publish pursuant to § 106.8(c).

Changes: None.

Comments: Many commenters expressed concern that the § 106.45 grievance process unduly restricts recipients' flexibility and discretion in structuring and applying recipients' codes of conduct and that it ignores unique needs of the wide array of schools, colleges, and universities that differ in size, location, mission, public or private status, and resources, and imposes a Federal one-size-fits-all mandate on recipients. In support of granting flexibility and discretion to recipients, several commenters pointed the Department to Federal and State court opinions for the proposition that the internal decisions of colleges and universities, including academic and disciplinary matters, are given considerable deference by courts.[455]

Many commenters expressed concerns that the § 106.45 grievance process is too quasi-judicial to be applied in a setting where schools and colleges are not courts of law and that it ignores the educational purpose of school discipline. A few commenters requested that the Department

---

[455] Commenters cited, e.g.: Regents of Univ. of Mich. v. Ewing, 474 U.S. 214, 225 (1985); New Jersey v. T.L.O., 469 U.S. 325 (1985); Doe v. Hamilton Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 329 F. Supp. 3d 543, 470 (E.D. Tenn. 2018).

incorporate more features of legal and court systems into § 106.45, including importing the Federal Rules of Evidence, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and some of the rights afforded to criminal defendants under the U.S. Constitution such as protection against double jeopardy, protection against self-incrimination, and provision of public defenders (or provision of attorneys for both parties in a school-level Title IX proceeding).

Many commenters objected to § 106.45 on the ground that it will be burdensome and costly for many recipients to adopt and implement.

Some commenters believed that § 106.45 heightens the adversarial aspects of a grievance process, and others asserted that increasing the adversarial nature of the process undermines Title

IX as a civil rights mechanism. Some commenters asserted that adversarial proceedings advantage students with greater financial resources who can afford to hire an attorney over socioeconomically disadvantaged students.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges the vast diversity among schools, colleges, and universities, the variety of systems historically used to enforce codes of conduct, and the desirability of each recipient retaining flexibility and discretion to manage its own affairs. With respect to Title IX sexual harassment, however, recipients are not simply enforcing their own codes of conduct; rather, they are complying with a Federal civil rights law, the protections and benefits of which extend uniformly to every person in the education program or activity of a recipient of Federal financial assistance. The need for Title IX to be consistently, predictably enforced weighs in favor of Federal rules standardizing the investigation and adjudication of sexual harassment allegations under these final regulations, implementing Title IX.

The Department agrees with commenters that numerous Federal and State court opinions confirm the proposition that schools, colleges, and universities deserve considerable deference as to their internal affairs including academic and disciplinary decisions. The final regulations respect the right of recipients to make such decisions without being second guessed by the Department. The final regulations do not address recipients' academic decisions (including curricula, or dismissals for failure to meet academic standards), and do not second guess disciplinary decisions. The Department does not require disciplinary sanctions after a determination of responsibility, and does not prescribe any particular form of sanctions.[456] Rather, § 106.45 prescribes a grievance process focused on reaching an accurate determination

---

[456] The Department acknowledges that this approach departs from the 2001 Guidance, which stated that where a school has determined that sexual harassment occurred, effective corrective action "tailored to the specific situation" may include particular sanctions against the respondent, such as counseling, warning, disciplinary action, or escalating consequences. 2001 Guidance at 16. For reasons described throughout this preamble, the final regulations modify this approach to focus on remedies for the complainant who was victimized rather than on second guessing the recipient's disciplinary sanction decisions with respect to the respondent. However, the final regulations are consistent with the 2001 Guidance's approach inasmuch as § 106.45(b)(1)(i) clarifies that "remedies" may consist of individualized services similar to those described in § 106.30 as "supportive measures" except that remedies need not avoid disciplining or burdening the respondent.

regarding responsibility so that recipients and the Department can ensure that victims of sexual harassment receive remedies designed to restore or preserve a victim's equal access to the recipient's education program or activity. Because § 106.45 provides a grievance process designed to effectuate the purpose of Title IX, a Federal civil rights statute, the Title IX grievance process is not purely an internal decision of the recipient. The Department believes that the § 106.45 grievance process will promote consistency, transparency, and predictability for students, employees, and recipients, ensuring that enforcement of Title IX sexual harassment rules does not vary needlessly from school to school or college to college. The Department notes that courts have traditionally distinguished between student dismissal for misconduct, where more due process is required, and dismissal for academic failure, where less due process is owed, because of the subjectivity of a school's conclusion that a student has failed to meet academic standards. Where misconduct is at issue, however, conclusions about whether the misconduct took place involve objective factual determinations rather than subjective academic judgments, and procedures rooted in fundamental due process principles can "safeguard" the accuracy of determinations about misconduct.[457]

Within the standardized § 106.45 grievance process, recipients retain significant flexibility and discretion,

---

[457] Lisa L. Swem, Due Process Rights in Student Disciplinary Matters, 14 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 359, 361-62 (1987) (citing Bd. of Curators of the Univ. of Mo. v. Horowitz, 435 U.S. 78 (1978) where the Supreme Court held that procedures leading to medical student's dismissal for failing to meet academic standards did not violate due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment) (noting that courts often distinguish between student dismissal for misconduct, where more due process is required, and dismissal for academic failure, where less due process is owed, because of the subjectivity of a school's conclusion that a student has failed to meet academic standards); Horowitz, 435 U.S. at 95 fn. 5 (Powell, J., concurring) ("A decision relating to the misconduct of a student requires a factual determination as to whether the conduct took place or not. The accuracy of that determination can be safeguarded by the sorts of procedural protections traditionally imposed under the Due Process Clause.").

including decisions to: designate the reasonable time frames that will apply to the grievance process; use a recipient's own employees as investigators and decision-makers or outsource those functions to contractors; determine whether a party's advisor of choice may actively participate in the grievance process; select the standard of evidence to apply in reaching determinations regarding responsibility; use an individual decision-maker or a panel of decision-makers; offer informal resolution options; impose disciplinary sanctions against a respondent following a determination of responsibility; and select procedures to use for appeals.

The Department agrees with commenters that schools, colleges, and universities are educational institutions and not courts of law. The § 106.45 grievance process does not attempt to transform schools into courts; rather, the prescribed framework provides a structure by which schools reach the factual determinations needed to discern when victims of sexual harassment are entitled to remedies. The Department declines to import into § 106.45 comprehensive rules of evidence, rules of civil or criminal procedure, or constitutional protections available to criminal defendants. The Department recognizes that schools are neither civil nor criminal courts, and acknowledges that the purpose of the § 106.45 grievance process is to resolve formal complaints of sexual harassment in an education program or activity, which is a different purpose carried out in a different forum from private lawsuits in civil courts or criminal charges prosecuted by the government in criminal courts. The Department believes that the final regulations prescribe a grievance process with procedures fundamental to a truth-seeking process reasonably adapted for implementation in an education program or activity.

The Department understands commenters' objections that § 106.45 will be burdensome and costly for many recipients to adopt and implement. The Department also appreciates that many of these commenters, and additional commenters, recognized that receipt of Federal financial assistance requires recipients to comply with regulations effectuating Title IX's non-discrimination mandate and that the benefits of protecting civil rights outweigh the monetary costs of compliance. While the Department is required to estimate the benefits and costs of every regulation, and has considered those benefits and costs for these final regulations, our decisions regarding the final regulations rely on legal and policy considerations designed to effectuate Title IX's civil rights objectives, and not on the estimated cost likely to result from these final regulations.

The Department further acknowledges commenters' concerns that schools, colleges, and universities

exist primarily to educate, and are not courts with a primary purpose, focus, or expertise in administering proceedings to resolve factual disputes. Many commenters expressed a similar concern, that recipients may view a recipient's code of conduct as an educational process rather than a punitive process, and these recipients are thus uncomfortable with a grievance process premised on adversarial aspects of resolving the truth of factual allegations. With respect to Title IX sexual harassment, however, in order to carry out a recipient's responsibility to provide appropriate remedies to victims suffering from that form of sex discrimination, the recipient must administer a grievance process designed to reach reliable factual determinations and do so in a manner free from sex-based bias. In the context of sexual harassment that process is often inescapably adversarial in nature where contested allegations of serious misconduct carry high stakes for all participants. The standardized framework of the § 106.45 grievance process will thus assist recipients in complying with the recipients' Title IX obligation to provide remedies for sexual harassment victims when a respondent is found responsible for sexual harassment, by providing recipients with a prescribed structure for resolving highly contested factual disputes between members of the recipient's own community consistent with due process principles, in recognition that recipients may not already have such a structure in place.

Recipients retain the right and ability to use the disciplinary process as an educational tool rather than a punitive tool because the § 106.45 grievance process leaves recipients with wide discretion to utilize informal resolution processes[458] and does not mandate or second guess disciplinary sanctions.[459] Rather, the § 106.45 grievance process focuses on the purpose of Title IX: to give individuals protections against discriminatory practices and ensure that recipients provide victims of sexual harassment with remedies to help overcome the denial of equal access to education caused by sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment.[460]

---

[458] Section 106.45(b)(9).
[459] Section 106.44(b)(2).

The Department disagrees with commenters who believe that § 106.45 heightens the adversarial nature of the grievance process. The Department believes that sexual harassment

---

[460] As discussed throughout this preamble, including in the "Section 106.44(a) Deliberate Indifference Standard" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble, the final regulations also mandate that recipients offer supportive measures to complainants with or without a formal complaint so that complainants receive meaningful assistance from their school in restoring or preserving equal access to education even in situations that do not result in an investigation and adjudication under § 106.45.

allegations inherently present an adversarial situation; as some commenters pointed out, campus sexual misconduct situations often present plausible competing narratives under circumstances that pose challenges to reaching accurate factual determinations.[461] A grievance process that standardizes procedures by which

---

[461] See, e.g., EduRisk by United Educators, Confronting Campus Sexual Assault: An Examination of Higher Education Claims 1 (2015) ("Recent legal and regulatory mandates require virtually all colleges and universities to investigate and adjudicate reports of sexual assault. An analysis of claims reported to United Educators (UE) reveals that institutions respond to cases of sexual assault that the criminal justice system often considers too difficult to succeed at trial and obtain a conviction. Our data indicates these challenging cases involve little or no forensic evidence, delays in reporting, use of alcohol, and differing accounts of consent.").

parties participate equally serves the purpose of reaching reliable determinations resolving factual disputes presented in formal complaints alleging sexual harassment, in a manner free from sex-based bias, and increasing confidence in the outcomes of such cases. Acknowledging that sexual harassment allegations present adversarial circumstances and that parties may benefit from guidance, advice, and assistance in such a setting, the Department requires recipients to allow the parties to select advisors of choice to assist each party throughout the grievance process.[462] In recognition that Title IX governs recipients, not parties, the Department obligates the recipient to carry both the burden of proof and the burden of collecting evidence sufficient to reach a

[462] Section 106.45(b)(5)(iv).

determination regarding responsibility, while also providing parties equal opportunity (but not the burden or obligation) to gather and present witnesses and other evidence, review and challenge the evidence collected, and question other parties and witnesses.[463]

[463] Section 106.45(b)(5)(i) through (vii); § 106.45(b)(6). We also note that § 106.45(b)(9) gives recipients the discretion to offer and facilitate informal resolution processes, such as mediation or restorative justice, subject to each party voluntarily agreeing after giving informed, written consent. Informal resolution may present a way to resolve sexual harassment allegations in a less adversarial manner than the investigation and adjudication procedures that comprise the § 106.45 grievance process. Informal resolution may only be offered after a formal complaint has been filed, so that the parties understand what the grievance process entails and can decide whether to voluntarily attempt informal resolution as an alternative. Recipients may never require any person to participate in information resolution, and may never condition enrollment, employment, or enjoyment of any other right or privilege upon agreeing to informal resolution. Informal resolution is not an option to resolve allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student.

The Department does not agree that an adversarial process runs contrary to Title IX as a civil rights mechanism. To the extent that commenters raising this concern believe that adversarial systems, historically or generally, disadvantage people already marginalized due to sex, race, ethnicity, and other characteristics, the Department will enforce all provisions of § 106.45 without regard to any party's sex, race, ethnicity, or other characteristic, and expects recipients to implement § 106.45 without bias of any kind. The Department further notes that the § 106.45 grievance process is one particular part of a recipient's response to a formal complaint; § 106.44(a) obligates a recipient to provide a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response to each complainant including offering supportive measures, whether or not the complainant files a formal complaint or participates in a § 106.45 grievance process. The Department believes that § 106.45 serves the important purpose of effectuating Title IX as a civil rights non-discrimination mandate, and the final regulations provide for complainants to receive supportive measures to preserve or restore equal access to education even where a complainant does not wish to participate in the adversarial aspects of a § 106.45 grievance process.

The Department acknowledges that a party's choice of advisor may be limited by whether the party can afford to hire an advisor or must rely on an advisor to assist the party without fee or charge. The Department wishes to emphasize that the status of any party's advisor (i.e., whether a party's advisor is an attorney or not), the financial resources of any party, and the potential of any party to yield financial benefits to a recipient, must not affect the recipient's compliance with § 106.45, including the obligation to objectively evaluate relevant evidence and use investigators and decision-makers free from bias or conflicts of interest.

Changes: In response to comments concerning specific topics addressed in § 106.45, the Department has made

changes in the final regulations that increase recipients' flexibility and discretion while preserving the benefits of a standardized grievance process that promotes reliable fact-finding.[464]

Comments: Some commenters argued that educational institutions should not have the authority to adjudicate criminal accusations, that sexual assault and

---

[464] See, e.g., the discussion in the "Other Language/Terminology Comments" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble (noting that recipients may decide whether to calculate time frames using calendar days, school days, or other method); § 106.45(b)(6)(i) (allowing, but not requiring, live hearings to be held virtually through use of technology); § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) (removing the requirement that evidence in the investigation be provided to the parties using a file-sharing platform); § 106.45(b)(7)(i) (removing the requirement that the preponderance of the evidence standard may be used only if that standard is also used for recipients' non-sexual harassment code of conduct violations).

harassment should be treated like a crime, and that investigations into sex crimes should be solely in the hands of law enforcement (such as the police, district attorneys, State attorney's offices, or U.S. Department of Justice). Some commenters believed the alleged victim should be required to report directly to law enforcement and schools should facilitate survivors' access to the appropriate authorities. Some commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules exclude law enforcement from the investigation process. Several commenters concluded that student conduct hearings are too different from criminal trials to be capable of addressing criminal allegations. One commenter believed that universities are incapable of fair assessment in criminal sex offense matters because universities have a strong desire to be seen as advocates for social change; another commenter believed schools have already made a mockery out of campus sexual assault proceedings shown by a practice the commenter characterized as "the first to accuse wins" that has led to an epidemic of false allegations. One commenter argued that the Department must decide if recipients can defer completely to the criminal justice system regarding sexual assault, or else require recipients to implement procedures that are fair, transparent, and adhere to constitutional protections. One commenter believed that alleged assailants should be held responsible in a court of law and that victims should have the right to pursue court action at any point in time.

Some commenters argued that the proposed rules are too similar to criminal court procedures that should not apply to Title IX proceedings because a university disciplinary proceeding does not result in loss of life or liberty for the respondent. Other commenters expressed support for the proposed rules on the belief that the proposed rules require many due process protections existing in criminal proceedings, which these commenters supported because the high consequences in Title IX cases justify procedural safeguards similar to those in court systems. One commenter suggested that before resorting to the formal "court-like" proceedings in the proposed rules, parties to a sexual assault allegation should always first attempt mediation.

Several commenters suggested that the Department establish "regional centers" for investigation and adjudication of Title IX sexual harassment (or at least as to sexual assault), or at least advise colleges and universities that such recipients can join with other similar institutions in their geographic area to form regional centers charged with conducting the investigations and adjudications required under the proposed rules. These commenters asserted using such a regional center model may benefit recipients because instead of performing investigations and conducting hearings with recipients' own personnel (who may not have sufficient training and experience, and who have inherent potential conflicts of interest), recipients could outsource these functions to centers employing personnel with sufficient expertise and experience to perform investigations and adjudications without conflicts of interest, impartially, and in compliance with the final regulations. One commenter examined variations on potential models for such regional centers, noting that one model might involve a consortium of institutions forming independent 501(c)(3) organizations to cooperatively handle member institutions' needs for investigation and adjudication of Title IX sexual harassment, and a variation of that model would involve those functions handled under the auspices of State government (such as a State attorney general's office); this commenter urged the Department to remind recipients that such models exist as possible methods for better handling obligations under these final regulations, contended that suggesting such models without mandating them is consistent with the Department's overall approach of not dictating specific details

more than might be reasonably necessary, and expressed the belief that different types of regional centers with different structures can be tried out and continually improved and refined for what works best in practice for different types of institutions, thus innovating better ways for recipients to competently handle Title IX sexual harassment allegations.

Discussion: The Department understands the concerns of some commenters who believe that educational institutions should not have authority to adjudicate criminal accusations and that law enforcement and criminal justice systems are the appropriate bodies to investigate, prosecute, and penalize criminal charges. However, the Supreme Court has held that sexual misconduct that constitutes a crime under State law may also constitute sex discrimination under Title IX, and the Department has the responsibility of enforcing Title IX.[465] The Department is not regulating sex crimes, per se, but rather is addressing a type of discrimination based on sex. That some Title IX sexual harassment might constitute criminal conduct does not alter the importance of identifying and responding to sex discrimination that is prohibited by Title IX. By requiring recipients to address sex discrimination that takes the form of sexual harassment in a recipient's education program or activity, the Department is not requiring recipients to adjudicate criminal charges or replace the criminal justice system. Rather, the Department is requiring recipients to adjudicate allegations that sex-based conduct has deprived a complainant of equal access to education and remedy such situations to further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.

---

[465] See, e.g., Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 278, 292 (1998) (holding that a sex offense by a teacher against a student – and noting that the offense was one for which the teacher had been arrested – constituted sex discrimination prohibited under Title IX).

The Department recognizes that some Title IX sexual harassment also constitutes criminal conduct under a variety of State laws and that the potential exists for the same set of allegations to result in proceedings under both § 106.45 and criminal laws.

Where appropriate, the final regulations acknowledge this intersection;[466] however, a recipient cannot discharge its legal obligation to provide education programs or activities free from sex discrimination by referring Title IX sexual harassment allegations to law enforcement (or requiring or advising

---

[466] Section 106.45(b)(1)(v) provides that the recipient's designated reasonably prompt time frame for completion of a grievance process is subject to temporary delay or limited extension for good cause, which may include concurrent law enforcement activity. Section 106.45(b)(6)(i) provides that the decision-maker cannot draw any inference about the responsibility or non-responsibility of the respondent solely based on a party's failure to appear or answer cross-examination questions at a hearing; this provision applies to situations where, for example, a respondent is concurrently facing criminal charges and chooses not to appear or answer questions to avoid self-incrimination that could be used against the respondent in the criminal proceeding. Further, subject to the requirements in § 106.45 such as that evidence sent to the parties for inspection and review must be directly related to the allegations under investigation, and that a grievance process must provide for objective evaluation of all relevant evidence, inculpatory and exculpatory, nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from using evidence obtained from law enforcement in a § 106.45 grievance process. § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) (specifying that the evidence directly related to the allegations may have been gathered by the recipient "from a party or other source" which could include evidence obtained by the recipient from law enforcement) (emphasis added); § 106.45(b)(1)(ii).

complainants to do so),[467] because the purpose of law enforcement differs from the purpose of a recipient offering education programs or activities free from sex discrimination. Whether or not particular allegations of Title IX sexual harassment also meet definitions of criminal offenses, the recipient's obligation is to respond supportively to [467] The 2001 Guidance takes a similar position: "In some instances, a complainant may allege harassing conduct that constitutes both sex discrimination and possible criminal conduct. Police investigations or reports may be useful in terms of fact gathering. However, because legal standards for criminal investigations are different, police investigations or reports may not be determinative of whether harassment occurred under Title IX and do not relieve the school of its duty to respond promptly and effectively." 2001 Guidance at 22.

the complainant and provide remedies where appropriate, to ensure that sex discrimination does not deny any person equal access to educational opportunities. Nothing in the final regulations prohibits or discourages a complainant from pursuing criminal charges in addition to a § 106.45 grievance process.

The Department disagrees with commenters who argued that recipients are not capable of addressing Title IX sexual harassment allegations when such allegations also constitute allegations of criminal activity. The Department has carefully constructed the § 106.45 grievance process for application by a recipient in an education program or activity keeping in mind that schools, colleges, and universities exist first and foremost to educate and do not function as courts of law. The Department understands commenters' assertions that some recipients desire to advocate social change and that some have conducted unfair, biased sexual misconduct proceedings; however, the Department believes that the § 106.45 grievance process reflects a standardized framework that recipients are capable of applying to reach fair, unbiased determinations about sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment in recipients' education programs or activities. The procedures required under § 106.45 are those the Department has determined are most likely to lead to reliable outcomes in the context of Title IX sexual harassment. The § 106.45 grievance process is inspired by principles of due process; however, the final regulations do not incorporate by reference constitutional due process required for criminal defendants, precisely because recipients are reaching conclusions about sex discrimination in a very different context than criminal courts reaching conclusions about defendants' guilt or innocence of criminal charges. While the final regulations permit recipients wide discretion to facilitate informal resolution of formal complaints of sexual harassment,[468] the Department declines to require parties to attempt mediation before initiating the formal grievance process. Every party should know that a formal, impartial, fair process is available to resolve Title IX sexual harassment allegations; where a recipient believes that parties may benefit from mediation or other informal resolution process as an alternative to [468] Section 106.45(b)(9) allows informal resolution processes, but only with the written, voluntary consent of both parties, notice to the parties about ramifications of such processes, and with the exception that no such informal resolution may be offered with respect to allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student.

the formal grievance process, the decision to attempt mediation or other form of informal resolution should remain with each party.

The Department appreciates commenters' recommendations for using regional center models and similar models involving voluntary, cooperative efforts among recipients to outsource the investigation and adjudication functions required under the final regulations. The Department believes these models represent the potential for innovation with respect to how recipients might best fulfill the obligation to impartially reach accurate factual determinations while treating both parties fairly. The Department encourages recipients to consider innovative solutions to the challenges presented by the legal obligation for recipients to fairly and impartially investigate and adjudicate these difficult cases, and the Department will provide technical assistance for recipients with questions about pursuing regional center models.

Changes: None.

Comments: Several commenters challenged the Department's legal authority to prescribe a standardized grievance process on the ground that the Department's charge under Title IX is to prevent sex discrimination, not to enforce constitutional due process or ensure that respondents are disciplined fairly. These commenters pointed to Federal court opinions holding that unfair discipline in a sexual harassment proceeding does not, by itself, demonstrate that a respondent was subjected to discrimination on the basis of sex, and Federal court opinions holding that a university using a "victim- centered approach," or otherwise allegedly favoring sexual assault complainants over respondents, is not necessarily discriminating against respondents based on sex.[469] These commenters argued that the Department cannot therefore prescribe a grievance process premised on the fairness of discipline as a way of furthering Title

[469] See, e.g., cases cited by commenters referenced in the "Section 106.45(a) Treatment of Complainants or Respondents Can Violate Title IX" subsection of the "General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble.

IX's prohibition against sex discrimination.

At least one commenter argued that the Supreme Court held in Gebser that a school's failure to adopt grievance procedures for resolving sexual harassment does not itself constitute discrimination under Title IX, and the commenter argued that this shows that failure to have any grievance procedures at all, much less a grievance process

with specific procedural protections, does not violate Title IX absent a showing that such a failure was motivated by a student's sex.

Several commenters opposed § 106.45 by noting that Federal courts have not required the particular procedures required under § 106.45, and challenging the Department's rationale for prescribing a grievance process that provides more procedural protections than the Supreme Court has required under constitutional due process. Some commenters argued that the Department's authority under Title IX permits the Department to regulate recipients' grievance procedures only to ensure that the formal complaint process does not discriminate against any party based on sex.

Several commenters requested that the Department reserve the "stringent"

grievance process required under § 106.45 only for complaints that allege sexual assault, involve allegations of violence, or otherwise subject a respondent to a potential sanction of expulsion.

A few commenters asserted that to the extent that bias and lack of impartiality in school-level Title IX proceedings have resulted in sex discrimination sometimes against women and other times against men, the provisions in § 106.45 prohibiting bias, conflicts of interest, and sex stereotypes used in training materials, and requiring objective evaluation of all relevant evidence and equal opportunity for the parties to present, review, and challenge testimony and other evidence, will reduce the likelihood that sex discrimination will occur in Title IX proceedings because even if school officials harbor intentional or unintentional sex-based biases or prejudices, such improper biases and prejudices are less likely to affect the handling of the matter when the process requires application of procedures grounded in principles of due process.

Some commenters objected to the use of the words "due process" and "due process protections" in § 106.45, believing that using the term "due process" blurs the line between constitutional due process owed by recipients that are State actors, and a "fair process" that all recipients, including private institutions, generally owe by contract with students and employees. These commenters believe that using the term "due process" in § 106.45 will lead to confusion and misplaced expectations for students, and possibly lead to increased litigation as students try to enforce constitutional due process against private institutions that do not owe constitutional protections. These commenters suggested that the phrase "fair process" replace "due process" in § 106.45.

Discussion: The § 106.45 grievance process prescribed by the final regulations directly serves the purposes of Title IX by providing a framework under which recipients reliably determine the facts of sexual harassment allegations in order to provide appropriate remedies for victims of sexual harassment when the recipient has determined the respondent is responsible. The Department recognizes that some recipients are State actors with responsibilities to provide due process of law to students and employees under the U.S. Constitution, while other recipients are private institutions that do not have constitutional obligations to their students and employees. The Department believes that conforming to the § 106.45 grievance process likely will meet constitutional due process obligations in Title IX sexual harassment proceedings, and as the Department has recognized in guidance for nearly 20 years, Title IX rights must be interpreted consistent with due process guarantees.[470] However, independent of constitutional due process, the purpose of the § 106.45 grievance process is to provide individuals with effective protection from discriminatory practices, including remedies for sexual harassment victims, by consistent application of procedures that improve perceptions that Title IX sexual harassment allegations are resolved fairly, avoid injection of sex-based biases and stereotypes into Title IX proceedings, and promote reliable outcomes.

---

[470] 2001 Guidance at 22.

The Department agrees with commenters who asserted that unfair imposition of discipline, even in a way that violates constitutional due process rights, does not necessarily equate to sex discrimination prohibited by Title IX, and this is reflected in the final regulations. Section 106.45(a), for example, states that a recipient's treatment of a respondent "may also constitute discrimination on the basis of sex under title IX" (emphasis added). The § 106.45 grievance process aims to provide both parties with equal rights and opportunities to participate in the process, and to promote impartiality without favor to complainants or respondents, both because treating a complainant or respondent differently based on sex would violate Title IX, and because a process lacking principles of due process risks bias that in the context of sexual harassment allegations is likely to involve bias based on stereotypes and generalizations on the basis of sex.

To the extent that the Supreme Court has not held that the specific procedures required under § 106.45 are required under constitutional due process, § 106.45 is both consistent with constitutional due process, and an appropriate exercise of the Department's authority to prescribe a consistent framework for handling the unique circumstances presented by sexual harassment allegations.[471] For reasons discussed in this preamble with respect to each provision in § 106.45, the [471] See discussion in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

Department believes that each provision appropriately incorporates principles of due process that provide individuals with effective protection from discriminatory practices, including remedies for sexual harassment victims, by improving perceptions that Title IX sexual harassment allegations are resolved fairly, avoiding injection of sex-based biases and stereotypes into Title

IX proceedings, and promoting reliable outcomes.

While commenters correctly observe that the Supreme Court's Title IX opinions do not equate failure to adopt a grievance procedure with sex discrimination under Title IX,[472] the Supreme Court has also acknowledged that the Department, under its administrative authority to enforce Title

---

[472] See, e.g., Gebser, 524 U.S. at 291-92.

IX, may impose regulatory requirements (such as adoption and publication of grievance procedures) that further the purpose of Title IX to prevent recipients of Federal financial assistance from engaging in sex discriminatory practices and provide individuals with effective protection against sex discriminatory practices.[473] The Department believes that § 106.45 not only incorporates basic principles of due process appropriately translated into the particular context of sexual harassment in education programs and activities but also serves to prevent, reduce, and root out sex-based bias that might otherwise cause recipients to favor one party over the other.

[473] Id. at 292 ("Agencies generally have authority to promulgate and enforce requirements that effectuate the statute's non-discrimination mandate, 20 U.S.C. 1682, even if those requirements do not purport to represent a definition of discrimination under the statute.").

The Department appreciates commenters' recognition that many provisions of § 106.45, which serve the purpose of increasing the reliability of fact-finding, also decrease the likelihood that sex-based biases, prejudices, or stereotypes will affect the investigation and adjudication process in violation of Title IX's prohibition against sex discrimination. The § 106.45 grievance process effectuates Title IX's non-discrimination mandate both by reducing the opportunity for sex discrimination to impact investigation and adjudication procedures through the recipient's own actions during the handling of a complaint, and by promoting a reliable fact-finding process so that recipients are held liable for providing remedies to victims of sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment perpetrated in the recipient's education program or activity. While the Department believes that the § 106.45 grievance process provides an appropriately fair framework for many types of school disciplinary matters, the Department is authorized to prescribe § 106.45 for resolution of formal complaints of Title IX sexual harassment because consistent processes reaching reliable factual determinations are needed in order to provide remedies to sexual harassment victims (to further Title IX's purpose)

and because Title IX sexual harassment allegations inherently invite intentional or unintentional application of sex-based assumptions, generalizations, and stereotypes (which violate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate).

The Department declines to apply the § 106.45 grievance process only to formal complaints alleging sexual assault, involving allegations of violence, or otherwise subjecting a respondent to expulsion. As discussed under § 106.44(a) and § 106.30, the Department has defined sexual harassment to include three categories of misconduct on the basis of sex (quid pro quo harassment by an employee; severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive unwelcome conduct; and sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking as defined under the Clery Act and VAWA).

Each of these categories of misconduct is a serious violation that jeopardizes a victim's equal access to education. Formal complaints alleging any type of sexual harassment, as defined in § 106.30, must be handled under a process designed to reliably determine the facts surrounding each allegation so that recipients provide remedies to victims subjected to that serious misconduct. The final regulations do not prescribe any particular form of disciplinary sanction for sexual harassment. Therefore, the Department declines to apply § 106.45 only when a respondent faces expulsion; rather, § 106.45 applies to formal complaints alleging Title IX sexual harassment regardless of what potential discipline a recipient may impose on a respondent who is found responsible.

In response to commenters concerned that the term "due process" or "due process protections" needlessly confuses whether the Department is referring to a fair process that applies equally to both public and private institutions, or constitutional due process that only public institutions are required to provide, the final regulations use the phrase "grievance process that complies with § 106.45" instead of "due process" or "due process protections."[474] In this way, the Department clarifies that all recipients must, where indicated, apply the § 106.45 grievance process, which requires procedures the Department believes draw from principles of due process but remain distinct from constitutional due process owed by public institutions.

---

[474] E.g., § 106.8(c); § 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(1)(i).

Changes: The final regulations use the phrase "grievance process that complies with § 106.45" instead of "due process" or "due process protections."

Comments: A few commenters noted that existing Title IX regulations provide for prompt and equitable grievance procedures to resolve complaints of sex discrimination, and argued that existing regulations and the 2001 Guidance advising that an equitable grievance procedure means ensuring adequate, reliable, and impartial investigations of complaints, have long provided adequate due process protections for all parties, and thus the more detailed procedural requirements in § 106.45 are unnecessary and only serve to protect respondents at the expense of complainants. A few commenters pointed out that at least two of the Department's Title IX enforcement actions in 2015 and 2016 concluded under then-applicable guidance that university complaint resolution processes were inequitable for complainants, respondents, or both. These commenters argued that this shows that the Department's guidance has sufficiently protected each party's right to a fair process.

Discussion: As discussed in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance

Process" section of this preamble, the Department in its guidance has interpreted the regulatory requirement for recipients to adopt equitable grievance procedures to mean such procedures must ensure adequate, reliable, and impartial investigations of complaints. While the Department still believes that adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints is necessary for the handling of sexual harassment complaints under Title IX, setting forth that interpretation of equitable grievance procedures in guidance lacks the force and effect of law. Furthermore, the Department does not believe that codifying the "adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints" standard into the final regulations would sufficiently promote consistency and reliability because such a conclusory standard does not

helpfully interpret for recipients what procedures rooted in principles of due process are needed to achieve fairness and factual reliability in the context of Title IX sexual harassment allegations.

To the extent that the Department has in the past used enforcement actions to identify particular ways in which a recipient's grievance process failed to ensure "adequate, reliable, and impartial investigations," the enforcement actions and resulting letters of finding and resolution agreements apply only to the particular recipient under investigation and do not substitute for the transparency of regulations that specify the actions required of all recipients. Through these final regulations, we seek to provide with more certainty that recipients' investigations will be held to consistent standards of adequacy, reliability, and impartiality.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter characterized the requirements of § 106.45 as elaborate and multitudinous, predicted that many recipients will fail to comply with every requirement, and asked the Department to answer (i) whether the Department will find a recipient in violation of § 106.45 only if the recipient violated a provision with deliberate indifference? (ii) Will the

Department require parties to preserve objections based on a recipient's failure to follow § 106.45 by raising the objection before the decision-maker and on appeal? (iii) Will any violation of § 106.45 result in the Department requiring the recipient to set aside its determination regarding responsibility and hold a new hearing, or only if the violation of § 106.45 affected the outcome?

Discussion: In response to the commenter's questions, the Department will enforce § 106.45 by holding recipients responsible for compliance regardless of any intent on the part of the recipient to violate § 106.45. The Department notes that under existing regulations and OCR enforcement practice, the Department does not pursue termination of Federal financial assistance unless a recipient refuses to correct a violation after the Department has notified the recipient of the violation. The Department will not impose on parties a requirement to preserve objections based on a recipient's failure to comply with § 106.45, because the recipient's obligation to comply exists whether or not the recipient is informed of the violation by a party. The corrective action a recipient must take after the

Department identifies violations of statutory or regulatory requirements depends on the facts of each particular enforcement action, and the Department cannot predict every circumstance that may present itself in the future and, thus, declines to state under which circumstances a § 106.45 violation may require a recipient to set aside a determination regarding responsibility.

Changes: None.

Comments: Many commenters believe that due process protections unfairly favor respondents over complainants, and expressed concern that the proposed rules will cause sexual harassment victims to suffer additional trauma because investigations will be biased against complainants, will favor harassers over victims, and retraumatize survivors of sexual violence. A few commenters shared personal stories of feeling deterred from filing a sexual assault complaint because the legal process, including the Title IX campus process, would be harrowing or intimidating. Some commenters asserted that because complainants are disproportionately female, due process that benefits respondents constitutes sex discrimination against women.

Some commenters asserted that treating complainants and respondents

equally is insufficient to address the reality that sexual violence is prevalent throughout American society and because women historically have faced biased responses when women report being victims of sexual violence, equity under Title IX requires procedures that favor complainants. At least one commenter asserted that Title IX exists to address systemic gender inequality in education and was not enacted from a place of neutrality. A few commenters asserted that because rape victims often face blame and disbelief when they try to report being raped, and only approximately five in every 1,000 perpetrators of rape will face criminal conviction,[475] the system is already tilted in favor of perpetrators and Title IX needs to provide complainants with more protections than respondents.

---

[475] Commenters cited: Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN), Campus Sexual Violence: Statistics, https://www.rainn.org/statistics/campus-sexual-violence.

Several commenters asserted that because studies have shown the rate of false reports of sexual assault to be low and because rates of sexual assault are high, Title IX must offer protections to complainants rather than seek to protect rights of respondents. Other commenters asserted that the rate of false or unfounded accusations of sexual misconduct may be higher than ten percent, and others disputed that the prevalence of campus sexual assault is as high as 20 percent.

Other commenters argued that relatively few respondents found responsible for sexual misconduct are actually expelled,[476] showing that the scales are not tipped in favor of complainants because even when found responsible, perpetrators are not receiving harsh sanctions.

[476] Commenters cited: Kristen Lombardi, A Lack of Consequences for Sexual Assault, THE CENTER FOR PUBLIC INTEGRITY (Feb. 24, 2010) (noting that up to 25 percent of respondents are expelled); Nick Anderson, Colleges often reluctant to expel for sexual violence, THE WASHINGTON POST (Dec. 15, 2014) (noting that only 12 percent of sanctions against respondents were expulsions).

Commenters asserted that a regulation concerned with avoiding violations of respondents' due process rights ignores the way complainants are still being pushed out of school due to inadequate, unfair responses to their reports of sexual harassment. Several commenters described retaliatory, punitive school and college responses to girls and women who reported suffering sexual harassment. At least one commenter asserted that while data show that boys of color are not disciplined in elementary and secondary schools for sexual harassment at rates much higher than white boys, data show that girls of color not only suffer sexual harassment at higher rates than white girls, but also are more likely to have their reports of sexual harassment ignored or be blamed or punished for reporting.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that due process protections generally, and the procedures drawn from due process principles in § 106.45 particularly, unfairly favor respondents over complainants or sexual harassment perpetrators over victims, or that § 106.45 is biased against complainants, victims, or women. Section 106.45(a)

states that a recipient's treatment of a complainant, or a respondent, may constitute sex discrimination prohibited by Title IX. Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) requires Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and individuals who facilitate any informal resolution process to be free of bias or conflicts of interest for or against complainants or respondents and to be trained on how to serve impartially.

Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii) precludes credibility determinations based on a person's status as a complainant, respondent, or witness. With the exceptions noted below, the other provisions of § 106.45 also apply equally to both parties. The exceptions are three provisions that distinguish between complainants and respondents; each exception results from the need to take into account the party's position as a complainant or respondent specifically in the context of Title IX sexual harassment, to reasonably promote truth-seeking in a grievance process particular to sexual harassment allegations. Thus, § 106.45(b)(1)(i) requires recipients to treat complainants and respondents equitably by providing remedies for a complainant where a respondent has been found responsible, and by imposing disciplinary sanctions on a respondent only after following a § 106.45 grievance process; because remedies concern a complainant and disciplinary sanctions concern a respondent, this provision requires equitable treatment rather than strictly equal treatment. Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) requires recipients to presume the respondent is not responsible until conclusion of the grievance process, because such a presumption reinforces that the burden of proof remains on recipients (not on the respondent, or the complainant) and reinforces correct application of the standard of evidence. Section 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii) protects complainants (but not respondents) from questions or evidence about the complainant's prior sexual behavior or sexual predisposition, mirroring rape shield protections applied in Federal courts. The § 106.45 grievance process, therefore, treats complainants and respondents equally in nearly every regard, with three exceptions (one imposing equitable treatment for both parties, one applicable only to respondents, and one applicable only to complainants). The Department disagrees with commenters who argued that any provision conferring a right or protection only to respondents treats complainants inequitably or constitutes sex discrimination against women. The sole provision that applies only to respondents (§ 106.45(b)(1)(iv)) does not treat complainants inequitably because the provision helps ensure that the burden of proof remains on the recipient, not on the complainant (or respondent), and the presumption serves to reinforce correct application of whichever standard of evidence the recipient has selected. The Department also notes that any person regardless of sex may be a complainant or a respondent, and, thus, provisions that treat complainants and respondents equitably based on party status or apply only to complainants or only to respondents for the purpose of fostering truth-seeking, do not discriminate based on sex but rather distinguish interests unique to a person's party status.

The Department is sensitive to the concerns from commenters that the experience of a grievance process may indeed feel traumatizing or intimidating to complainants,[477] yet the facts surrounding sexual harassment incidents must be reliably determined in order to provide remedies to a victim. In deference to the autonomy of each

[477] The Department does not equate the trauma experienced by a sexual harassment victim with the experience of a perpetrator of sexual harassment or the experience of a person accused of sexual harassment. Nonetheless, the Department acknowledges that a grievance process may be difficult and stressful for both parties. Further, supportive measures may be offered to complainants and respondents (see § 106.30 defining "supportive measures"), and § 106.45(b)(5)(iv) requires recipients to provide both parties the same opportunity to select an advisor of the party's choice. These provisions recognize that the stress of participating in a grievance process affects both complainants and respondents and may necessitate support and assistance for both parties.

complainant to decide whether to participate in a grievance process, the final regulations require recipients to offer supportive measures to each complainant whether or not the complainant files a formal complaint or otherwise participates in a grievance process.[478]

The Department disagrees that the historical or general societal bias

---

[478] Section 106.44(a); § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures").

against women or against victims of sexual harassment requires or justifies a grievance process designed to favor women or complainants. Title IX protects every "person" (20 U.S.C. 1681) without regard for the person's sex or status as a complainant or respondent; the statute's use of the word "person" and not "female" or "woman" indicates that contrary to a commenter's assertion otherwise, Title IX was designed to operate neutrally with respect to the sex of persons protected by the non-discrimination mandate.

Whether or not commenters correctly describe the criminal justice system as "tilted in favor of perpetrators" demonstrated by data showing that only five in every 1,000 perpetrators of rape face criminal conviction, the grievance process under Title IX protects against, and through enforcement the

Department will not tolerate, blaming or shaming women or any person pursuing a formal complaint of sexual harassment. Section 106.45 is premised on the principle that an accurate resolution of each allegation of sexual harassment requires objective evaluation of all relevant evidence without bias and without prejudgment of the facts. Under § 106.45, neither complainants nor respondents are automatically or prematurely believed or disbelieved, until and unless credibility determinations are made as part of the grievance process.[479] Implementation of the § 106.45 grievance process will increase the likelihood that whatever biases and prejudices exist in criminal justice systems will not affect Title IX grievance processes because Title IX

[479] Contrary to many commenters' assertions, the presumption of non-responsibility does not permit (much less require) recipients automatically or prematurely to "believe respondents" or "disbelieve complainants." See discussion in the "Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) Presumption of Non-Responsibility" subsection of the "General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble.

Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers and any person who facilitates an informal resolution process must receive training on how to serve impartially, including by avoiding prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). Additionally, either party may file an appeal on the ground that the Title IX Coordinator, investigator, or decision-maker had a conflict of interest or bias for or against complainants or respondents generally, or the individual complainant or respondent, that affected the outcome of the matter, under § 106.45(b)(8). Accordingly, proceedings to investigate and adjudicate a formal complaint of sexual harassment under these final regulations are designed to reach accurate determinations regarding responsibility so that students and employees are protected from sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment.

The Department believes that § 106.45 serves the purposes of Title IX by focusing on accurate factual determinations regardless of whether the rate of campus sexual assault, and the rate of false or unfounded accusations, is as high as some commenters stated or as low as other commenters stated. Every complainant and every respondent deserve an impartial, truth-seeking process to resolve the allegations in each particular situation, regardless of the frequency or infrequency of victimization and false accusations. Similarly, every allegation warrants an accurate factual resolution regardless of how many recipients decide that expulsion is the appropriate sanction against respondents found responsible for sexual harassment. No matter what decision a recipient makes with respect to disciplinary sanctions, Title IX requires recipients to provide victims with remedies designed to restore or preserve the victim's access to education, and that obligation can be met only after a reliable determination regarding responsibility.

In response to commenters' concerns that girls and women who report sexual harassment are sometimes ignored or retaliated against by their school, the Department does not believe that such wrongful acts and omissions by recipients justify a grievance process that favors complainants over respondents. The final regulations require recipients to respond promptly to every report of sexual harassment (of which the recipient has actual knowledge, and that occurs in the recipient's education program or activity, against a person in the United States) in a non-deliberately indifferent manner, and, thus, any recipient ignoring a complainant's report of sexual harassment would violate the final regulations, and the Department will vigorously enforce recipients' obligations.

In response to many commenters concerned about retaliation, the final regulations include § 106.71 stating retaliation against any individual making a report, filing a complaint, or participating in a Title IX investigation or proceeding is prohibited. Whether or not the commenter correctly asserted that boys of color are not punished for sexual harassment at much higher rates than white boys but that girls of color are ignored and retaliated against at rates higher than white girls, the protections extended to complainants and respondents under the final regulations apply without bias against an individual's sex, race, ethnicity, or other characteristic of the complainant or respondent.

Changes: Section 106.71 prohibits retaliation against any individual making a report, filing a complaint, or participating in a Title IX investigation or proceeding.

Comments: Some commenters suggested that the Department should proactively intervene and monitor the recipient's disciplinary practices to ensure they are fair, proportionate, and not discriminatory. Some commenters wanted § 106.45 to specifically address topics such as the quality of the information gathered during the investigation, the candid participation of parties and witnesses, and the skills and experience (as well as the content of training) of Title IX Coordinators, investigators, and decision-makers, arguing that § 106.45 leaves too much discretion to recipients to devise their own strategies and approaches for the grievance process that may run contrary to improving the reliability of outcomes for the parties.

Some commenters proposed adding a provision clarifying that nothing in these regulations shall be interpreted to prevent the accused student from choosing to have their case adjudicated in an administrative law setting, provided that the institution advises the accused student in writing that it is the accused student's sole choice as to whether to have their case decided under those procedures or those offered on campus.

Some commenters proposed that a case should not be adjudicated unless there is quantifiable evidence to determine reasonable cause and suggested forming a compliance team to review the complaint and response from the accused to assess the validity of the accusation. Other commenters asserted that recipients have limited resources and should triage cases with priority based on severity of the conduct alleged. One commenter requested a requirement that attorneys working on these tribunals must have passed the State bar exam of the university's host State(s) and be a current member of the bar. Some commenters expressed concern about the power imbalance between students and professors, asserting that this power imbalance is already a deterrent to reporting an incident. Some postsecondary institutions commented that their institution already follows most of the procedures in § 106.45. Several commenters supported adopting the grievance procedures already in use by specific institutions, published by advocacy organizations, or under Federal laws applicable to Native American Institutions.

Discussion: The Department understands commenters' requests for intervention in and monitoring of the fairness, proportionality, and prevention of any discrimination in disciplinary sanctions that recipients impose at the conclusion of a § 106.45 grievance process. The grievance process for Title IX sexual harassment is intended and designed to ensure that recipients reach reliable outcomes and provide remedies to victims of sexual harassment. The Department does not prescribe whether disciplinary sanctions must be imposed, nor restrict recipient's discretion in that regard. As the Supreme Court noted, Federal courts should not second guess schools' disciplinary decisions,[480] and the Department likewise believes that disciplinary decisions are best left to the sound discretion of recipients. The Department believes that a standardized framework for resolution of Title IX

---

[480] Davis, 526 U.S. at 648-49.

sexual harassment allegations provides needed consistency in how recipients reach reliable outcomes. The Department's authority to effectuate the purposes of Title IX justifies the Department's concern for reaching reliable outcomes, so that sexual harassment victims receive appropriate remedies, but the Department does not believe that prescribing Federal rules about disciplinary decisions is necessary in order to further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate. The Department notes that while Title IX does not give the Department a basis to impose a Federal standard of fairness or proportionality onto disciplinary decisions, Title IX does, of course, require that actions taken by a recipient must not constitute sex discrimination; Title IX's non-discrimination mandate applies as much to a recipient's disciplinary actions as to any other action taken by a recipient with respect to its education programs or activities.

The Department understands that some commenters would like the Department to issue more specific requirements to address topics such as the quality of information or evidence gathered during investigation, the candid participation of parties and witnesses, and the skills, experience, and type of training, of Title IX Coordinators, investigators, and decision-makers. We believe, however, that § 106.45 strikes an appropriate balance between prescribing procedures specific enough to result in a standardized Title IX sexual harassment grievance process that promotes impartiality and avoidance of bias, while leaving flexibility for recipients to make reasonable decisions about how to implement a § 106.45-compliant grievance process. For example, while § 106.45 does not set parameters around the "quality" of evidence that can be relied on, § 106.45 does prescribe that all relevant evidence, inculpatory and exculpatory, whether obtained by the recipient from a party or from another source, must be objectively evaluated by investigators and decision-makers free from conflicts of interest or bias and who have been trained in (among other matters) how to serve impartially.

The Department appreciates the commenters' request that the Department provide for alternatives to a § 106.45 grievance process including, for example, adjudication in a State administrative law setting. The Department has tailored the § 106.45 grievance process to provide the procedures and protections we have determined are most needed to promote reliable outcomes resolving Title IX sexual harassment allegations in the context of education programs or activities that receive Federal financial assistance. While the Department does not dispute that other administrative proceedings could provide similarly reliable outcomes, for purposes of enforcing Title IX, a Federal civil rights statute, § 106.45 provides a standardized framework. The Department notes that nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from carrying out its responsibilities under § 106.45 by outsourcing such responsibilities to professionally trained investigators and adjudicators outside the recipient's own operations. The Department declines to impose a requirement that Title IX Coordinators, investigators, or decision-makers be licensed attorneys (or otherwise to specify the qualifications or experience needed for a recipient to fill such positions), because leaving recipients as much flexibility as possible to fulfill the obligations that must be performed by such individuals will make it more likely that all recipients reasonably can meet their Title IX responsibilities.

The Department declines to add a reasonable cause threshold into §

106.45. The very purpose of the § 106.45 grievance process is to ensure that accurate determinations regarding responsibility are reached, impartially and based on objective evaluation of relevant evidence; the Department believes that goal could be impeded if a recipient's administrators were to pass judgment on the sufficiency of evidence to decide if reasonable or probable cause justifies completing an investigation. In response to commenters' concerns that the proposed rules did not permit reasonable discretion to dismiss allegations where an adjudication seemed futile, the final regulations add § 106.45(b)(3)(ii), allowing the recipient, in its discretion, to dismiss a formal complaint, if the complainant notifies the Title IX Coordinator in writing that the complainant wishes to withdraw it, if the respondent is no longer enrolled or employed by the recipient, or if specific circumstances prevent the recipient from collecting evidence sufficient to reach a determination (for example, where the complainant has ceased participating in the process). The Department rejects the notion that Title IX sexual harassment cases can or should be "triaged" or treated differently based on a purported effort to distinguish them based on severity. The Department has defined Title IX sexual harassment as any of three categories of sex-based conduct each of which constitutes serious behavior likely to effectively deny a victim equal access to education, and thus any type of sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 warrants the § 106.45 grievance process.

The Department appreciates that some commenters on behalf of certain postsecondary institutions believed that their institution's policies already embody most or many of the requirements of § 106.45. The Department has reviewed and considered the grievance procedures utilized in the codes of conduct in use by many different recipients, as well as the recommended fair procedures set forth by advocacy organizations, and the Federal laws applicable to Native

American Institutions with respect to student misconduct proceedings, as referenced by commenters. While the Department declines to adopt wholesale the procedures used or recommended by any particular institution or organization, the Department notes that § 106.45 contains provisions that some commenters, including submissions on behalf of institutions and organizations, described or recommended in their comments.

Changes: Section 106.45(b)(3)(ii) allows the recipient, in its discretion, to dismiss a formal complaint if the complainant notifies the Title IX Coordinator in writing that the complainant wishes to withdraw it, if the respondent is no longer enrolled or employed by the recipient, or if specific circumstances prevent the recipient from gathering evidence sufficient to reach a determination.

Section 106.30 Definitions[481]

Actual Knowledge

Support for Actual Knowledge Requirement and General Safety Concerns

Comments: Several commenters who supported the definition of actual

---

[481] The NPRM proposed that the definitions in § 106.30 apply only to Subpart D, Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. 83 FR 61496. Aside from the words "elementary and secondary school" and "postsecondary institution," the words that are defined in § 106.30 do not appear elsewhere in Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. Upon further consideration and for the reasons articulated in this preamble, including in the "Section 106.6(f) Title VII and Directed Question 3 (Application to Employees)" subsection of the "Clarifying

knowledge in § 106.30 and the actual knowledge requirement in § 106.44(a) stated that using an actual knowledge requirement empowers victims of sexual harassment to choose when and to whom to report sexual misconduct, which commenters believed would help facilitate building more trusting

---

Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the definitions in § 106.30 should apply to Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations, except for the definitions of the words "elementary and secondary school" and "postsecondary institution." The definitions of "elementary and secondary school" and "postsecondary institution" in § 106.30 will apply only to §§ 106.44 and 106.45. This revision is not a substantive revision because this revision does not change the definitions or meaning of existing words in Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. Ensuring that the definitions in § 106.30 apply throughout Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations will provide clarity and consistency for future application. We also have clarified in § 106.81 that the definitions in § 106.30 do not apply to 34 CFR 100.6-100.11 and 34 CFR part 101, which are procedural provisions applicable to Title VI. Section 106.81 incorporates these procedural provisions by reference into Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

relationships between students and school administrators. Multiple commenters also supported the way that the proposed regulations allow recipients to design internal reporting processes as recipients see fit, including mandatory reporting by all employees to the Title IX Coordinator or others with the authority to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf. One commenter cited the

Supreme Court's Davis decision and stated that, while the commenter supported the Department's actual knowledge requirement, institutions should publicize a list of the officials who have authority to institute corrective measures, in a location easily accessible and known to the student body, so that those who wish to file complaints know how to do so.

Some commenters referred to the constructive notice standard set forth in Department guidance as a "mandatory reporting" system. Some commenters supported replacing constructive notice with actual knowledge, arguing that the mandatory reporting system recommended by Department guidance has resulted in requiring college and university employees to report allegations of sexual harassment and sexual violence even when a victim reported to an employee in confidence and even when the victim expressed no interest in an investigation.

Other commenters objected to the Department removing "mandatory reporter" requirements and replacing constructive notice with actual knowledge. Several commenters asserted that the actual knowledge definition in § 106.30 and actual knowledge requirement in § 106.44(a) will harm survivors, especially women, by allowing "lower level employees" to intentionally bury reports of sexual harassment against serial perpetrators. Those commenters expressed concern that Title IX Coordinators will be less informed, which will make campuses more dangerous for students.

Several commenters asserted that survivors of campus assault have frequently experienced Title IX personnel being more concerned with protecting the recipient's institutional interests than with the welfare of victims. Commenters who work in postsecondary institutions, or for corporations, asserted that they are familiar with this dynamic in the context of human resources departments. Many commenters stated that the longstanding constructive notice

standard (requiring a school to respond if a responsible employee knew or should have known of sexual harassment) was sufficient to ensure that employees would be held accountable for purposefully turning their backs on students who seek to report sexual harassment. Commenters asserted that employees at a particular university failed to take any action after students disclosed another employee's abuse to them, which resulted in a serial sexual perpetrator victimizing many people. Commenters expressed concern that the actual knowledge requirement requires the Department to be too trusting of recipients, and cited incidents of coaches and employees mishandling reports of sexual harassment at a number of institutions of higher education.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" and the requirement in § 106.44(a) that recipients respond to sexual harassment when the recipient has actual knowledge. As explained in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" we have revised the §

106.30 definition of “actual knowledge” to differentiate between elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions, with respect to which school or college employees who have “notice” of sexual harassment require the school or college to respond. Under revised § 106.30, notice to “any employee” of an elementary or secondary school charges the recipient with actual knowledge.

The Department disagrees with commenters that the actual knowledge requirement, as adopted from the Gebser/Davis framework and adapted in these final regulations for administrative enforcement, will result in recipients being less informed about, or less responsive to, patterns of sexual harassment and threats to students. With respect to postsecondary institutions, notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator or to an official with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient (herein, "officials with authority") will trigger the recipient's obligation to respond. Postsecondary institution students have a clear channel through the Title IX Coordinator to report sexual harassment, and § 106.8(a) requires recipients to notify all students and employees (and others) of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information, so that "any person" may report sexual harassment in person, by mail, telephone, or e-mail (or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report), and specifies that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by mail to the Title IX Coordinator's office address or by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address. In the postsecondary institution context, the Department believes that making sure that complainants and third parties have clear, accessible ways to report to the Title IX Coordinator rather than requiring the recipient to respond each time any postsecondary institution employee has notice, better respects the autonomy of postsecondary school

students (and employees) to choose whether and when to report sexual harassment.[482]

[482] The Department recognizes the many examples pointed to by commenters, of postsecondary institutions failing to respond appropriately to notice of sexual harassment allegations when at least some university employees knew of the alleged sexual harassment, resulting in some situations where serial predators victimized many people. We note that such failures by institutions occurred under the status quo; that is, under the Department's approach to notice in the Department's guidance. In these final regulations, the Department aims to respect the autonomy of students at postsecondary institutions, while ensuring that such students (and employees) clearly understand how to report sexual harassment. We believe that the best way to avoid reports "falling through the cracks" or successfully being "swept under the rug" by postsecondary institutions, is not to continue (as Department guidance did) to insist that all postsecondary institutions must have universal or near-universal mandatory reporting. As discussed in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, whether universal mandatory reporting for postsecondary institutions benefits victims or harms victims is a complicated issue as to which research is conflicting. We believe that allowing each postsecondary institution to implement its own policy regarding which employees must report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator (and which may remain confidential resources for students at postsecondary institutions) is a better approach than requiring universal mandatory reporting. The benefits of universal mandatory reporting policies may not outweigh the negative impact of such policies, in terms of helping victims. Allowing postsecondary institutions to choose for themselves what kind of mandatory reporting policies to have is only beneficial if combined (as in these final regulations) with strong requirements that every postsecondary institution inform students and employees about how to report to the Title IX Coordinator and that every institution has in place accessible options for any person to report to the Title IX Coordinator. This is the approach taken in these final regulations, so that, for example, if an alleged victim discloses sexual harassment to a university "low-level" employee and the school does not respond by reaching out to the alleged victim (called "the complainant" in these final regulations) then the alleged victim also knows how to contact the Title IX Coordinator, a specially trained employee who must respond promptly to the alleged victim by offering supportive measures and confidentially discussing with the alleged victim the option of filing a formal complaint. A report to the Title IX Coordinator may also be made by any third party, such as the alleged victim's parent or friend. Thus, whether or not the "low level" employee to whom an alleged victim disclosed sexual harassment appropriately kept that disclosure confidential, or wrongfully violated the institution's mandatory reporting policy, the alleged victim is not left without recourse or options and the institution is not able to avoid responding to the alleged victim, because the alleged victim knows that any report made to the Title IX Coordinator, via any of several accessible options (e.g., e-mail or phone, which information must be prominently displayed on recipients' websites) that can be used day or night, will trigger the institution's prompt response obligations. § 106.8; § 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" to include, but not be limited to, a report to the Title IX Coordinator).

With respect to elementary and secondary schools, the Department is persuaded by commenters' concerns that it is not reasonable to expect young students to report to specific school employees or to distinguish between a desire to disclose sexual harassment confidentially to a school employee, versus a desire to report sexual harassment for the purpose of triggering the school's response obligations. We have revised the § 106.30 definition of actual knowledge to specifically state that notice to any employee of an elementary or secondary school charges the recipient with actual knowledge, triggering the recipient's obligation to respond to sexual harassment (including promptly offering supportive measures to the complainant). Accordingly, students in elementary and secondary schools do not need to report allegations of sexual harassment to a specific employee such as a Title IX Coordinator to trigger a recipient's obligation to respond to such allegations. A student in an elementary or secondary school may report sexual harassment to any employee. Similarly, if an employee of an elementary or secondary school personally observes

sexual harassment,[483] then the elementary or secondary school recipient must respond to and address the sexual harassment in accordance with these final regulations. As previously noted in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual [483] Section 106.30 defines "complainant" to mean "an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment" and therefore, an employee witnessing or hearing about conduct that "could constitute" sexual harassment defined in § 106.30 triggers the elementary and secondary school recipient's response obligations, including having the Title IX Coordinator contact the complainant (and, where appropriate, the complainant's parent or legal guardian) to confidentially discuss the availability of supportive measures. Section 106.44(a). In other words, if an elementary or secondary school employee witnesses conduct but does not know "on the spot" whether the conduct meets the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment (for example, because the employee cannot discern whether the conduct amounted to a sexual assault, or whether the conduct was "unwelcome" subjectively to the complainant, or whether non-quid pro quo, non-sexual assault conduct was "severe"), the person victimized by the conduct is a "complainant" entitled to the school's prompt response if the conduct "could" constitute sexual harassment.

Harassment," elementary and secondary schools operate under the doctrine of in loco parentis, and employees at elementary and secondary schools typically are mandatory reporters of child abuse under State laws for purposes of child protective services.[484] In addition to any obligations imposed

---

[484] See Ala. Code § 26-14-3; Alaska Stat. § 47.17.020; Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 13-3620; Ark. Code Ann. § 12-18-402; Cal. Penal Code § 11165.7; Colo. Rev. Stat. § 19-3-304; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 17a-101; Del. Code Ann. tit. 16, § 903; D.C. Code § 4-1321.02; Fla. Stat. § 39.201; Ga. Code Ann. § 19-7-5; Haw. Rev. Stat. § 350-1.1; Idaho Code Ann. § 16-1605; 325 Ill. Comp. Stat. § 5/4; Ind. Code § 31-33-5-1; Iowa Code § 232.69; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 38-2223; Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 620.030; La. Child Code Ann. art. 603(17); Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 22, § 4011-A; Md. Code Ann., Fam. Law § 5-704; Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 119, § 21; Mich. Comp. Laws § 722.623; Minn. Stat. § 626.556; Miss. Code. Ann. § 43-21-353; Mo. Ann Stat. § 210.115; Mont. Code Ann. § 41-3-201; Neb. Rev. Stat. § 28-711; Nev. Rev. Stat. § 432B.220; N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 169-C:29; N.J. Stat. Ann. § 9:6-8.10; N.M. Stat. Ann. § 32A-4-3; N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 413; N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 7B-301; N.D. Cent. Code Ann. § 50-25.1-03; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2151.421; Okla. Stat. tit. 10A, § 1-2-101; Or. Rev. Stat. § 419B.010; 23 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann § 6311; R.I. Gen. Laws § 40-11-3(a); S.C. Code Ann. § 63-7-310; S.D. Codified Laws § 26-8A-3; Tenn. Code Ann. § 37-1-403; Tex. Fam. Code § 261.101; Utah Code Ann. § 62A-4a-403; Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 33, § 4913; Va. Code Ann. § 63.2-1509; Wash. Rev. Code § 26.44.030; W. Va. Code § 49-2-803; Wis. Stat. § 48.981; Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 14-3-205.

on school employees under State child abuse laws, these final regulations require the recipient to respond to allegations of sexual harassment by offering supporting measures to any person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment and taking the other actions required under § 106.44(a).

The Department agrees with commenters who noted that nothing in the proposed or final regulations prevents recipients (including postsecondary institutions) from instituting their own policies to require professors, instructors, or all employees to report to the Title IX Coordinator every incident and report of sexual harassment. A recipient also may empower as many officials as it wishes with the requisite authority to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf, and notice to these officials with authority constitutes the recipient's actual knowledge and triggers the recipient's response obligations. Recipients may also publicize lists of officials with authority. We have revised § 106.8 to require recipients to notify students, employees, and parents of elementary and secondary school students (among others) of the contact information for the recipient's Title IX Coordinator, to specify that any person may report sexual harassment in person, by mail, telephone, or e-mail using the Title IX Coordinator's contact information (or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report), to state that reports may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address, and to require a recipient to post the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on the recipient's website.

The Department appreciates commenters' concerns about recipients purposely ignoring reports of sexual harassment. As the Department has acknowledged through guidance documents since 1997, schools, colleges, and universities have too often ignored sexual harassment affecting students' and employees' equal access to education. These final regulations ensure that every recipient is legally obligated to respond to sexual harassment (or allegations of sexual harassment) of which the recipient has notice. The final regulations use a definition of actual knowledge to address the unintended consequences that the constructive notice standard created for both recipients and students. As explained more fully in the "Actual

Knowledge" subsection in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the approach in these final regulations regarding notice of sexual harassment that triggers a recipient's response obligations is preferable to the constructive notice standard set forth in Department guidance. Additionally, as some commenters noted, the constructive notice standard coupled with the Department's mandate to investigate all allegations of sexual harassment[485] may have actually chilled reporting. Investigations almost always require some intrusion into the complainant's privacy, and some complainants simply wanted supportive measures but were not ready or did not desire to participate in a grievance process. These final regulations provide complainants with more control over whether or when to report sexual harassment,[486] and clearly obligate a recipient to offer supportive measures to

[485] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4-5; 2001 Guidance at 15.

---

[486] As noted previously, these final regulations ensure that reporting or disclosing sexual harassment to any elementary or secondary school employee triggers the recipient's response obligations, while postsecondary institutions are permitted to choose which of their employees must be mandatory reporters. This broader definition of "actual knowledge" for elementary and secondary schools does not reflect that the Department values the autonomy of elementary and secondary school students less than the autonomy of students at postsecondary institutions. The final regulations respect the autonomy of all complainants. However, recognizing the general differences between adults in postsecondary institutions, versus young students in elementary and secondary schools, we believe the better policy is to ensure that an elementary or secondary school responds promptly whenever any employee has notice of sexual harassment, while a postsecondary institution must respond promptly whenever a Title IX Coordinator or official with authority has notice of sexual harassment. This approach does not give as much control to a younger student over whether disclosure of sexual harassment results in a response from the Title IX Coordinator, compared to the control retained by a student at a postsecondary institution to disclose sexual harassment without automatically triggering a report to the Title IX Coordinator. However, the final regulations respect the autonomy of, and give options and control to, all complainants, by protecting each complainant's right to choose, for example, how to respond to the Title IX Coordinator's discussion of available supportive measures and whether to file a formal complaint asking the school to investigate the sexual harassment allegations. This approach ensures that an elementary or secondary school student is, for example, considering supportive measures and the option of filing a formal complaint with the Title IX Coordinator, who can involve the student's parent or legal guardian as appropriate. Thus, the final regulations respect the autonomy of all complainants and aim to give all complainants options and control over how a school responds to their sexual harassment experience, yet achieves these aims differently for elementary and secondary school students, than for students at postsecondary institutions.

a complainant with or without a formal complaint ever being filed.

With respect to commenters' concerns that recipients have knowingly ignored reports of sexual harassment in the past, and may continue to do so in the future, such action constitutes deliberate indifference, if the other requirements of § 106.44(a) are met. When a recipient with actual knowledge of sexual harassment in its education program or activity refuses to respond to sexual harassment or a report of sexual harassment, such a refusal is clearly unreasonable under § 106.44(a) and constitutes a violation of these final regulations.

Changes: The Department expands the definition of actual knowledge in § 106.30 to include notice to "any employee of an elementary and secondary school" with respect to recipients that are elementary and secondary schools. We have also revised § 106.8 to require that recipients must prominently display the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on the recipient's website, and to state that any person may report sexual harassment in person, by mail, by telephone, or by e-mail using that contact information (or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report), and that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator.

Student Populations Facing Additional Barriers to Reporting

Comments: Several commenters asserted that designating a single individual as the person to whom notice

triggers a recipient's obligation to respond creates significant hurdles to reporting for certain populations of students, including students with disabilities, immigrant students, international students, transgender students, and homeless students.

Numerous commenters noted that students with disabilities are more vulnerable to sexual abuse than their peers without disabilities, are less likely to report experiences of abuse, and are less likely to have access to school officials who have the requisite authority to implement corrective measures under § 106.30. One commenter asserted that, while the actual knowledge requirement favors the rights and needs of students with disabilities who are accused of sexual harassment, this requirement disfavors students with disabilities who are victims of sexual harassment. The

commenter expressed concern that students with disabilities may only be comfortable communicating sensitive issues to their own teachers, and in some cases may only be able to communicate with appropriately trained special education staff.

One commenter stated that, because immigrant students are even less likely to know to whom they should report, members of immigrant communities are disadvantaged by the actual knowledge requirement. Another commenter asserted that international students are more likely to confide in a teacher or advisor with whom they have close contact, because cultural and linguistic barriers may make it difficult for international students to navigate official administrative channels.

Several commenters noted that transgender students, as well as non- binary students and students who identify with other gender identity communities, are less likely to report or seek services than students from other demographics. Commenters argued that replacing the constructive notice standard with the actual knowledge standard will reduce the services and support received by transgender students and students who identify with other gender identity communities.

One commenter asserted that the actual knowledge requirement disadvantages students who are homeless, students from economically disadvantaged backgrounds, or students from dysfunctional families; the commenter described having seen bruises, cuts, and left-over tape residue from when a student was hospitalized after getting into the student's parents' crystal methamphetamine. The commenter asserted that, under the proposed rules, students will lose support from teachers, placing students in greater danger. The commenter argued that it is imperative that all elementary and secondary school teachers be mandatory reporters.

Discussion: The Department requires all recipients to address sex discrimination against all students, including students in vulnerable populations. The revised definition of "actual knowledge" in § 106.30 includes notice to any elementary and secondary school employee, addressing the concerns raised by commenters that in the elementary and secondary school context, students with disabilities, LGBTQ students, students who are immigrants, and others, face barriers to reporting sexual harassment only to certain employees or officials. We have also revised § 106.8 to ensure that all students and employees are notified of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information, to require that contact information to be prominently displayed on the recipient's website, and to clearly state that any person may report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator using any of several accessible options, including by phone or e-mail at any time of day or night. Thus, as to students at postsecondary institutions, clear, accessible reporting options are available for any student (or third party, such as an alleged victim's friend or a bystander witness to sexual harassment) to contact the Title IX Coordinator and trigger the postsecondary institution's mandatory response obligations. We believe that the final regulations thus provide all students, including students with disabilities, LGBTQ students, students who are immigrants, and others, with accessible ways of reporting, and do not leave any student facing barriers or challenges with respect to how to report to the Title IX Coordinator.[487]

With respect to commenters who assert that the Department is removing a "mandatory reporting" requirement or eliminating "mandatory reporters," as

---

[487] Section 106.8(a) ("Any person may report sex discrimination, including sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sex discrimination or sexual harassment), in person, by mail, by telephone, or by electronic mail, using the contact information listed for the Title IX Coordinator [which, under § 106.8(b) must be posted on the recipient's website], or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report. Such a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or electronic mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator.") (emphasis added).

discussed in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the adapted actual knowledge requirement in these final regulations distinguishes between elementary and secondary schools (where notice to any employee now triggers the recipient's response obligations) and postsecondary institutions (where notice to the Title IX Coordinator and officials with authority triggers the recipient's response obligations, but postsecondary institution recipients have discretion to determine which of their employees should be mandatory reporters, and which employees may keep a postsecondary student's disclosure about sexual harassment confidential).

In response to commenters' concerns, in elementary and secondary schools, all students (including those in vulnerable populations) can report sexual harassment to any school employee to trigger the recipient's obligation to respond. While the imputation of knowledge based solely on the theories of vicarious liability[488] or [488] The Department has revised the § 106.30 definition of actual knowledge by replacing "respondeat superior" with "vicarious liability." "Vicarious liability" conveys the same meaning as "respondeat superior," but "vicarious liability" is more colloquial and is less likely to be confused with the word "respondent" used throughout these final regulations.

constructive notice is insufficient, notice to any elementary and secondary school employee – including a teacher, teacher's aide, bus driver, cafeteria worker, counselor, school resource officer, maintenance staff worker, or other school employee – charges the recipient with actual knowledge, triggering the recipient's response obligations. This expanded definition of actual knowledge in elementary and secondary schools gives all students, including those with disabilities who may face challenges communicating, a wide pool of trusted employees of elementary and secondary schools (i.e., any employee) to whom the student can report. As to all recipients, § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" is also revised to expressly state that "notice" includes a report to the Title IX

Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a).[489] These final regulations thus ensure that all students and employees have clear, accessible reporting channels, and ensure that elementary and secondary school students can disclose sexual harassment to any school employee and the recipient will be obligated to respond

[489] We have revised § 106.8(a) to expressly state that any person may report sexual harassment using the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator (which must include an office address, telephone number, and e-mail address), or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report, and that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the listed office address.

promptly and supportively in accordance with § 106.44(a).

While the Department acknowledges commenters' concerns about actual knowledge introducing an additional hurdle to the reporting process for certain students at postsecondary institutions, the Department believes the actual knowledge requirement will bring benefits to students that outweigh potential concerns. Under these final

regulations, the recipient must notify and inform students of the right to report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator, a trained professional who is well positioned to contact the complainant to confidentially discuss the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures (which must be offered regardless of whether the complainant also chooses to file a formal complaint), and explain the process of filing a formal complaint. Students may choose to confide in postsecondary institution employees to whom notice does not trigger the recipient's response obligations, without such confidential conversations necessarily resulting in the student being contacted by the Title IX Coordinator. This results in greater respect for the autonomy of a college student over what kind of institutional response will best serve the student's needs and wishes. This gives students at postsecondary institutions greater control over whether or when to report than does a requirement of universal mandatory reporting.

The Department understands commenters' concerns that some students may not feel comfortable discussing a sexual harassment experience with a stranger. Partly in response to such concerns, the final regulations designate any school employee as someone with whom an elementary or secondary school student can share a report and know that the recipient is then responsible for responding promptly. The Department believes it is reasonable to expect students at a university or college to communicate with the Title IX Coordinator or other official with authority, as students would with other professionals, including doctors, therapists, and attorneys, many of whom college students do not know personally when they first seek assistance with sensitive, personal issues. At the same time, these final regulations permit each postsecondary institution to decide whether or not to implement a universal mandatory reporting policy. As discussed in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, there is conflicting research about whether universal mandatory reporting policies for postsecondary institutions benefit victims, or harm victims.

Although these final regulations do not expressly require recipients to allow complainants to bring a supportive friend to an initial meeting with the Title IX Coordinator, nothing in these final regulations prohibits complainants from doing so. Indeed, many people bring a friend or family member to doctors' visits for extra support, whether to assist a person with a disability or for emotional support, and the same would be true for a complainant reporting to a Title IX Coordinator. Once a grievance process has been initiated, these final

regulations require recipients to provide the parties with written notice of each party's right to select an advisor of choice, and nothing precludes a party from choosing a friend to serve as that advisor of choice.[490]

The Department agrees with the commenter who asserted that recipients should publish information to help students locate the Title IX Coordinator and other staff to whom notice conveys actual knowledge on the recipient. These final regulations in § 106.8 require recipients to designate and authorize a Title IX Coordinator, notify all students and employees of the name or title, office address, electronic mail address, and telephone number of the Title IX Coordinator, and prominently display the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator on recipients' websites.

---

[490] Section 106.45(b)(2); § 106.45(b)(5)(iv).

The Department disagrees that the actual knowledge requirement favors respondents over complainants. The final regulations' approach to designating Title IX Coordinators, officials with authority, and elementary and secondary school employees as persons to whom notice triggers the recipients' response obligations, is designed to ensure that recipients are held responsible for meaningful responses to known incidents of sexual harassment, including by providing equitable responses to the complainant and respondent,[491] while taking into account the different needs and expectations of elementary and secondary school students, and postsecondary institution students. In elementary and secondary schools the recipient must respond to sexual [491] Section 106.44(a) (requiring the recipient to respond equitably by offering supportive measures to a complainant and by refraining from taking disciplinary action against a respondent without first following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45).

harassment when notice is given to any school employee; in postsecondary institutions where complainants are more capable of exercising autonomy over when to report and seek institutional assistance, the complainant (or any third party) may report to a Title IX Coordinator or official with authority. We reiterate that "notice" may come to a Title IX Coordinator, an official with authority, or an elementary and secondary school employee, from any source (i.e., from the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment, from any third party such as a friend, parent, or witness to sexual harassment, or from the employee's or official's first-hand observation of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment).

Changes: The Department has revised the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" to specify that actual knowledge includes notice of sexual harassment to "any employee" in an elementary and secondary school. The Department revised the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" by replacing "respondeat superior" with "vicarious liability."

Chilling Reporting

Comments: Many commenters asserted that sexual assault is chronically underreported, and that an actual knowledge requirement would create an additional barrier to reporting and chill victims' willingness to try to report sexual harassment. Several commenters noted that studies show that, although only five percent of rapes are reported to officials, nearly two-thirds of victims tell someone about their experience (e.g., friends or family),[492] and commenters argued that limiting the employees who are mandatory reporters will result in the Title IX Coordinator knowing about even fewer incidents and helping even fewer victims, whereas the current system centralizes reporting so that fewer victims fall through the cracks. Numerous commenters asserted that sexual harassment and assault is a sensitive issue that many individuals only feel comfortable discussing within a trusted relationship, if they feel bold enough to discuss it at all.

---

[492] Commenters cited: Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Survey Results: 2014 Community Attitudes on Sexual Assault (2014).

Another commenter characterized the proposed rules' definition of actual knowledge in § 106.30 as "loose." According to this commenter, the proposed rules' definition of actual knowledge would allow for a situation where a student reports to an agent whom the student trusts and thinks that the report has been conveyed to the recipient, but for some reason, that agent does not properly report the incident. The commenter contended that in this situation the school can claim that it did not have actual knowledge of the incident and therefore the school cannot be held accountable for inaction. Multiple commenters stated that complainants should be able to go to any school official with whom the student feels comfortable, to report sexual harassment, and that complainants should not be forced to go to a few specific people within the school.

Several commenters opposed the actual knowledge definition in § 106.30, asserting that most students do not know which employees have the authority to redress sexual harassment and would not even know who to contact. Also, multiple commenters cited a study that found that survivors often do not report their sexual assaults because of fear of being disbelieved or fear that their assault will not taken seriously,[493] and many commenters argued that the actual knowledge requirement will exacerbate these fears, thereby resulting in even less reporting of sexual harassment. Commenters

---

[493] Commenters cited: Kathryn J. Holland & Lilia M. Cortina, "It happens to girls all the time": Examining sexual assault survivors' reasons for not using campus supports, 59 AM. J. OF COMMUNITY PSYCHOL. 1-2 (2017).

argued that narrowing the scope of trusted adults to whom survivors of sexual assault can speak to receive support is an unjust violation of their right to safety.

Numerous commenters asserted that giving complainants greater control over whether and when to report will encourage more people to come forward to report sexual misconduct. A few commenters stated that the actual knowledge requirement pushes back against mandatory reporting policies that undermine a student's trust in professors and university employees. Commenters argued that because recipients often require employees to report allegations of sexual harassment to the Title IX office even when disclosures are made to employees in confidence, including in instances in which the complainant expresses no interest in an investigation, and the proposed rules would not require recipients to have these mandatory reporting policies, the actual knowledge requirement would encourage more complainants to report sexual harassment because the complainants have greater control over what action a school takes in response to each situation, including whether the report will proceed to an investigation without the complainant's permission. One commenter asserted that mandatory reporter policies frequently serves as a deterrent to complainants who are seeking resources rather than adjudication. The commenter stated that mandatory reporting enhances the risks of revictimization and penalizes students who wish to come forward and seek services rather than a grievance process.

Another commenter asserted that postsecondary institution recipients should have to require that any employee to whom a student discloses sexual harassment provide the student with information about how to report to the Title IX office, the option of reporting, and the availability of supportive services. The commenter argued that a student should be told (by any employee in whom a student confides a sexual harassment experience) that unless the student makes a report, the institution will not know of the incident and will therefore do nothing about it. Several commenters supporting § 106.30 asserted that the final regulations should allow complainants to meet directly with the Title IX Coordinator who can provide the array of options available to them before deciding to file a formal complaint. One

commenter expressed support of the proposed rules' allowance of greater informality in adjudications, because research shows that victims want more informal options, with less mandatory reporting.[494]

Discussion: As discussed above, the final regulations revise the definition of actual knowledge to include notice to

---

[494] Commenters cited: National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

any elementary and secondary school employee, thus alleviating many commenters' concerns about requiring young students to both know how, and be willing to, report sexual harassment incidents to a particular school official or to the Title IX Coordinator. As discussed above, the actual knowledge requirement in the postsecondary institution context means notice to the Title IX Coordinator or an official with authority, and the Department believes this approach respects a postsecondary institution complainant's autonomy and choice over whether or when to report sexual harassment, while still ensuring that complainants and third parties have clear, accessible ways of reporting sexual harassment.

The Department agrees with commenters who pointed out that the actual knowledge requirement in the postsecondary institution context appropriately gives more control and autonomy to each complainant to choose to discuss a private incident confidentially (for example, with a trusted professor or resident advisor), or to report the incident in order to seek supportive measures or a grievance process against the respondent. Numerous commenters asserted that preserving a survivor's autonomy and control in the aftermath of a traumatic experience of sexual violence can be crucial to the survivor's ability to heal and recover.[495] The Department agrees with commenters who asserted that victims want more informal options with less mandatory reporting because mandatory reporting policies may have the unintended consequence of

---

[495] E.g., Carly Parnitzke Smith & Jennifer J. Freyd, Dangerous Safe Havens: Institutional Betrayal Exacerbates Sexual Trauma, 26 JOURNAL OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 1, 120 (2013) (describing "institutional betrayal" as when an important institution, or a segment of it, acts in a way that betrays its member's trust); Merle H. Weiner, Legal Counsel for Survivors of Campus Sexual Violence, 29 YALE J. OF L. & FEMINISM 123, 140-141 (2017) (identifying one type of institutional betrayal as the harm that occurs when "the survivor thinks she is speaking to a confidential resource, but then finds out the advocate cannot keep their conversations private").

penalizing complainants who wish to come forward and seek supportive measures, by subjecting complainants to contact with the Title IX office, (which can lead to a formal grievance process even without the complainant choosing to file a formal complaint),[496] when that was not what some complainants desired.[497] Therefore, the Department believes the actual knowledge requirement may benefit complainants at postsecondary institutions whose reports were chilled under a system of constructive notice. In the postsecondary institution context, the

[496] Under the final regulations, a complainant always retains the option of initiating a grievance process (by filing a formal complaint) and is never required to file a formal complaint in order to receive supportive measures. § 106.44(a); § 106.44(b)(1); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint"). However, a Title IX Coordinator may, when it is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, sign a formal complaint that initiates a grievance process against a respondent even when that is not what the complainant wished to have happen. § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint"); § 106.44(a). Thus, universal mandatory reporting policies may sometimes result in involving a complainant in a grievance process when that is not what the complainant wanted, and the final regulations aim to make that less likely in the postsecondary institution context by allowing each postsecondary institution to decide for itself whether to have a universal mandatory reporting policy.

---

[497] E.g., Carmel Deamicis, Which Matters More: Reporting Assault or Respecting a Victim's Wishes?, THE ATLANTIC (May 20, 2013) (describing a campus "speak-out" event at which sexual violence survivors were supposed to be able to safely share their stories with other but the university's mandatory reporting policy required any residential advisor who "recognizes the voice of a speaker" to report "that person's name and story" to the university's Title IX Coordinator, resulting in many resident advisors choosing to respect victims' anonymity even knowing that to do so violated campus policy because "[w]hen a policy doesn't embody the values it's supposed to protect, sometimes it's worth breaking"); id. (noting that the university's mandatory reporting policy was a direct result of the Department's withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, describing professors and staff members "angrily arguing against the new policy" because they "can't believe the school is asking them to violate their students' trust," quoting a victim advocate as wondering "if you want to help victims in their time of need, why not leave it up to the victim?" and quoting a student volunteer at the speak-out as stating: "Sexual harassment or assault is a crime of power . . . . The survivor is stripped of their power and control, and one of the only aspects that remains in their control is if, how, when, and to whom to share their story" and mandatory reporting "removes that last aspect of control that a survivor has."); Allie Grasgreen, Mandatory Reporting Perils, INSIDE HIGHER ED (Aug. 30, 2013) (quoting Title IX activist Andrea Pino as stating: "Mandatory reporting is supposed to alleviate that lack of transparency but putting students in this predicament in which they do not feel like they can trust people for confidentiality is doing the opposite. . . . It's literally putting students in situations in which they can't be honest.").

final regulations respect a complainant's decision about whether or when to report, and ensure that a complainant may receive supportive measures irrespective of whether they file a formal complaint of sexual harassment.[498]

In response to commenters' concerns that under the proposed rules complainants would have difficulty

---

[498] Section 106.44(a) (requiring a recipient's response to include informing the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint and explaining to the complainant the option for filing a formal complaint). While elementary and secondary school students retain less control over when disclosure of sexual harassment triggers the school's mandatory response obligations, these students (with involvement of their parents as appropriate) do retain control over whether to accept supportive measures, and whether to also file a formal complaint. § 106.44(a); § 106.6(g).

finding the Title IX Coordinator or that there would be an increased potential for misunderstandings about whether a complainant wanted the school to investigate, the final regulations strengthen existing regulatory requirements that recipients notify students and employees (and parents of elementary and secondary school students) of the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator, post the Title IX

Coordinator's contact information on the recipient's website, and disseminate information about how to report sexual harassment and file a formal complaint.[499] Additionally, revised § 106.44(a) requires the Title IX Coordinator to contact each complainant (which includes a parent or legal guardian, as appropriate) to inform the complainant of the option of filing a formal complaint while assuring the complainant that supportive measures are available irrespective of whether the complainant chooses to file a formal complaint.

[499] Section 106.8.

Under the rubric of actual knowledge, as applied by Federal courts interpreting Supreme Court precedent, whether certain recipient employees are officials with authority is a fact specific inquiry. Accordingly, the final regulations: (1)

continue, as proposed in the NPRM, to ensure that notice to a recipient's Title IX Coordinator conveys actual knowledge, and (2) broaden the definition of actual knowledge for elementary and secondary schools to include notice to any school employee.[500] In this manner, the final regulations ensure that students in elementary and secondary schools can

[500] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge").

discuss, disclose, or report a sexual harassment incident to any school employee, conveying actual knowledge to the school and requiring the school to respond appropriately, while postsecondary institutions have discretion to offer college and university students options to discuss or disclose sexual harassment experiences with institutional employees for the purpose of emotional support, or for the purpose of receiving supportive measures and/or initiating a grievance process against the respondent.

The Department acknowledges that the actual knowledge standard relies on the Title IX Coordinator as an essential component of the process to address sexual harassment, especially in the postsecondary institution context. Recipients have been required to designate a Title IX Coordinator for decades, and the Department believes that these final regulations ensure that all students have clear, accessible options for making reports that convey actual knowledge to the recipient.[501] Nothing in these final regulations prevents a postsecondary institution or any other recipient from requiring employees who are not Title IX

[501] Section 106.30 defines "actual knowledge" to include notice to any elementary and secondary school employee, or to any Title IX Coordinator, and expressly states that "notice" includes but is not limited to a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a) (which, in turn, states that any person may report to the Title IX Coordinator in person or by mail to the office address, by telephone, or by e-mail, using the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator that the recipient must send to students, employees, and parents and guardians of elementary and secondary school students). § 106.8(b) (requiring recipients to prominently display the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on recipients' websites).

Coordinators or officials with authority, to report allegations of sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator when such employees become aware of such allegations.[502]

The Department disagrees that the actual knowledge requirement will chill reports because complainants might worry that the Title IX Coordinator will [502] We have also revised § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to state that the mere fact that an individual is required to, or has been trained to, report sexual harassment, does not mean that individual is an "official with authority." We made this revision so that a recipient may require and/or train contractors, volunteers, or others to report to a Title IX Coordinator (or other appropriate school personnel) without automatically converting any such individual into a person to whom notice charges the recipient with actual knowledge.

---

not believe or take their reports seriously, or that the actual knowledge requirement violates complainants' "right to safety." These final regulations require that a recipient's Title IX Coordinator receives training on how to serve impartially and without bias pursuant to § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), and must offer each complainant information about supportive measures (designed in part to protect the complainant's safety) and how to file a formal complaint, under § 106.44(a). If a Title IX Coordinator responds to a complainant by not taking a report seriously, or with bias against the complainant, the recipient has violated these final regulations.

Changes: Section 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" is revised to include notice to any elementary and secondary school employee. Section 106.44(a) adds specific requirements that the recipient must offer supportive measures to a complainant, and the Title IX Coordinator must contact each complainant to discuss availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, consider the wishes of the complainant with respect to supportive measures, and explain the process for filing a formal complaint.

Generally Burdening Complainants

Comments: Many commenters asserted that the actual knowledge definition and requirement places the burden squarely on victims to report harm. One commenter asserted that under the proposed rules, complainants – rather than recipients – would bear the responsibility to report sexual harassment and assault. Numerous commenters stated that postsecondary students are not yet full adults, and that the proposed regulations unrealistically assume that an 18 year old freshman in college is ready to face the process required by the proposed regulations.

Many commenters asserted that eliminating the "responsible employees" rubric used in Department guidance will delay, if not totally hinder, the ability of complainants to get prompt assistance in the aftermath of trauma. Commenters stated that complainants will need to navigate the school's bureaucracy to locate and contact the Title IX Coordinator, which will take time, and in the meantime this will force complainants to continue to see their perpetrators in classes or dormitories while the complainant navigates the school's bureaucracy. Another commenter asked why the proposed regulations removed the term

"responsible employees" that was used in Department guidance.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges that the actual knowledge requirement in the final regulations departs from the constructive notice approach relied on in previous Department guidance, wherein the Department took the position that any "responsible employee" (in both elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions) who knew or should have known about sexual harassment triggered the recipient's obligation to address sexual harassment.[503] However, we disagree that the actual knowledge definition in § 106.30 (as revised) and the actual knowledge requirement in § 106.44(a), burden complainants or will result in delayed responses to reported sexual harassment. In response to commenters' concerns that students and employees may not know how to report to the Title IX Coordinator, we have revised § 106.8 to better ensure that students, employees, and others have clear, accessible options for reporting to the Title IX Coordinator (including options that can be utilized during non-business hours), and to emphasize that reports may be made by complainants (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) or by any other person. Revised § 106.8 now requires recipients to notify all students, employees, and parents of elementary and secondary school students (and others) of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information, to post that contact information prominently on the recipient's website, and specifies that "any person" may report using the listed contact information for the Title IX Coordinator.

---

[503] E.g., 2001 Guidance at 13.

We appreciate a commenter's inquiry about the omission of "responsible employees" in these final regulations. There are two ways in which the final regulations alter references to "responsible employees." First, existing Title IX regulations have long used a heading, "Designation of responsible employee," preceding 34 CFR 106.8(a);

this reference to "responsible employee" has always, in reality, been a reference to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator, and the Department is revising § 106.8(a) to reflect this reality by using the phrase "Designation of Title IX Coordinator" in the header for § 106.8(a) and specifying in that section that the employee designated and authorized by the recipient to coordinate the recipient's Title IX responsibilities is known as, and must be referred to as, the "Title IX Coordinator." Second, the term "responsible employee" appears throughout the Department's past guidance documents. In the 2001 Guidance, the Department defined a responsible employee as "any employee who has the authority to take action to redress the harassment, who has the duty to report to appropriate school officials sexual harassment or any other misconduct by students or employees, or an individual who a student could reasonably believe has this authority or responsibility."[504] As explained in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, these final regulations do not use the "responsible employees" rubric that was set forth in Department guidance. In the elementary and secondary school context, there is no need to decide which employees are "responsible employees" because under revised § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge," notice to any elementary and secondary school employee triggers the recipient's response obligations. In the postsecondary institution context, these final regulations do not use the responsible employees rubric in its entirety, although the first of the three categories described in guidance as "responsible employees" are still used in these final regulations, because notice to an official with authority is the equivalent of the category referred to in guidance as an employee who has the authority to redress the harassment. In the postsecondary institution context, the Department believes that complainants will benefit from allowing postsecondary institutions to decide which of their employees (aside from the Title IX Coordinator, and officials with authority) may listen to a student's disclosure of sexual harassment without being mandated to report the sexual harassment incident to the Title IX Coordinator.

[504] 2001 Guidance at 13.

A recipient (including a postsecondary institution recipient) may give authority to as many officials as it wishes to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient, and notice to such officials with authority will trigger the recipient's response obligations. A recipient also may choose to train employees and other individuals, such as parent or alumni volunteers, on how to report or respond to sexual harassment, even if these employees and individuals do not have the authority to take corrective measures on the recipient's behalf. The Department will not penalize recipients for such training by declaring that having trained people results in notice to those people charging the recipient with actual knowledge. The Department recognizes that recipients may not engage in such training efforts if such efforts may increase the recipient's liability.[505] Accordingly, these final regulations specify in the definition of actual knowledge in § 106.30 that: the "mere ability or obligation to report sexual harassment or to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment, or having been trained to do so, does not

---

[505] Id. Under the 2001 Guidance and subsequent guidance documents, a recipient was required to "ensure that employees are trained so that . . . responsible employees know that they are obligated to report harassment to appropriate school officials." 2001 Guidance at 13. Accordingly, training an employee may have increased the recipient's liability, as such training indicated the recipient's intention to treat the trained employees as responsible employees. (For reasons explained in this subsection "Actual Knowledge" under the section "Section 106.30 Definitions" as well as the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department no longer adheres to the rubric of "responsible employees" for reasons that differ for elementary and secondary schools, than for postsecondary institutions.) These final regulations require training for Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and any person who facilitates an informal resolution process. § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). A recipient may train more employees or other persons without fear of creating liability because the "mere ability or obligation to report sexual harassment or having been trained to do so, does not qualify an individual as one who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient," as described in the definition of "actual knowledge" in § 106.30.

qualify an individual as one who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient."

The Department disagrees that the actual knowledge requirement will delay implementation of emergency or urgently needed supportive measures compared to policies developed under a constructive notice requirement. In elementary and secondary schools the final regulations provide that reporting to any school employee triggers the school's prompt response. Once the elementary or secondary school has actual knowledge of sexual harassment, under revised § 106.44(a), the recipient must promptly offer the complainant supportive measures, and the Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. The same obligations to respond promptly are triggered in postsecondary institutions whenever the Title IX Coordinator or an official with authority has notice of sexual harassment.

Although commenters asserted that some complainants, even at postsecondary institutions, are too young, immature, or traumatized to contact a Title IX Coordinator, the Department notes that nothing in the final regulations prevents a complainant from first discussing the harassment situation with a trusted mentor or having a supportive friend with them to meet with or otherwise report to the Title IX Coordinator. The Department reiterates that under the final regulations, a complainant may report to the Title IX Coordinator and receive supportive measures without filing a formal complaint or otherwise participating in a grievance process, that reports can be made using any of the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator

including office address, telephone number, or e-mail address, and that reports by phone or e-mail may be made at any time, including during non-business hours. Thus, we believe that the final regulations provide clear, accessible reporting options and will not cause delays in the responsibility or ability of a Title IX Coordinator to receive a report and then respond promptly, including by discussing with the complainant services that may be urgently needed to preserve a complainant's equal educational access, protect the complainant's safety, and/or deter sexual harassment, offering supportive measures to the complainant, and remaining responsible for effective implementation of the supportive measures.[506]

---

[506] Section 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" in pertinent part to mean individualized services, reasonably available, offered without fee or charge, designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to the recipient's education program or activity without unreasonably burdening the other party, and/or designed to protect the complainant's safety or deter sexual harassment, and stating that the Title IX Coordinator is responsible for effective implementation of supportive measures).

Changes: The Department revised the definition of actual knowledge in § 106.30 to add that the mere ability or obligation to report sexual harassment or to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment, or having been trained to do so, does not qualify an individual, as one who has the authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient. We have also revised § 106.44(a) to require the recipient promptly to offer the complainant supportive measures and to require the Title IX Coordinator promptly to contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.

Employees' Obligations

Comments: Several commenters expressed concern that the definition of actual knowledge means that some employees previously designated as "responsible employees" or mandatory reporters under Department guidance would no longer undergo training about sexual violence on campus. Many commenters believed that under the proposed rules, fewer employees would be mandatory reporters and thus would be untrained when students disclose an incident of sexual harassment. Many commenters asserted that, without mandatory reporting, professors, coaches, resident advisors, or teaching assistants may respond to victims based on personal preferences or biases (perhaps because the employee knows the accused student, or is biased against believing complainants), and argued that this will impact victims' ability to obtain assistance from unbiased, trained personnel. Several commenters argued that this, in turn, will expose recipients to increased litigation for failure to respond to sexual misconduct known by their faculty and staff but not reported to their Title IX offices.

Another commenter asked the Department to reexamine existing regulations under the Clery Act to determine whether student employees who are campus security authorities (CSAs) under the Clery Act have conflicting duties under the proposed regulations and the Clery Act regulations.

Another commenter asked the Department to clarify why coaches and athletic trainers were not designated in the proposed rules as responsible employees, when this poses a conflict with NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association) guidelines.

One commenter asked what officials the Department considers to have the "authority to initiate corrective measures," believing that the language in the proposed rules could be interpreted to limit that role to only the Title IX Coordinator. Relatedly, several commenters requested that the Department provide clarity on what constitutes "authority to initiate corrective measures" and what types of corrective measures would be included; commenters argued that all staff and faculty have at least some ability to initiate some types of corrective measures.

At least one commenter asserted that requiring institutions, such as the commenter's community college, to respond only when the institution has actual notice, is a positive development. The commenter asserted that the commenter's institution employs part-time and contract employees, and vendors, outside the institution's direct control with no authority to institute corrective measures. This commenter therefore appreciated the flexibility offered under the proposed rules, for postsecondary institutions to design their own mandatory reporting policies. One commenter, a graduate student instructor, asserted that the actual knowledge definition was helpful to clarify the commenter's role and asserted that current guidance is unclear.

One commenter, a Title IX Coordinator at a university, asserted that the constructive notice standard is difficult to implement. The commenter stated that those not directly involved in Title IX compliance or student conduct, such as full-time faculty, seem to have trouble understanding the complexity of the law in that area, even with training.

Discussion: The 2001 Guidance indicated that responsible employees

should be trained to report sexual harassment to appropriate school officials.[507] Not all employees, however, were responsible employees and, thus, not all employees had an obligation to report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator or other school officials. With respect to training, the Department in its 2001 Guidance stated: "schools need to ensure that employees are

[507] 2001 Guidance at 13.

trained so that those with authority to address [sexual] harassment know how to respond appropriately, and other responsible employees know that they are obligated to report [sexual] harassment to appropriate officials."[508] Under the 2001 Guidance, such "[t]raining for employees . . . include[s] practical information about how to identify [sexual] harassment and, as

---

[508] 2001 Guidance at 13.

applicable, the person to whom it should be reported."[509] As discussed previously, these final regulations no longer use a responsible employees rubric, and instead define the pool of employees to whom notice triggers a recipient's response obligations differently for elementary and secondary schools, and for postsecondary institutions. Like the 2001 Guidance,

---

[509] Id.

these final regulations incentivize recipients to train their employees; however, rather than mandate training of all employees, these final regulations require robust, specific training of every recipient's Title IX Coordinator[510] and place specific response obligations on Title IX Coordinators.[511] The Department believes that this approach most effectively ensures that recipients meet their Title IX obligations: the Department will hold recipients accountable for meeting Title IX obligations, the Department requires Title IX Coordinators to be well trained, and the Department leaves recipients discretion to determine the kind of training to other employees that will best enable the recipient, and its Title IX Coordinator, to meet Title IX obligations. Accordingly, the Department disagrees with commenters that removing any "mandatory reporting" requirement or the "responsible employee" rubric allows employees to freely respond to victims out of personal preferences or biases. For example, an elementary or secondary school recipient must promptly offer supportive measures to a complainant under § 106.44(a) whenever one of its employees has notice of sexual harassment, and the Title IX Coordinator specifically must contact the complainant. This ensures that the recipient is responsible for having an employee specially trained in Title IX matters (including the obligation to be free from bias, impartial, and having been trained with materials that do not rely on sex stereotypes)[512] communicates with the complainant.

[510] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

[511] E.g., § 106.44(a) (the Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact each person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment – i.e., each complainant – regardless of who reported the complainant's sexual harassment victimization, and must discuss with the complainant the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and the option of filing a formal complaint that initiates a grievance process against a respondent).

---

[512] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) (describing mandatory training, and requirements to be free from bias, for the Title IX Coordinator).

Regardless of the training a recipient gives to employees, the Department will hold the recipient accountable for meeting the recipient's response obligations under § 106.44(a) and for designating and authorizing a Title IX Coordinator[513] who has been trained to serve free from bias. For reasons discussed previously, including in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the

[513] Section 106.8(a).

"Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that allowing postsecondary institution recipients to decide how its employees (other than the Title IX Coordinator, and officials with authority) respond to notice of sexual harassment appropriately respects the autonomy of postsecondary students to choose to disclose sexual harassment to employees for the purpose of triggering the postsecondary institution's Title IX response obligations, or for another purpose (for example, receiving emotional support without desiring to "officially" report). In order to ensure that all students and employees have clear, accessible reporting channels, we have revised § 106.8 to require a recipient to notify its educational community of the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator[514] and post that contact information prominently on the recipient's website, and to expressly state that "any person" may report sexual harassment at any time, including during non-business hours, by using the telephone number or e-mail address (or by mail to the office

[514] Section 106.8(a) is also revised to require recipients to refer to the employee designated and authorized to coordinate the recipient's Title IX obligations as "the Title IX Coordinator," in order to further clarify for students and employees the Title IX Coordinator's role and function. Thus, for example, a recipient may designate one employee to coordinate multiple types of anti-discrimination and diversity efforts, yet the recipient must use the title "Title IX Coordinator" in its notices to students and employees, on its website, and so forth so that the recipient's educational community knows who to contact to report sex discrimination, including sexual harassment.

address) listed for the Title IX Coordinator, to emphasize that giving the Title IX Coordinator notice of sexual harassment that triggers the recipient's response obligations does not require scheduling an in-person appointment with the Title IX Coordinator.

Additionally, if a postsecondary institution would like to train all employees or require all employees to report sexual harassment to the Title IX

Coordinator through policies that these final regulations do not require, then the postsecondary institution may do so without fearing that the Department will hold the postsecondary institution responsible for responding to sexual harassment allegations unless the recipient's employee actually did give notice to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator (or to an official with authority).[515] The Department revised § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to expressly state that the mere ability or obligation to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment or having been trained to do so will not qualify an individual as one who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient. Postsecondary institutions, thus, may train as many employees as they would like or impose mandatory reporting requirements on their employees without violating these final regulations, and may make those training decisions based on what the recipient believes is in the best interest of the recipient's educational community. A postsecondary institution's decisions regarding employee training and mandatory reporting for employees may, for example, take into account that students at postsecondary institutions may benefit from knowing they can discuss sexual harassment experiences with a trusted professor, resident advisor, or other recipient employee without such a discussion automatically triggering a report to the Title IX office, or may take into account whether the postsecondary institution has Clery Act obligations that require training on reporting obligations for CSAs, or whether the institution is expected to adhere to NCAA guidelines.

[515] As noted by a commenter on behalf of a community college, this flexibility applies in the postsecondary institution context regarding how the institution decides to train, or have a mandatory reporting policy for, all employees who are not the Title IX Coordinator or an official with authority, such as the institution's part-time employees or vendors who are independent contractors to whom the institution has not given authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the institution. In the elementary and secondary school context, this flexibility is more limited, because the final regulations hold the school responsible for responding whenever any employee has notice of sexual harassment. However, this flexibility (to train individuals, or to require individuals to report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator) still applies to elementary and secondary school recipients, for example with respect to independent contractor vendors, or non-employee volunteers who interact with students.

With respect to both elementary and secondary schools as well as postsecondary institutions, the Department does not limit the manner in which the recipient may receive notice of sexual harassment. Although imputation of knowledge based solely on vicarious liability or constructive notice is insufficient to constitute actual knowledge, a Title IX Coordinator, an official with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient, and any employee of an elementary and secondary school may receive notice through an oral report of sexual harassment by a complainant or anyone else, a written report, through personal observation, through a newspaper article, through an anonymous report, or through various other means. The Department will not permit a recipient to ignore sexual harassment if the recipient has actual knowledge of such sexual harassment in its education program or activity against a person in the U.S., and such a recipient is required to respond to sexual harassment as described in § 106.44(a).

The Department disagrees with commenters who are concerned that the actual knowledge requirement would expose recipients to increased litigation. Because the Department developed the actual knowledge requirement on the foundation of the Supreme Court's Title IX cases, the Department disagrees that recipients will be subject to increased litigation risk by adhering to these final regulations.[516] Indeed, if recipients comply with these final regulations, these final regulations may have the effect of decreasing litigation because recipients with actual knowledge would be able to demonstrate that they were not deliberately indifferent in responding to a report of sexual harassment. Recipients would be able to demonstrate that they offered supportive measures in response to a report of sexual harassment, irrespective of whether the complainant chose to file a formal complaint, and informed the complainant about how to file such a formal complaint.

---

[516] See the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section, and the "Litigation Risk" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section, of this preamble.

The Department has examined these final regulations in light of its regulations implementing the Clery Act, and has determined that these final regulations do not create any conflicts with respect to CSAs and their obligations under the regulations implementing the Clery Act. For discussion about these final regulations and the regulations implementing the Clery Act, see the discussion in the "Clery Act" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble. The Department is not under an obligation to conform these final regulations with NCAA compliance

guidelines and declines to do so. Any recipient may give coaches and trainers authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient such that notice to coaches and trainers conveys actual knowledge to the recipient as defined in § 106.30. Additionally, or alternatively, any recipient may train coaches and athletic trainers to report notice of sexual harassment to the recipient's Title IX

Coordinator. We reiterate that as to elementary and secondary schools, notice to a coach or trainer charges the recipient with actual knowledge, if the coach or trainer is an employee.

As discussed in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Supreme Court developed the concept of officials with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient based on the administrative enforcement requirement in 20 U.S.C. 1682 that an agency must give notice of a Title IX violation to "an appropriate person" affiliated with the recipient before an agency seeks to terminate the recipient's Federal funding, and that an appropriate official is one who can make a decision to correct the violation. Whether a person

constitutes an official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient is a fact-specific determination[517] and the Department will look to Federal case law

---

[517] E.g., Julie Davies, Assessing Institutional Responsibility for Sexual Harassment in Education, 77 TULANE L. REV. 387, 398, 425-26 (2002) ("The requirement of actual notice to a person with corrective authority is more complex than it appears on its face. A person who has corrective authority in one sphere, such as a teacher with regard to students in his class, may lack such authority in other contexts. While one can understand the potential unfairness to educational institutions if liability were imposed for failure to take action when harassing conduct is described in some general manner to someone who is not in a capacity to evaluate, investigate, or intercede in any way, courts cannot rely exclusively on a job description. The legal authority of individuals to receive notice is clearly relevant and a basis for their inclusion as parties to whom notice may be given, but courts must also evaluate the factual reality. Reference to legal power to take the ultimate corrective action gives an incomplete picture of how power is wielded. The Court's policy goals permit a construction that is broad and flexible, both as to what constitutes notice and who is in a position to take action.") (internal citations omitted); Brian Bardwell, No One is an Inappropriate Person: The Mistaken Application of Gebser's "Appropriate Person" Test to Title IX Peer-Harassment Cases, 68 CASE W. RES. L. REV. 1343, 1356-64 (2018) (analyzing case law applying the "official with authority" standard and noting that some courts focus on whether the "appropriate person" to whom sexual harassment was reported had authority to discipline the harasser, or the authority to remediate the situation for the victim, or both types of authority, and arguing that only a broader interpretation of an "appropriate person" serves the goals of Title IX, such that any school employee authorized to "take action to ensure that a victim continues to enjoy the full benefits of her [or his] education, despite having been harassed or assaulted" should be deemed authority to institute "corrective action" and satisfy the Gebser actual knowledge condition). The final regulations essentially take this broader approach in the elementary and secondary school context, where notice to any employee charges the school with actual knowledge, but in the postsecondary institution context leaves institutions flexibility to choose the officials to whom the institution grants authority to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf. Recognizing that case law under the Gebser/Davis framework has taken different approaches to what constitutes "corrective action" the final regulations emphasize a recipient's obligation to ensure that its entire educational community knows how to readily, accessibly report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator.

applying the Gebser/Davis framework. Because determining which employees may be officials with authority" is fact-specific, the Department focuses administrative enforcement on (1) requiring every recipient to designate a Title IX Coordinator, notice to whom the Department deems as conveying actual knowledge to the recipient, and (2) applying an expanded definition of actual knowledge in the elementary and secondary school context to include notice to any school employee. The Department notes that recipients may, at their discretion, expressly designate specific employees as officials with authority for purposes of Title IX sexual harassment, and may inform students of such designations.

Changes: The Department revised § 106.30 to expressly state that the mere ability or obligation to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment or having been trained to do so will not qualify an individual as one who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient.

Elementary and Secondary Schools

Comments: Many commenters expressed concerns about how the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge" will apply to students at elementary and secondary schools. Commenters asserted that elementary and secondary school students suffer a particular harm when adult employees prey upon them, and those same adults can pressure those students to stay silent. Some commenters asserted that the proposed rules conflict with robust State laws and regulations that require mandatory reporting of suspected child abuse or domestic violence. Several commenters characterized the actual knowledge requirement as dramatically narrowing the scope of elementary and secondary school employees' obligation to respond to sexual harassment by using an actual knowledge requirement instead of a constructive notice requirement. These commenters contended that the proposed rules' actual knowledge requirement would harm children because it would exclude school district personnel who regularly interact with students, including school principals, paraeducators, school counselors, coaches, school bus drivers, and others, from the group of officials to whom notice charges the school with actual knowledge.

Discussion: The Department is persuaded that students in elementary and secondary schools who are typically younger than students in postsecondary institutions must be able to report

sexual harassment to an employee other than a teacher, Title IX Coordinator, or official with authority, to trigger the school's mandatory response obligations. We agree that it is unreasonable to expect young children to seek out specific employees for the purpose of disclosing Title IX sexual harassment. Elementary and secondary school employees other than the Title IX Coordinator, teachers, or officials with authority may observe or witness sexual harassment or have notice of sexual harassment through other means such as a third-party report, and we agree that in the elementary and secondary school context such notice must trigger the school's mandatory response obligations because otherwise, a young complainant may not be offered supportive measures or know of the option to file a formal complaint that initiates a grievance process against the respondent. Further, we recognize that in the elementary and secondary school context, a young student's ability to make decisions regarding appropriate supportive measures, or about whether to file a formal complaint, would be impeded without the involvement of a parent or guardian who has the legal authority to act on the student's behalf. Accordingly, the Department expands

the definition of actual knowledge in § 106.30 to include "any employee of an elementary and secondary school" and adds § 106.6(g) expressly recognizing the legal rights of parents and guardians to act on behalf of a complainant (or respondent) in any Title IX matter. While the imputation of knowledge based solely on the theories of vicarious liability or constructive notice is insufficient, notice of sexual harassment to elementary and secondary school employees, who may include school principals, teachers, school counselors, coaches, school bus drivers, and all other employees, will obligate the recipient to respond to Title IX sexual harassment.

The actual knowledge requirement is not satisfied when the only official or employee of the recipient with actual knowledge of the harassment is the respondent, because the recipient will not have opportunity to appropriately respond if the only official or employee who knows is the respondent. We understand that in some situations, a school employee may perpetrate sexual harassment against a student and then pressure the complainant to stay silent, and that if the complainant does not disclose the misconduct to anyone other than the employee-perpetrator, this provision means that the school is not obligated to respond. However, if the complainant tells another school employee about the misconduct, the school is charged with actual knowledge and must respond. Further, if the complainant tells a parent, or a friend, or a trusted adult in the complainant's life, that third party has the right to report sexual harassment to the school's Title IX Coordinator, obligating the school to promptly respond, even if that third party has no affiliation with the school.[518]

As previously explained in the "Employees' Obligations" subsection of this "Actual Knowledge" section, the definition of actual knowledge in these final regulations does not necessarily narrow the scope of an elementary or secondary school's obligation to respond to Title IX sexual harassment as compared to the approach taken in Department guidance. Under the 2001 Guidance, a school had "notice if a responsible employee 'knew or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known,' about the harassment."[519] Responsible employees, however, did not include all employees. Under these final regulations, notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to any employee of an elementary or secondary school charges the recipient with actual knowledge to the elementary or secondary school and triggers the recipient's obligation to respond. The Department's revised definition of actual knowledge with respect to elementary and secondary schools, thus, arguably broadens and does not narrow an elementary or secondary school's obligation to respond to Title IX sexual harassment compared to the approach taken in Department guidance.

---

[518] Section 106.8(a) (emphasizing that "any person" may report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator).

[519] 2001 Guidance at 13.

The Department recognizes that most State laws require elementary and secondary school employees to report sexual harassment when it constitutes a form of child abuse. Even though the Department is not required to align these Federal regulations with mandatory reporter requirements in State laws, the Department chooses to do so in the context of elementary and secondary schools. The Department's prior guidance did not require an elementary or secondary school to respond to Title IX sexual harassment when any employee had notice of Title IX sexual harassment.[520] These final regulations do so. The Department acknowledges that State laws may exceed the requirements in these final regulations as long as State laws do not conflict with these final regulations as explained more fully in the "Section 106.6(h) Preemptive Effect" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble. Commenters have not identified a conflict with respect to the actual knowledge definition in § 106.30, and any State law, in the context of elementary and secondary schools.

---

[520] Id.

Changes: The Department revised § 106.30 to specify that notice of sexual harassment to any employee of an elementary and secondary school constitutes actual knowledge to the recipient, and triggers the recipient's obligation to respond to sexual harassment.

Large Schools

Comments: Multiple commenters asserted that students at large institutions – such as schools with more than one campus or with enrollments over 5,000 students – are disadvantaged by the actual knowledge requirement because students will be required to seek out a single administrator (the Title IX Coordinator) whose office may be located on a different campus or in another zip code and who has responsibilities for tens of thousands of other students, faculty, and staff.

Several commenters also questioned how the proposed rules, including the actual knowledge definition in § 106.30, will burden Title IX Coordinators. Commenters asserted that the requirement for actual knowledge will significantly burden Title IX Coordinators who must now receive and process all sexual harassment and assault reports. Commenters expressed concern that for larger campuses, this could overwhelm an already overtaxed position on campuses, cause higher turnover rates for the position of Title IX Coordinator, and result in ineffective administration of Title IX. Many commenters argued that the proposed rules, and their focus on the Title IX Coordinator's responsibilities, would add to schools' overall administrative burdens.

Discussion: The Department's regulatory authority under Title IX extends to recipients of Federal financial assistance which operate education programs or activities.[521] Requirements such as designation of a Title IX Coordinator therefore apply to each

[521] 20 U.S.C. 1681(a) (referring to any education program or activity that receives Federal financial assistance); 34 CFR 106.2(i) (defining "recipient" to mean "any State or political subdivision thereof, or any instrumentality of a State or political subdivision thereof, any public or private agency, institution, or organization, or other entity, or any person, to whom Federal financial assistance is extended directly or through another recipient and which operates an education program or activity which receives such assistance, including any subunit, successor, assignee, or transferee thereof").

"recipient," for example to a school district, or to a university system, regardless of the recipient's size in terms of student enrollment or number of schools or campuses. Title IX's non-discrimination mandate extends to every recipient's education programs or activities.[522] These final regulations at § 106.8(a), similar to current 34 CFR 106.9, require recipients to designate "at least one" employee to serve as a Title IX Coordinator. As the Department has recognized in guidance documents,[523] some recipients serve so many students, or find it administratively convenient for other reasons, that the recipient may need to or wish to designate multiple employees as Title IX

[522] See 20 U.S.C. 1687 (defining "program or activity"); 34 CFR 106.2(h) (defining "program or activity").

[523] E.g., 2001 Guidance at 21 ("Because it is possible that an employee designated to handle Title IX complaints may himself or herself engage in harassment, a school may want to designate more than one employee to be responsible for handling complaints in order to ensure that students have an effective means of reporting harassment."); 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 7 (stating that each recipient must designate one Title IX Coordinator but may designate more than one). The Department's Title IX implementing regulations have, since 1975, required each recipient to designate at least one employee to coordinate the recipient's efforts to comply with Title IX. 34 CFR 106.8(a). These final regulations are thus consistent with current regulations and with all past Department guidance on this matter, but impose new legal obligations on recipients to, for example, include an e-mail address for the Title IX Coordinator and require all the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator to be posted on the recipient's website. § 106.8.

Coordinators, or designate a Title IX Coordinator and additional staff to serve as deputy Title IX Coordinators, or take other administrative steps to ensure that the Title IX Coordinator can adequately fulfill the recipient's Title IX obligations, including all obligations imposed under these final regulations. The Department is sensitive to the financial and resource challenges faced by many recipients, the Department's responsibility is to regulate in a manner that best effectuates the purposes of Title IX, to prevent recipients that allow discrimination on the basis of sex from receiving Federal financial assistance, and to provide individuals with effective protections against discriminatory practices.[524] The Department is aware that many recipients face high turnover rates with respect to the Title IX

[524] See, e.g., Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979) (describing the purposes of Title IX).

Coordinator position[525] and that some recipients struggle to understand the critical role that Title IX Coordinators need to have in fulfilling a recipient's Title IX responsibilities. However, the Department intends through these final regulations to further stress the critical role of each recipient's Title IX

---

[525] E.g., Sarah Brown, Life Inside the Title IX Pressure Cooker, CHRONICLE OF HIGHER EDUCATION (Sept. 5, 2019) ("Nationwide, the administrators who are in charge of dealing with campus sexual assault and harassment are turning over fast. Many colleges have had three, four, or even five different Title IX coordinators in the recent era of heightened enforcement, which began eight years ago. Two-thirds of Title IX coordinators say they've been in their jobs for less than three years, according to a 2018 survey by the Association of Title IX Administrators, or ATIXA, the field's national membership group. One-fifth have held their positions for less than a year."); Jacquelyn D. Wiersma-Mosley & James DiLoreto, The Role of Title IX Coordinators on College and University Campuses, 8 BEHAVIORAL. SCI. 4 (2018) (finding that most Title IX Coordinators have fewer than three years of experience, and approximately two-thirds are employed in positions in addition to serving as the Title IX Coordinator).

Coordinator, a role that is emphasized throughout the final regulations[526] in ways that the Department is aware will require recipients to carefully "designate and authorize" Title IX Coordinators. The Department revised § 106.8(a) to require a recipient to give the Title IX Coordinator authority (i.e., authorize) to [526] E.g., § 106.8(a) (stating recipients now must not only designate, but also "authorize" a Title IX Coordinator, and must notify students and employees (and others) of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information); § 106.8(b)(2) (requiring a recipient to post contact information for any Title IX Coordinators on the recipient's website); § 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" and stating notice to a Title IX Coordinator gives the recipient actual knowledge and "notice" includes but is not limited to a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a)); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint" and stating a Title IX Coordinator may sign a formal complaint initiating a § 106.45 grievance process); § 106.44(a) (stating the Title IX Coordinator must contact each complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures); § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" and mandating that Title IX Coordinators are responsible for effective implementation of supportive measures); § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) (stating Title IX Coordinators must be free from conflicts of interest and bias, and must be trained on, among other things, how to serve impartially); § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) (stating a complainant may notify the Title IX Coordinator that the complainant wishes to withdraw a formal complaint); § 106.45(b)(7)(iv) (mandating that Title IX Coordinators are responsible for the effective implementation of remedies).

---

meet specific responsibilities as well as to coordinate the recipient's overall efforts to comply with Title IX and these final regulations. The Department believes this emphasis on the need for recipients to rely heavily on Title IX Coordinators to fulfill recipient's obligations will result in more recipients effectively responding to Title IX sexual harassment because recipients will be incentivized to properly train and authorize qualified individuals to serve this important function. The Department understands some commenters' concerns that Title IX Coordinators will be burdened by, and that recipients will face administrative burdens under, these final regulations, but the Department believes that the obligations in these final regulations are the most effective way to effectuate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, and believes that the function of a Title IX Coordinator is necessary to increase the likelihood that recipients will fulfill those obligations. At the same time, the Department will not impose a requirement on recipients to designate multiple Title IX Coordinators, so that recipients devote their resources in the most effective and efficient manner. If a recipient needs more than one Title IX Coordinator in order to meet the recipient's Title IX obligations, the recipient will take that administrative step, but the Department declines to assume the conditions under which a recipient needs more than one Title IX Coordinator in order to meet the recipient's Title IX obligations.

Because of the crucial role of Title IX Coordinators, the final regulations update and strengthen the requirements that recipients notify students, employees, parents of elementary and secondary school students, and others, of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information and about how to make a report or file a formal complaint.[527] In further response to commenters' concerns that students may not know how to contact a Title IX Coordinator, the final regulations require the Title IX Coordinator's contact information

---

[527] E.g., § 106.8(a); § 106.8(c). These requirements apply specifically to reports and formal complaints of sexual harassment, but also apply to reports and complaints of non-sexual harassment forms of sex discrimination.

(which must include an office address, telephone number, and e-mail address) to be posted on recipients' websites,[528] expressly state that any person may report sexual harassment using the listed contact information for the Title IX Coordinator or any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report, specify that such a report may be made "at any time (including during non-business hours)" using the Title IX Coordinator's listed telephone number or e-mail address.[529] The final regulations also revise the definition of "formal complaint" to specify that a formal complaint may be filed in person, by mail, or by e-mail using the listed contact information for the Title IX Coordinator.[530] The Department's intent

[528] Section 106.8(b)(2).

---

[529] Section 106.8(a).
[530] Section 106.30 (defining "formal complaint").

is to increase the likelihood that students and employees know how to contact, and receive supportive measures and accurate information from, a trained Title IX Coordinator.[531] Requiring the contact information for a Title IX Coordinator to include an office address, e-mail address, and telephone number pursuant to § 106.8(a) obviates some commenters' concerns that

[531] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) (describing required training for Title IX Coordinators and other Title IX personnel).

complainants will need to travel to physically report in person or face-to-face with a Title IX Coordinator.[532] Thus, even if the recipient's Title IX Coordinator is located on a different campus from the student or in an administrative building outside the school building where a student attends classes, any person may report to the [532] This requirement also mirrors the requirement (updated to include modern communication via e-mail) in the 2001 Guidance that the "school must notify all of its students and employees of the name, office address, and telephone number of the employee or employees designated" to coordinate its efforts to comply with and carry out its Title IX responsibilities. 2001 Guidance at 21.

Title IX Coordinator using the Title IX Coordinator's listed contact information, providing accessible reporting options.[533] The Department believes these requirements concerning a Title IX Coordinator are sufficient to hold recipients accountable for complying with these final regulations, while leaving recipients flexibility to decide, in a recipient's discretion, whether [533] For additional accessibility and ease of reporting, revised § 106.8(a) further states that any person may report at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or e-mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator.

---

designation of multiple Title IX Coordinators, or deputy Title IX Coordinators, might be necessary and where any Title IX office(s) should be located, given a recipient's needs in terms of enrollment, geographic campus locations, and other factors.

Changes: Section 106.8(a) is revised to require that recipients must not only designate, but also "authorize" a Title IX Coordinator to coordinate the recipient's

Title IX obligations. This provision is also revised to require recipients to notify students, employees, parents of elementary and secondary school students, and others, of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information including office address, telephone number, and electronic mail address and to state that any person may report to the Title IX Coordinator using the contact information listed for the Title IX

Coordinator (or any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report). This provision is also revised to state that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or e-mail address or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator. Section 106.8(b)(2) is revised to require the contact information for Title IX Coordinator(s) to be prominently displayed on the recipient's website and in each of the recipient's handbooks or catalogs.

Miscellaneous Comments and Questions

Comments: One commenter recommended that the final sentence of § 106.30 be deleted, and that the word "apparent" be inserted before

"authority" in the first sentence of the same provision.

One commenter asked whether a Title IX Coordinator can initiate a grievance process in the absence of a signed complaint (for example, when evidence is readily available and/or an ongoing threat to campus exists). The same commenter also asked whether the Title IX Coordinator may serve as a complainant or whether such a case must proceed outside the Title IX process.

Several commenters asked whether the Department would provide training recommendations dedicated to addressing a responsible employee's obligation to respond to sexual assault reports. Some of these commenters also asked whether the Department would provide guidance on disseminating this information to students.

One commenter recommended adding to the final regulations a statement that meeting with confidential resources on campus, such as organizational ombudspersons who comply with industry standards of practice and codes of ethics, does not constitute notice conveying actual knowledge to a recipient. The commenter reasoned that organizational ombudspersons are not "responsible employees" under the Department's current guidance, and that to ensure that organizational ombudspersons continue to be a valuable resource providing informal, confidential services to complainants and respondents, the final regulations should note that organizational ombudspersons are a confidential resource exempt from the categories of persons to whom notice charges a recipient with actual knowledge.

Discussion: The Department declines to follow a commenter's suggestion to delete the sentence of § 106.30[534] concerning reporting obligations and training, or to insert the word "apparent" before the word "authority" in the first

[534] The last sentence of § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to which a commenter referred, is now the second to last sentence in that section in the final regulations and provides: "The mere ability or obligation to report sexual harassment or to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment, or having been trained to do so, does not qualify an individual as one who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient." (Emphasis added. The italicized portions in this quotation have been added in the final regulations.).

sentence of § 106.30.[535] The framework for holding a recipient responsible for the recipient's response to peer-on-peer or employee-on-student sexual harassment adopted in the final regulations is the Gebser/Davis condition of actual knowledge, adapted as the Department has deemed reasonable for the administrative

---

[535] The first sentence of § 106.30, defining "actual knowledge" in the final regulations, provides: "Actual knowledge means notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to a recipient's Title IX Coordinator or any official of the recipient who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient, or to any employee of an elementary and secondary school." (Emphasis added. The italicized portions in this quotation have been added in the final regulations.).

enforcement context with differences in elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions. The sentence of the actual knowledge definition regarding reporting obligations represents a proposition applied by Federal courts under the Supreme Court's Gebser/Davis framework.[536] If an employee's mere ability or obligation to report "up" the employee's supervisory chain were sufficient to qualify that employee as an "official with authority to institute corrective measures," then the rationale underlying actual knowledge would be undercut because virtually every employee might have the "ability" to report "up."[537] For the reasons described above and in the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the

[536] Davis, 526 U.S. at 646-48, Gebser, 524 U.S. at 289-91.

---

[537] See id.

"Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that administrative enforcement of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate is best served by distinguishing between elementary and secondary schools (where notice to any employee triggers a recipient's response obligations) and postsecondary institutions (where notice to the Title IX Coordinator or officials with authority triggers a recipient's response obligations).

As explained above, the final sentence in § 106.30 does not have as much applicability for recipients that are elementary and secondary schools under the final regulations due to the Department's expanded definition of actual knowledge in that context to include notice to any school employee.

As explained in the "Employees' Obligations" subsection of this "Actual Knowledge" section, we have revised the final sentence in § 106.30 to expressly state that the mere ability or obligation to report sexual harassment or to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment, or having been trained to do so, does not qualify an individual as one who has authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient. Accordingly, elementary and secondary schools may choose to train non-employees such as volunteers about how to report sexual harassment or require volunteers to do so even though these final requirements do not impose such a requirement, and such schools would not face expanded Title IX liability by doing so. Similarly, a postsecondary institution may choose to require all employees to report sexual harassment or to inform a student about how to report sexual harassment, or train all employees to do so, without fearing adverse repercussions from the Department. Recipients might not be willing to engage in training or impose reporting requirements that these final regulations do not impose, if doing so would cause the recipient to incur additional liability.

Pursuant to § 106.8, the burden is on the recipient to designate a Title IX Coordinator, and the definition of "actual knowledge" in revised § 106.30 clearly provides that notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to a recipient's Title IX Coordinator constitutes actual knowledge, which triggers a recipient's obligation to respond to sexual harassment. The recipient must notify all its students, employees, and others of the name or title, office address, e-mail address, and telephone number of the employee or employees designated as the Title IX Coordinator (and post that contact information on its website), under § 106.8. Accordingly, all students and employees have clear, accessible channels through which to make a report of sexual harassment such that a recipient is obligated to respond to that report. Additionally, notice to other officials who have the authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient will convey actual knowledge to a recipient, and a recipient may choose to identify such officials by providing a list of such officials to students and employees. The level of authority that a person may have to take corrective measures is generally known to students and employees. For example, employees generally know that a supervisor but not a co-worker has authority to institute corrective measures. Similarly, a student in a postsecondary institution likely understands that deans generally have the authority to institute corrective measures. Students in elementary and secondary schools may report sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment to any employee. Students in postsecondary institutions can always report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator.

For reasons discussed in the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, the final regulations retain the discretion of a Title IX Coordinator to sign a formal complaint initiating a grievance process against a respondent, but the final regulations clarify that in such situations, the Title IX Coordinator is not a complainant or otherwise a party to the grievance process.[538] The Department believes this preserves the ability of a recipient to utilize the § 106.45 grievance process when safety or similar concerns lead a recipient to conclude that a non-deliberately indifferent response to actual knowledge of Title IX sexual harassment may require the recipient to investigate and potentially sanction a respondent in situations where the complainant does not wish to file a formal complaint.

[538] Section 106.30 (defining "formal complaint" by stating that a formal complaint may be filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator, and adding language providing that where a Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, the Title IX Coordinator is not a complainant or otherwise a party in the grievance process, and must remain free from conflicts of interest and bias).

Although the Department recognizes that recipients may desire guidance on training (particularly now that the final regulations in § 106.45(b)(10)(i)(D) require the recipients to publish all training materials on recipient websites), the Department declines to recommend certain training practices or techniques aside from the requirements of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii),[539] leaving flexibility to recipients to determine how to meet training requirements in a manner that best fits the recipient's unique educational community. Regarding the dissemination of information to students, the Department notes that §

[539] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) (requiring training of Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and any person who facilitates informal resolution processes).

106.8 requires recipients to notify students and employees of the recipient's policy of non-discrimination under Title IX, the Title IX Coordinator's contact information, and information about how to report and file complaints of sex discrimination and how to report and file formal complaints of sexual harassment.

The Department appreciates the opportunity to emphasize that whether a person affiliated with a recipient, such as an organizational ombudsperson, is or is not an "official with authority to institute corrective measures" requires a fact-specific inquiry, and understands the commenter's assertion that an organizational ombudsperson adhering to industry standards and codes of ethics should be deemed categorically a "confidential resource" and not an official with authority. The Department encourages postsecondary institution recipients to examine campus resources such as organizational ombudspersons and determine whether, given how such ombudspersons work within a particular recipient's system, such ombudspersons are or are not officials with authority to take corrective measures so that students and employees know with greater certainty the persons to whom parties can discuss matters confidentially without such discussion triggering a recipient's obligation to respond to sexual harassment. We note that with respect to elementary and secondary schools, notice to any employee, including an ombudsperson, triggers the recipient's response obligations.

Changes: None.

Complainant

Comments: A few commenters supported the proposed rules' definition of "complainant" in § 106.30 as an appropriate, sensible definition. Commenters asserted that using neutral terms like "complainant" and "respondent" avoids injecting bias generated by referring to anyone who makes an allegation as a "victim." One commenter asserted that labeling an accuser a "victim" before there has been any investigation or adjudication turns the principle of innocent until proven guilty on its head.[540]

In contrast, many commenters urged the Department to use a term such as "reporting party" instead of "complainant." Commenters argued that "complainant" suggests that a person is making a complaint (as opposed to reporting), or that the term "complainant" suggests a negative connotation that a person is "complaining" about discrimination which could create a barrier to reporting, and that "reporting party" is current, best practice terminology that better avoids bias and negative implications that a person is "complaining." One commenter asserted that the Clery Act uses the term "victim" throughout its statute and regulations and asked why the § 106.30 definition of "complainant" uses the word victim without referring to that person as a victim throughout the proposed regulations.

---

[540] Commenter cited: Doe v. Brandeis Univ., 177 F. Supp. 3d 561, 573 (D. Mass. 2016) ("Whether someone is a 'victim' is a conclusion to be reached at the end of a fair process, not an assumption to be made at the beginning.").

Some commenters asserted that the definition of complainant unfairly excluded third parties (non-victims, such as bystanders or witnesses to sexual harassment) from reporting sexual harassment because the definition of complainant referred to an individual "who has reported being the victim" and because the definition also stated that the person to whom the individual has reported must be the Title IX Coordinator or other person to whom notice constitutes actual knowledge. Commenters argued that in order to further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, a school must be required to respond to sexual harassment

regardless of who has reported it and regardless of the school employee to whom a person reports. Commenters argued that if the survivor is the only person who can be a complainant, even fewer sexual assaults will be reported, and that third-party intervention can save lives and educational opportunities.[541] Commenters argued that some students are non-verbal due to young age, disability, language barriers, or severe trauma, and the definition of complainant would exclude these students because these students are incapable of being the individual "who has reported being the victim." Commenters argued that Federal courts have held schools liable for deliberate indifference to third-party reports of sexual harassment and the proposed rules should not set a lower threshold by excusing schools from responding to reports that come from anyone other than the victim.[542] Commenters asserted that the definition of complainant should be modified to include parents of minor students, or parents of students with disabilities. A few commenters supported the definition of complainant believing that the definition

[541] Commenters cited: Jackson v. Birmingham Bd. of Educ., 544 U.S. 167, 180 (2005) ("teachers and coaches . . . are often in the best position to vindicate the rights of their students because they are better able to identify discrimination and bring it to the attention of administrators. Indeed, sometimes adult employees are 'the only effective adversar[ies]' of discrimination in schools.") (internal citation omitted; brackets in original).

---

[542] Id.

appropriately excluded third-party reporting; these commenters argued that a school should only respond to alleged sexual harassment where the victim has personally reported the conduct.

Some commenters suggested changing the definition of complainant to a person who has reported being "the victim of sex-based discriminatory conduct" instead of a person who has

reporting being the victim of "sexual harassment," arguing that the general public understands sexual harassment to be broader than how "sexual harassment" is defined in § 106.30 and these regulations should only apply to sex discrimination under Title IX.

One commenter asserted that the phrase "or on whose behalf the Title IX Coordinator has filed a formal complaint" in the definition of

"complainant" created confusion because proposed § 106.44(b)(2) required a Title IX Coordinator to file a formal complaint upon receiving multiple reports against a respondent, but that proposed provision did not indicate on which complainant's behalf such a formal complaint would be filed.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for the proposed definition of "complainant" in § 106.30

as a sensible, neutral term to describe a person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment. We appreciate commenters who asserted that "reporting party" would be a preferable term due to concerns that "complainant" suggests that the person has filed a complaint (as opposed to having reported conduct), or that there is a negative connotation to the word "complainant" suggesting that the person is complaining about discrimination. The Department does not disagree that a term such as "reporting party" could be an appropriate equivalent term for "complainant" in terms of neutrality; however, the Department believes that both terms reflect the neutral, impartial intent of describing a person who is an alleged victim but a fair process has not yet factually determined whether the person was victimized. Further, the final regulations ensure that a person must be treated as a "complainant" any time such a person has been alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment; "reporting party" would imply that the alleged victim themselves had to be the person who reported. The Department retains the word "complainant" in these final regulations, instead of using "reporting party," also to avoid potential confusion with respect to the phrase

"reporting party," and the use throughout the final regulations of the word "party" to refer to either a complainant or respondent, and also to reinforce that a recipient must treat a person as a complainant (i.e., an alleged victim) no matter who reported to the school that the alleged victim may have suffered conduct that may constitute sexual harassment. We believe that the context of the final regulations makes it clear that a "complainant" (as the definition states in the final regulations) is a person who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment irrespective of whether a formal complaint has been filed. The Department notes that "complainant" and "complaint" are commonly used terms in various proceedings designed to resolve disputed allegations without pejoratively implying that a person is unjustifiably

"complaining" about something but instead neutrally describing that the person has brought allegations or charges of some kind.[543] While the definition of "complainant" uses the word "victim" to refer to the complainant as a person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment, we do not use the word victim throughout the final regulations because the word "victim"

---

[543] For example, OCR refers to a "complainant" as a person who files a "complaint" with OCR, alleging a civil rights law violation. E.g., U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, How the Office for Civil Rights Handles Complaints (Nov. 2018), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/complaints-how.html.

suggests a factual determination that a person has been victimized by the conduct alleged, and that conclusion cannot be made unless a fair process has reached that determination. We acknowledge that the Clery Act uses the word "victim" throughout that statute and regulations, but we believe the term "complainant" more neutrally, accurately describes a person who is allegedly a victim without suggesting that the facts of the situation have been prejudged.

The proposed definition of complainant did not prevent third-party reporting, and while the final regulations revise the § 106.30 definition of complainant, the final regulations also do not prevent third-party reporting. Under both the proposed and final regulations, any person (i.e., the victim of alleged sexual harassment, a bystander, a witness, a friend, or any other person) may report sexual harassment and trigger a recipient's obligation to respond to the sexual harassment.[544] Nothing in the final regulations requires an alleged victim to be the person who reports; any person may report that another person has been sexually harassed.

---

[544] Section 106.44(a) (stating that a recipient with actual knowledge of sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity against a person in the United States must respond promptly and in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, including by offering supportive measures to the complainant, informing the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, considering the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explaining to the complainant how to file a formal complaint).

We agree that third party reporting of sexual harassment promotes Title IX's non-discrimination mandate. In response to commenters' concerns, we have revised § 106.8(a) to expressly state that "any person" may report sexual harassment "whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim" by using the Title IX Coordinator's listed contact information. Further, such a report may be made at any time including during non-business hours, using the telephone number or e-mail address (or by mail to the office address) listed for the Title IX Coordinator. We have also revised § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to expressly state that "notice" triggering a recipient's response obligations includes reporting to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a). The intent of these final regulations is to ensure that any person (whether that person is the alleged victim, or anyone else) has clear, accessible channels for reporting sexual harassment to trigger a recipient's response obligations (which include promptly offering supportive measures to the person alleged to be the victim). While any person (including third parties) can report, the person to whom notice (i.e., a report) of sexual harassment is given must be the Title IX

Coordinator or official with authority to take corrective action, or any employee in the elementary and secondary school context, in order to trigger the recipient's response obligations – but any person can report.[545] The benefits of third-party reporting do not, however,

[545] For reasons explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section, and the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section, of this preamble, the final regulations expand the definition of actual knowledge in the elementary and secondary school context, but the final regulations retain the requirement that a recipient must have actual knowledge of sexual harassment in order to be required to respond. We have revised the definition of actual knowledge to state expressly that notice conveying actual knowledge includes, but is not limited to, reporting sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a). We have revised § 106.8(a) to expressly state that any person may report sexual harassment (whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment, or is a third party) by using the contact information for the Title IX Coordinator (which must include an office address, telephone number, and e-mail address), and stating that a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the Title IX Coordinator's listed telephone number or e-mail address (or by mailing to the listed office address). Thus, any person (including a non-victim third party) may report sexual harassment, but in order to trigger a recipient's response obligations the report must give notice to a Title IX Coordinator or to an official with authority to institute corrective measures, or to any employee in the elementary and secondary school context.

require the third party themselves to become the "complainant" because, for example, supportive measures must be offered to the alleged victim, not to the third party who reported the complainant's alleged victimization. Similarly, while we agree that where a parent or guardian has a legal right to act on behalf of an individual, the parent or guardian must be allowed to report the individual's victimization (and to make other decisions on behalf of the individual, such as considering which supportive measures would be desirable and whether to exercise the option of filing a formal complaint), in such a situation the parent or guardian does not, themselves, become the complainant; rather, the parent or guardian acts on behalf of the complainant (i.e., the individual allegedly victimized by sexual harassment). We have added § 106.6(g) to expressly acknowledge the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of a complainant (or any other individual with respect to exercising Title IX rights).

We agree with commenters that allowing third-party reporting is necessary to further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate for a variety of reasons, including, as commenters

asserted, that some complainants (i.e., alleged victims) cannot verbalize their own experience or report it (whether verbally or in writing) yet when parents, bystanders, witnesses, teachers, friends, or other third parties report sexual harassment to a person to whom notice charges the recipient with actual knowledge, then the recipient must be obligated to respond. In response to commenters' confusion as to whether the proposed definition of complainant in § 106.30 allowed or prohibited third-party reporting, and in agreement with commenters' assertions that third-party reporting is a critical part of furthering Title IX's purposes, we have revised the definition of complainant in the final regulations to state (emphasis added): "An individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment" and removed the sentence in the NPRM that referenced to whom the report of sexual harassment was made. This revision clarifies that the person alleged to be the victim does not need to be the same person who reported the sexual harassment. This revision also ensures that any person reported to be the victim of sexual harassment (whether the report was made by the alleged victim themselves or by a third party) will be treated by the recipient as a "complainant" entitled to, for example, the right to be informed of the availability of supportive measures and of the process for filing a formal complaint, under § 106.44(a).

The final regulations, like the proposed rules, draw a distinction between a recipient's general response to reported incidents of sexual harassment (including offering supportive measures to the complainant), on the one hand, and the circumstances that obligate a recipient to initiate a grievance process, on the other hand. With respect to a grievance process, the final regulations retain the proposed rules' approach that a recipient is obligated to begin a grievance process against a respondent (that is, to investigate and adjudicate allegations) only where a complainant has filed a formal complaint or a Title IX

Coordinator has signed a formal complaint. Other than the Title IX Coordinator (who is in a specially trained position to evaluate whether a grievance process is necessary under particular circumstances even without a complainant desiring to file the formal complaint or participate in the grievance process), a person who does not meet the definition of "complainant" under § 106.30 cannot file a formal complaint requiring the recipient to initiate a grievance process. Other than a Title IX Coordinator, third parties cannot file formal complaints.[546] The Department believes the final regulations appropriately delineate between the recipient's obligation to respond promptly and meaningfully to actual knowledge of sexual harassment in its education program or activity (including [546] As discussed above, a parent or guardian with the legal right to act on a complainant's behalf may file a formal complaint on the complainant's behalf. § 106.6(g).

where the actual knowledge comes from a third party), with the reality that permitting third parties to file formal complaints would result in situations where a complainant's autonomy is not respected (i.e., where the complainant does not wish to file a formal complaint or participate in a grievance process),[547]

---

[547] As one aspect of respect for complainant autonomy, every complainant retains the right to refuse to participate in a grievance process, and the Department has added § 106.71 to the final regulations, prohibiting retaliation generally, and specifically protecting the right of any individual who chooses not to participate in a grievance process. When a grievance process is initiated in situations where the complainant did not wish to file a formal complaint, this results in the complainant being treated as a party throughout the grievance process (e.g., the recipient must send both parties written notice of allegations, a copy of the evidence for inspection and review, written notice of interviews requested, a copy of the investigative report, written notice of any hearing, and a copy of the written determination regarding responsibility). This means that the complainant will receive notifications about the grievance process even where the complainant does not wish to participate in the process. The Department agrees with commenters who urged the Department to recognize the importance of a survivor's autonomy and

and other situations where recipients are required to undertake investigations that may be futile in terms of lack of evidence because the complainant does not wish to participate.

In response to commenters' concerns that the definitions of "complainant" and "formal complaint"

---

control over what occurs in the aftermath of a sexual harassment incident. The Department thus desires to restrict situations where a grievance process is initiated contrary to the wishes of the complainant to situations where the Title IX Coordinator (and not a third party) has determined that signing a formal complaint even without a complainant's participation is necessary because not initiating a grievance process against the respondent would be clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. Although a complainant who did not wish to file a formal complaint and does not want to participate in a grievance process may not want to receive notifications throughout the grievance process, the recipient must treat the complainant as a party by sending required notices, and must not retaliate against the complainant for choosing not to participate. Nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from communicating to a non-participating complainant that the recipient is required under these final regulations to send the complainant notices throughout the grievance process and that such a requirement is intended to preserve the complainant's right to choose to participate, not to pressure the complainant into participating. Such a practice adopted by a recipient would need to be applied equally to respondents who choose not to participate in a grievance process; see introductory sentence of § 106.45(b).

do not allow for situations where a parent or guardian appropriately must be the person who makes the decision to file a formal complaint on behalf of a minor child or student with a disability, the final regulations add § 106.6(g) acknowledging that nothing about the final regulations may be read in derogation of the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of any individual in the exercise of rights under

Title IX, including filing a formal complaint on a complainant's behalf. In such a situation, the parent or guardian does not become the "complainant" yet § 106.6(g) clarifies that any parent or guardian may act on behalf of the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment). If a parent or guardian has a legal right to act on a person's behalf, the parent or guardian may always be the one who files a formal complaint for a complainant. This parental or guardianship authority to act on behalf of a party applies throughout all aspects of a Title IX matter, from reporting sexual harassment to considering appropriate and beneficial supportive measures, and from choosing to file a formal complaint to participating in the grievance process.[548]

---

[548] See discussion in the "Section 106.6(g) Exercise of Rights by Parents/Guardians" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble.

We decline commenters' suggestions to define a complainant as a person reported to be the victim of "sex-discriminatory conduct" instead of "conduct that could constitute sexual harassment," because these final regulations specifically address a recipient's response to allegations of sexual harassment and clearly define the term "sexual harassment" in § 106.30.

In the response to commenters' concerns that the phrase "or on whose behalf the Title IX Coordinator has filed a formal complaint" in the proposed definition of § 106.30 created confusion in situations where the Title IX Coordinator would have been required to file a formal complaint upon receiving multiple reports against a respondent,[549]

[549] For reasons discussed in the "Proposed § 106.44(b)(2) [removed in the final regulations]" subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" section of this preamble, we have removed the provision in the NPRM that would have required the Title IX Coordinator to file a formal complaint upon receiving multiple reports against a respondent. However, the final regulations still grant a Title IX Coordinator the discretion to decide to sign a formal complaint, and the Title IX Coordinator's decision will be evaluated based on what was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances.

we have removed the phrase "or on whose behalf the Title IX Coordinator has filed a formal complaint" from the definition of complainant in § 106.30. Numerous commenters urged the Department to respect the autonomy of survivors, and we have concluded that when a Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, that action is not taken "on behalf of" a complainant (who may not wish to file a formal complaint or participate in a grievance process).[550] Removal of this phrase is more consistent with the Department's goal of ensuring that every complainant receives a prompt, meaningful response when a recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment in a manner that better respects a complainant's autonomy by not implying that a Title IX Coordinator has the ability to act "on

[550] We have also revised the definition of "formal complaint" in § 106.30 to clarify that signing a formal complaint does not mean the Title IX Coordinator has become a complainant or otherwise a party to the grievance process.

behalf of" a complainant when the Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint. Removal of this phrase also helps clarify that when a Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, that action does not place the Title IX Coordinator in a position adverse to the respondent; the Title IX Coordinator is initiating an investigation based on allegations of which the Title IX Coordinator has been made aware, but that does not prevent the Title IX Coordinator from being free from bias or conflict of interest with respect to any party.

Changes: The final regulations revise the definition of "complainant' in § 106.30 by revising this provision to state that complainant means "an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment" thereby removing the phrase "who has reported to be the victim," the phrase "or on whose behalf the Title IX Coordinator has filed a formal complaint," and the sentence describing to whom a complainant had to make a report.

The final regulations add § 106.6(g) addressing "Exercise of rights by parents or guardians" and providing that nothing in the final regulations may be read in derogation of any legal right of a parent or guardian to act on behalf of a

"complainant," "respondent," "party," or other individual.

Consent

Comments: Some commenters supported the proposed rules because the proposed rules did not mandate an "affirmative consent" standard for recipients to use in adjudicating sexual assault allegations. One commenter expressed general support for the proposed rules and asserted that courts

across the country are ruling in favor of accused males for reasons including schools' misuse of affirmative consent policies. One commenter agreed with the fact that the proposed rules do not mandate affirmative consent, arguing that affirmative consent often ends up shifting the burden to the accused to prove innocence. One commenter supported the proposed rules, asserting that under current policies the responsibility to obtain and prove consent is on men, but the commenter believed that under the proposed rules women will speak up and learn to be more assertive.

One commenter expressed concern about not defining consent in the proposed rules, asserting that with respect to rape, consent definitions may vary across States and in some States there is no consent element. One

commenter discussed the importance of consent because every person at every moment has the right to do whatever they choose with their own body, and argued that sexual consent should be as obvious as other kinds of consent in our society; for example, asserted the commenter, a restaurant does not beg a patron incessantly to finish a burger until the patron feels reluctantly forced to eat. This commenter referenced internet videos sharing personal examples of the results of violations of consent.[551]

One commenter recommended that language be added requiring the complainant to prove absence of consent as opposed to requiring the respondent to prove presence of consent. The commenter asserted that this would make it clear that the burden of proof stays with the complainant (or the school). One commenter urged the Department to adopt the concept of implied consent as a safe harbor against sexual assault claims in dating situations. One commenter advocated a definition of sexual assault that recognizes that consent can be negated by explicit and implicit threats, so that "coercive sexual violence" that "often includes a layer of nominal and deeply guilt inducing ambiguity" (due to a victim verbally expressing consent but only because of fear based on the perpetrator's threats) would also be covered under Title IX.

---

[551] Commenter cited, e.g.: Jennifer Gunsaullus, Sex and The Price of Masculinity: My personal story of consent violation, THE GOOD MEN PROJECT (Aug. 8, 2016), https://goodmenproject.com/featured-content/sex-and-the-price-of-masculinity-gmp/.

One commenter stated that some institutions use affirmative consent while others use "no means no" and asked the Department to clarify whether recipients are expected to use a specific definition for consent because sexual assault depends on whether a victim consented.

Several commenters stated that universities should strive to provide clear rules with respect to what is considered consensual sexual conduct.

Some commenters urged the Department to provide additional clarification for how schools should handle consent in situations where both students were drunk. One commenter

suggested that the Department should clarify that Title IX's non-discrimination language means that when male and female students are both drunk and have sex, the school may not automatically assign blame to the male and victimhood to the female because, the commenter asserted, this approach is based on outdated gender stereotypes and violates Title IX. Another commenter opined that while

drunken hookups are never a good idea, colleges must recognize that students do get intoxicated and have sex, as do many non-students, yet a young couple getting married and drinking champagne are not raping each other if they consummate the marriage later that night while their blood alcohol is beyond the legal limit to drive; the commenter asserted that colleges can make their policies stricter than the law, but must make that language clear. A few commenters asserted that schools have often failed to recognize the idea that when school policies states that any sign of intoxication means consent is invalid, that policy should go both ways (i.e., applied equally to men and women).

One commenter, a female university student, expressed concern that under current consent rules, being drunk while consenting is often not truly considered

consent, and that in situations where both parties could be perceived as assaulting each other – because both had been drinking so that neither party gave valid consent – the woman's position is usually the only one taken into account, leading the commenter to believe that if a woman has an encounter she regrets, but did not communicate lack of consent at the time, she can report to the school and it will be investigated without getting the partner's perspective in a fair manner. Another commenter supported treating women and men equally when it comes to drug or alcohol-infused sex.

Some commenters provided articles discussing the meaning of consent, including whether the level of intoxication is relevant to the definition of consent. One commenter stated that one of the areas recipients appear to be struggling with is that lack of consent may be based on temporary or permanent mental or physical incapacity of the victim, and the commenter recommended that the Department inform recipients that inebriation is not equivalent to incapacitation.

Several commenters were concerned that the proposed rules did not impose an affirmative consent standard. One commenter argued that failing to include affirmative consent buys into rape myths including that silence is consent. One commenter criticized the proposed rules for ignoring the best practice standard of affirmative consent, or the "yes means yes" model for consent to any sexual activity, and the commenter argued that not imposing an affirmative consent standard will do a disservice to people who do not give a clear "No," who freeze, or revoke consent, and that this will override the important work many institutions have done to get students to understand the value and intricacies of affirmative consent. One commenter stated that affirmative consent policies are not best practices, are often confusing and difficult to enforce in a consistent, non-arbitrary manner, and end up shifting the burden onto a respondent to prove innocence; this commenter cited a law review article

noting that affirmative consent policies often require the accused to show clear, unambiguous (and in some policies, "enthusiastic") consent.[552] One commenter argued that affirmative consent policies violate Title IX because such policies discriminate against men.[553] Another commenter asserted that based on personal experience

---

[552] Commenter cited: Jacob E. Gerson & Jeannie Suk Gersen, The Sex Bureaucracy, 104 CAL. L. REV. 881 (2016).
[553] Commenter cited: Samantha Harris, University of Miami Law Prof: Affirmative Consent Effectively Shifts Burden of Proof to Accused, Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) (Sept. 11, 2015), https://www.thefire.org/university-of-miami-law-prof-affirmative-consent-effectively-shifts-burden-of-proof-to-accused/.

representing respondents in campus Title IX proceedings, many schools require the respondent to prove that there was consent, either by using an affirmative consent standard or by placing undue emphasis on a common provision in institutional policies and practices, that consent to one sexual act does not necessarily imply consent to another sexual act but that in either scenario, institutions often shift the burden of proof to respondents to prove their innocence, which the commenter asserted is inconsistent with centuries-old understandings of due process.

One commenter was concerned that the proposed rules do not prevent a school from using an affirmative consent standard and recommended that the Department clarify that an affirmative consent standard violates Title IX because it unfairly shifts the burden of proof to respondents and has a disparate impact on men because, the commenter argued, women are content to let men initiate sexual conduct even when sexual advances turn out to be welcome. One commenter expressed concern about affirmative consent and asserted that college administrators have no right to regulate the private lives of adults when neither person is compelled by threats or force. One

commenter opined that while affirmative consent makes sense when gauging overt sexual initiatives between strangers, it is a ridiculous standard to apply to people in sexual relationships, or even to the typical college party situation, because under affirmative consent, waking up a lover with a kiss is sexual assault, as is every thrust if consent is not somehow re-communicated in between.

One commenter expressed concern that some sexual assault laws say that "not saying no" can be considered assault. One commenter argued that "overthinking" about sexual consent causes men not to approach women as much, and the commenter stated this is not good for society because it causes educated folks not to approach each other.

Another commenter stated that while the idea of affirmative consent sounds good, in practice it seems as if colleges look at this as the responsibility of one person, usually the male; the commenter suggested rebranding affirmative consent as affirmative communication, and recommended that colleges make clear that both parties have a duty to seek consent, but also that both parties are responsible for communicating discomfort or communicating if they do not want to proceed with sexual activity.

One commenter recommended that the Department address training standards for decision-makers, including faculty, to address what commenters believed is shoddy research from dubious sources used in training materials that contributes to unjust decisions. The commenter referenced training around topics such as the amount of inebriation that violates consent and situations in which both parties are too drunk to consent.

One commenter expressed concern that the proposed rules would permit the introduction of evidence regarding the complainant's sexual history, when offered to prove consent. The commenter asserted that by permitting this evidence to prove consent, but not providing a definition of consent, the proposed rules will lead to an increase in ambiguity and the possibility of abuse by the accused in using evidence about a complainant's sexual history.

Discussion: The third prong of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment includes "sexual assault" as used in the Clery Act, 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v), which, in turn, refers to the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting Program (FBI UCR) and includes forcible and nonforcible sex offenses such as rape, fondling, and statutory rape which contain elements of "without the consent of the victim." The Department acknowledges that the Clery Act, FBI UCR, and these final regulations do not contain a definition of consent. The Department believes that the definition of what constitutes consent for purposes of sexual assault within a recipient's educational community is a matter best left to the discretion of recipients, many of whom are under State law requirements to apply particular definitions of consent for purposes of campus sexual misconduct policies. The Department's focus in these final regulations is on recipients' response to sexual harassment when such conduct constitutes sex discrimination prohibited by Title IX. The Department believes that the definition of sexual assault used by the Federal government for crime reporting purposes appropriately captures conduct that constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX, regardless of whether the "without the consent" element in certain sex offenses is as narrow as some State criminal laws define consent, or broader as some State laws have required for use in campus sexual assault situations.

Recipients may consider relevant State laws in adopting a definition of consent. For these reasons, the Department declines to impose a federalized definition of consent for Title IX purposes, notwithstanding commenters who would like the Department to adopt an affirmative consent standard, a "no means no" standard, an implied consent doctrine, or definitions of terms commonly used to indicate the absence or negation of consent (such as coercion, duress, or incapacity). In response to commenters asking for clarification, the Department has revised § 106.30 to include an entry for "Consent" confirming that the Department will not require recipients to adopt a particular definition of consent with respect to sexual assault.

The Department agrees that recipients must clearly define consent

and must apply that definition consistently, including as between men and women and as between the complainant and respondent in a particular Title IX grievance process because to do otherwise would indicate bias for or against complainants or respondents generally, or for or against an individual complainant or respondent, in contravention of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), and could potentially be

"treatment of a complainant" or "treatment of a respondent" that § 106.45(a) recognizes may constitute sex discrimination in violation of Title IX. We have revised the introductory sentence of § 106.45(b)(3) to state that any rules or practices that a recipient adopts and applies to its grievance process must equally apply to both parties.

The Department appreciates the variety of commenters' views regarding

whether intoxication negates consent, whether verbal pressure amounts to coercion negating consent, and whether affirmative consent standards do, or do not, represent a best practice. However, for the reasons discussed above, the Department declines to impose on recipients a particular definition of consent, or terms used to describe the absence or negation of consent (such as coercion or incapacity).

The Department disagrees that affirmative consent standards inherently place the burden of proof on a respondent, but agrees with commenters who observed that to the extent recipients "misuse affirmative consent" (or any definition of consent) by applying an instruction that the respondent must prove the existence of consent, such a practice would not be permitted under a § 106.45 grievance process.[554] Regardless of how a recipient's policy defines consent for sexual assault purposes, the burden of proof and the burden of collecting evidence sufficient to reach a determination regarding responsibility, rest on the recipient under § 106.45(b)(5)(i). The final regulations do not permit the recipient to shift that burden to a respondent to prove consent, and do not permit the recipient to shift that burden to a complainant to prove absence of consent.

[554] Section 106.45(b)(5)(i) (stating burden of proof must rest on the recipient and not on the parties).

The final regulations require Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and any person who facilitates an informal resolution, to be trained on how to conduct an investigation and grievance process; this would include how to apply definitions used by the recipient with respect to consent (or the absence or negation of consent) consistently, impartially, and in accordance with the other provisions of § 106.45.

Because a recipient's definition of consent must be consistently applied, the Department does not believe that the reference to consent in the "rape shield" protections contained in § 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii) will cause the proceedings contemplated in those provisions to be ambiguous or subject to abuse by a respondent. While the Department declines to impose a definition of consent on recipients, a recipient selecting its own definition of consent must apply such definition consistently both in terms of not varying a definition from one grievance process to the next and as between a complainant and respondent in the same grievance process. The scope of the questions or evidence permitted and excluded under the rape shield language in § 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii) will depend in part on the recipient's definition of consent, but, whatever that definition is, the recipient must apply it consistently and equally to both parties, thereby avoiding the ambiguity feared by the commenter. In further response to the commenter's concern, we have revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) specifically to require investigators and decision-makers to be trained on issues of relevance, including how to apply the rape shield provisions (which deem questions and evidence about a complainant's prior sexual history to be irrelevant with two limited exceptions). Because a recipient cannot place the burden of proving consent on a respondent (or on a complainant to prove absence of consent), while questions and evidence subject to the rape shield language in § 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii) may come from a respondent, it is not the respondent's burden to prove or establish consent; questions and evidence may also be posed or presented by the recipient during the recipient's investigation and adjudication.

Changes: The Department revises § 106.30 to state that the Assistant Secretary will not require recipients to adopt a particular definition of consent with respect to sexual assault.

Comments: Some commenters emphasized the need to teach about sexual consent. One commenter supported providing greater consent education to students, including treating both parties equally with respect to situations where both parties were under the influence of alcohol or drugs. One commenter stated that there needs to be more teaching about consent because there is a lot of confusion, and another commenter urged the Department to make it mandatory for every freshman in college to attend a course on bullying, sexual harassment, and consent.

One commenter expressed general opposition for the proposed rules, asserting that children should live in a world that takes consent and assault

seriously. One commenter, who works as a counselor at a university, expressed opposition to the proposed rules, stating that they would undo the important work of educators to instill in young people an understanding of how consent works. One commenter who works as a prevention educator teaching students about consent argued that the proposed rules paint women as liars, which makes useless the work of teaching students that consent should be celebrated, and ends up failing the young people of our country. One commenter expressed general opposition to the proposed rules and stated "consent first." One commenter expressed general opposition to the proposed rules and asserted a belief in sex education and teaching consent. One commenter stated that the commenter's school requires mandatory courses on sexuality and rape prevention that stress the importance of consent, open communication, and bystander intervention. The commenter stated that even with this training the commenter has still been subjected to sexual harassment in college and asserted that the absence of Title IX protections will ruin the commenter's ability to learn.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters who expressed a belief in the importance of educating students about consent, healthy relationships and communication, drug and alcohol issues, and sexual assault prevention (as well as bullying and harassment, generally). The Department shares commenters' beliefs that measures preventing sexual harassment from occurring in the first place are beneficial and desirable. Although the Department does not control school curricula and does not require recipients to provide instruction regarding sexual consent, nothing in these final regulations impedes a recipient's discretion to provide educational information to students.

Changes: None.

Elementary and Secondary Schools

Comments: At least one commenter requested clarity as to the definition of "schools."

Discussion: In the proposed regulations, the Department referred to recipients that are elementary and secondary schools,[555] but did not provide a definition for "elementary and secondary schools." To provide clarity,

---

[555] 83 FR 61498.

the Department adds a definition of "elementary and secondary schools" that aligns with the definition of "educational institutions" in 34 CFR 106.2(k), which is a definition that applies to Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. Section 106.2(k) defines an educational institution in relevant part as a local educational agency as defined in the Elementary and Secondary Education

Act of 1965, which has been amended by the Every Student Succeeds Act (hereinafter "ESEA"), a preschool, or a private elementary or secondary school. Consistent with the first part of the definition in 34 CFR 106.2(k), the Department includes a definition of "elementary and secondary schools" to mean a local educational agency (LEA), as defined in the ESEA, a preschool, or a private elementary or secondary school.

The remainder of the entities described as educational institutions in 34 CFR 106.2(k) constitute postsecondary institutions as explained in the section, below, on the definition of "postsecondary institutions." The definitions of "elementary and secondary school" and "postsecondary institution" apply only to §§ 106.44 and 106.45 of these final regulations.

Changes: The Department includes a definition of elementary and secondary schools as used in §§ 106.44 and 106.45 to mean a LEA as defined in the ESEA, a preschool, or a private elementary or secondary school.

Formal Complaint

Support for Formal Complaint Definition

Comments: Some commenters supported the definition of a "formal complaint" in § 106.30, and asserted that requiring a formal complaint to initiate an investigation is reasonable and appropriate, and will bring clarity to the process of investigating allegations of sexual harassment. Some commenters supported the formal complaint definition as a benefit to complainants by giving complainants control over what happens to their report, and a benefit to institutions by ensuring the institution has written documentation indicating that the complainant wanted an investigation to begin.

Commenters supported requiring a formal complaint before an investigation begins because, commenters asserted, complainants may wish for informal discussions to remain confidential and the formal complaint requirement will empower complainants to decide when to report and when to start an investigation. Commenters asserted that the process for filing a formal complaint described in § 106.30 did not seem much different or more burdensome from other formal processes that students are accustomed to following in college, such as registering for classes or applying to study abroad. Commenters asserted that under the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, survivor advocates often worked with survivors who found themselves involved in Title IX processes that the survivor had not wished to initiate, due to disclosing sexual assault to an individual the survivor did not know was required to report to the Title IX Coordinator. Commenters asserted that many survivors choose not to report for a variety of reasons,[556] and involuntary participation in a conduct process goes

---

[556] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. Of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Criminal Victimization: 2016 Revised 5 (2018).

against standard knowledge of trauma and sexual violence recovery that emphasizes the importance of allowing survivors to retain control of their recovery to the extent possible. Commenters argued that when victims are unexpectedly or unwillingly involved in Title IX processes, this contradicts best practices because healing from the trauma of sexual violence is promoted when victims are able to maintain control of their recovery. Commenters argued that implementing a formal complaint process will empower survivors to report to higher education institutions if and when they are ready, and to file a formal complaint to institutions by the victim's own informed choice, on their own terms, by their own volition.

Other commenters supported the formal complaint definition as a benefit to respondents, so that schools begin investigations only after a complainant has signed a document describing the allegations; commenters argued this is important for due process given the serious nature of the accusations at issue and the potential punishment. Commenters asserted that requiring a formal complaint will encourage only complainants with serious accusations to come forward.

One commenter expressed support for the formal complaint requirement, but urged the Department to require that formal complaints be filed "without undue delay" because, the commenter asserted, passage of time can prejudice a fair investigation due to memories fading and evidence being lost.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the support from commenters for the definition of "formal complaint" in §

106.30 and the requirement that recipients must investigate the allegations in a formal complaint.[557] We agree that defining a formal complaint and requiring a recipient to initiate a grievance process in response to a formal complaint brings clarity to the circumstances under which a recipient is required to initiate an investigation into allegations of sexual harassment.

---

[557] E.g., § 106.44(b)(1); § 106.45(b)(3)(i).

The Department believes that complainants, respondents, and recipients benefit from the clarity and transparency of specifying the conditions that trigger the initiation of a grievance process. As explained below, in response to commenters' concerns and questions we have revised the definition of "formal complaint"[558] and made revisions throughout the final regulations,[559] to clarify how a recipient must respond to any report or notice of sexual harassment, versus when a recipient specifically must respond by initiating a grievance process.

[558] As discussed throughout this section of the preamble, we have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to broaden the definition of what constitutes a written, signed document, simplify, clarify, and make more accessible the process for filing, and provide that signing a formal complaint does not mean a Title IX Coordinator becomes a party to a grievance process.

The Department believes that the final regulations benefit complainants by obligating recipients to offer

---

[559] For example, we have revised § 106.44(a) to clarify specific steps a recipient must take as part of a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response, including offering supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explaining to a complainant how to file a formal complaint, so that if a complainant wants to exercise the option of filing, the complainant (including a parent or legal guardian, as appropriate) knows how to do so. We have added § 106.6(g) to acknowledge the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of a complainant, respondent, or other party, including with respect to the filing of a formal complaint.

complainants supportive measures regardless of whether the complainant files a formal complaint, and informing complainants of how to file a formal complaint; obligating recipients to initiate a grievance process if the complainant decides to file a formal complaint; and giving strong due process protections to a complainant who decides to participate in a grievance process.

The Department believes that the final regulations benefit respondents by ensuring that recipients do not impose disciplinary sanctions against a respondent without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45, [560] and that the prescribed grievance process gives strong due process protections to both parties.

---

[560] Revised §§ 106.44(a) and 106.45(b)(1)(i) state that a recipient must treat respondents equitably by not imposing disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not "supportive measures" as defined in § 106.30, against a respondent without first following the § 106.45 grievance process. Exceptions to this prohibition are that any respondent may be removed from an education program or activity on an emergency basis, whether or not a grievance process is pending, under § 106.44(c), and a non-student employee respondent may be placed on administrative leave during the pendency of an investigation, under § 106.44(d), for reasons described in the "Additional Rules Governing Recipients' Responses to Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

The Department believes that the final regulations benefit recipients by specifying a recipient's obligation to respond promptly and without deliberate indifference to every complainant (i.e., a person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment), while clarifying the recipient's obligation to conduct an investigation and adjudication of allegations of sexual harassment when the complainant files, or the Title IX Coordinator signs, a formal complaint.

We do not agree that a formal complaint requirement encourages only complainants with "serious accusations" to come forward. While certain acts of sexual harassment may have even greater traumatic, harmful impact than other such acts, the Department believes that all conduct that constitutes sexual harassment under § 106.30 is serious misconduct that warrants a serious response. All the conduct defined as "sexual harassment" in § 106.30 is misconduct that is likely to deny a person equal access to education, and recipients must respond promptly and supportively to every known allegation of sexual harassment whether or not a complainant wants to also file a formal complaint.[561] Filing a formal complaint is not required for a complainant to receive supportive measures.

[561] Section 106.44(a) (requiring a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response any time a recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity, against a person in the United States).

We decline to impose a requirement that formal complaints be filed "without undue delay." The Department believes that imposing a statute of limitations or similar time limit on the filing of a formal complaint would be unfair to complainants because, as many commenters noted, for a variety of reasons complainants sometimes wait various periods of time before desiring to pursue a grievance process in the aftermath of sexual harassment, and it would be difficult to discern what "undue" delay means in the context of a particular complainant's experience. Title IX obligates recipients to operate education programs or activities free from sex discrimination, and we do not believe Title IX's non-discrimination mandate would be furthered by imposing a time limit on a complainant's decision to file a formal complaint. The Department does not believe that a statute of limitations or "without undue delay" requirement is needed to safeguard the rights of respondents, because the extensive due process protections afforded under the § 106.45 grievance process appropriately safeguard the fundamental fairness and reliability of Title IX proceedings by requiring procedures that take into account any effect of passage of time on party or witness memories or the availability or quality of other evidence.[562] We have, however, revised the § 106.30 definition of formal complaint to state that at the time of filing a formal complaint, the complainant must be participating in or attempting to participate in the recipient's education program or activity. This ensures that a recipient is not required to expend resources investigating allegations in circumstances where the complainant has no affiliation with the recipient, yet refrains from imposing a time limit on a complainant's decision to file a formal complaint.

---

[562] For example, the final regulations provide both parties equal opportunity to gather, present, and review relevant evidence, such that parties can note whether passage of time has resulted in unavailability of evidence and raise arguments about how the decision-maker should weigh the evidence that remains. Further, the final regulations provide in § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) that a recipient has discretion to dismiss a formal complaint where specific circumstances prevent the recipient from meeting the recipient's burden to gather sufficient evidence. Passage of time could in certain fact-specific circumstances result in the recipient's inability to gather evidence sufficient to reach a determination regarding responsibility.

Changes: As discussed in more detail throughout this section of the preamble, we have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to: broaden the definition of what constitutes a written, signed document, simplify the process for filing, state that at the time of filing the formal complaint the complainant must be participating or attempting to participate in the recipient's education program or activity, and clarify that signing a formal complaint does not mean a Title IX Coordinator becomes a party to a grievance process.

We have revised § 106.44(a) to clarify specific steps a recipient must take as part of a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response to actual knowledge of any sexual harassment incident (regardless of whether any formal complaint has been filed), including offering supportive measures to the complainant irrespective of whether a formal complaint is filed, and explaining to the complainant how to file a formal complaint. We have added § 106.6(g) to acknowledge the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of a complainant, respondent, or other party, including with respect to filing a formal complaint.

No Formal Complaint Required to Report Sexual Harassment

Comments: Several commenters believed that the proposed rules required complainants to file formal complaints in order to report sexual harassment, or that a formal complaint meeting the definition in § 106.30 was required before a school would have to take any action to help a student who reported sexual harassment, including offering supportive measures. Commenters argued that effective reporting systems must be flexible enough to give survivors as much control as possible over how they report sexual harassment and assault, including the option to remain anonymous or to report the crime without pursuing charges. Commenters asserted that when a victim reports shortly after a sexual harassment incident, the victim is often overwhelmed with emotions, and requiring them to provide formal, written, signed documentation would be an enormous emotional task that would cause some victims to question whether reporting is worth it at all.

Commenters argued that requiring a formal complaint before a school must respond to notice of sexual harassment would violate the Supreme Court's standards in Davis, which requires an institutional response without a written or signed complaint. Commenters argued that a "formal complaint standard" imposes a more rigorous notice standard than the Davis standard, contradicts the Department's stated intent to use the Davis standard, and leaves recipients vulnerable to private litigation.

Some commenters believed that the proposed rules would require survivors to file formal complaints such that every report would trigger an investigation; commenters argued that this would violate survivors' autonomy and reduce the likelihood that survivors would come forward to get help. Commenters argued that formal complaints initiating a grievance process should not be required in order to report sexual assault, because not every survivor wants an investigation after experiencing sexual assault. Commenters argued that requiring survivors to report sexual harassment by filing formal complaints, involving writing down details of a traumatic experience in a signed document, would deter survivors from ever coming forward. Commenters believed that the proposed rules would require a formal complaint in order for the recipient to respond to a report and argued that this would chill reporting of sexual assault, which would affect the number of Clery crime reports and artificially make campuses appear safer than they are. Commenters argued that instead, schools should have to respond to any information about sexual harassment, assess the information, and take appropriate steps to stop the harassment.

Commenters believed that the proposed rules created two different "prompt and equitable" grievance systems – one process for a school's response to a "formal complaint" of sexual harassment, and a different process for a school's response to an "informal complaint" of sexual harassment.

Discussion: Contrary to some commenters' understanding, neither the proposed rules, nor the final regulations, requires a formal complaint as a condition for any person to report sexual harassment to trigger a recipient's obligation to respond promptly and meaningfully. Like the proposed rules, the final regulations obligate a recipient to respond[563] in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, whenever a recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity, against a person in the United States.[564] The requirement that a recipient must investigate allegations in a formal complaint does not change the fact that a recipient must respond, every time the recipient has actual knowledge, in a way that is not deliberately indifferent – even in the absence of a formal complaint.[565] The requirement that a recipient must investigate allegations in a formal complaint provides clarity to complainants, respondents, and recipients as to when a recipient's response must also consist of investigating allegations. Under the final regulations, a Title IX Coordinator has discretion to sign a formal complaint that initiates a grievance process; thus, if a non-deliberately indifferent response to actual knowledge of sexual harassment necessitates investigating allegations, the recipient (via the Title IX Coordinator) has the authority to take that action. As discussed in the "Adoption and

[563] The final regulations revise § 106.44(a) to require a recipient to respond "promptly."

---

[564] Revised § 106.44(a) specifies that a recipient's response must include offering supportive measures to a complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment), and requires the Title IX Coordinator promptly to contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, consider the complainant's wishes, and explain to the complainant the option of filing a formal complaint.

---

[565] Section 106.44(b)(1) (stating that with or without a formal complaint, a recipient must comply with all the response obligations described in § 106.44(a)).

Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment," the conditions triggering a recipient's response obligations (i.e., actionable sexual harassment, and actual knowledge) are built on the foundation of the same concepts used in the Gebser/Davis framework. Similarly, the deliberate indifference standard is built on the same concept used in the Gebser/Davis framework, but these final regulations tailor that standard to require the recipient to take actions in response to every instance of actual knowledge of sexual harassment, including specific obligations that are not required under the Gebser/Davis framework. These final regulations clarify that a recipient's response obligations must always include offering supportive measures to the complainant, and must also include initiating a grievance process against the respondent when the complainant files, or the Title IX Coordinator signs, a formal complaint. The formal complaint definition, and the requirement that recipients must investigate formal complaints, therefore comport with the Gebser/Davis framework used in private Title IX lawsuits and do not increase recipients' vulnerability to legal challenges.

While we adopt the Gebser/Davis framework, we adapt that framework by requiring recipients to take certain steps as part of every non-deliberately indifferent response to actual knowledge of sexual harassment, irrespective of whether a formal complaint is filed.[566] We have revised § 106.44(a) to specify that a recipient's prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response must include offering supportive measures to each complainant (i.e., a person who is alleged to be the victim), and specifically having the Title IX Coordinator contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, consider the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.

---

[566] Section 106.44(b)(1) clarifies that whether or not a formal complaint requiring investigation has also been filed, the recipient must provide the prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response described in § 106.44(a), which includes offering supportive measures to the complainant.

We agree with commenters who asserted that requiring a complainant to sign formal documentation describing allegations of sexual harassment in order to report and receive supportive measures would place an unreasonable burden on survivors, and the final regulations obligate recipients to respond promptly and meaningfully – including by offering supportive measures – whenever the recipient has actual knowledge that a person has been allegedly victimized by sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity, regardless of whether the complainant or Title IX Coordinator initiates a grievance process by filing or signing a formal complaint. The manner by which a recipient receives actual knowledge need not be a written statement, much less a formal complaint; actual knowledge may be conveyed on a recipient via "notice" from any person – not only from the complainant (i.e., person alleged to be the victim) – regardless of whether the person who reports does so anonymously.[567] The final regulations thus effectuate the purpose of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate by requiring recipients to respond to information about sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity, from whatever source that information comes,[568] while reserving the specific obligation to respond by investigating and adjudicating allegations to situations where the complainant (i.e., the person

---

[567] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge"). Where a person reports anonymously (regardless of whether the person is the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim) or a third party), the nature of the recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response may depend on whether the report contains information identifying the alleged victim; for example, § 106.44(a) requires a recipient to respond to actual knowledge by offering the complainant supportive measures, but a recipient may not be capable of taking that action if the person who reported refuses to identify the complainant. A recipient's response is judged on whether the response is clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, which includes what information the recipient received about the identity of the complainant.

[568] To ensure that a recipient's educational community has clear, accessible reporting options, and understands that any person may report sexual harassment to trigger the recipient's obligation to offer supportive measures and explain the option of filing a formal complaint to a person allegedly victimized by sexual harassment, we have revised § 106.8 to: state that any person may report, using contact information that a recipient must list for the Title IX Coordinator; state that reports may be made in person, by mail, phone, or e-mail, or by any other method that results in a Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's written or verbal report; and require recipients to post the Title IX Coordinator's contact information on the recipient's website. We have also revised § 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge") to provide that notice of sexual harassment allegations to any elementary or secondary school employee triggers the school's response obligations.

alleged to be the victim) or Title IX Coordinator has decided to file a formal complaint. The formal complaint definition thus ensures that complainants retain more autonomy and control over when the complainant's reported victimization leads to a formal grievance process, and recipients are not forced to expend resources investigating situations over the wishes of a complainant, unless the Title IX

Coordinator has determined that such an investigation is necessary. We agree with commenters that not every complainant wants a recipient to respond to reported sexual harassment by initiating a grievance process; some complainants want an investigation, others do not, and some do not initially desire an investigation but later decide they do want to file formal "charges." The final regulations ensure that every complainant is informed of the option and process for filing a formal complaint, yet never require a complainant to file a formal complaint in order to receive supportive measures. We believe that by respecting complainants' autonomy the final regulations will not chill reporting of sexual harassment, but instead will provide complainants with clearer

options and greater control over the process.[569]

Contrary to some commenters' understanding, the final regulations do not create two separate systems of "prompt and equitable grievance procedures" for how a recipient responds to sexual harassment based [569] Denying a survivor control over how a disclosure of sexual assault is handled by the survivor's school can also constitute a harmful form of institutional betrayal, and the final regulations desire to mitigate such harm by giving the complainant a clear, accessible option to file, or not file, a formal complaint (while receiving supportive measures either way) and by protecting the complainant's right to participate, or choose not to participate, in a grievance process whether the grievance process is initiated by the complainant or by the Title IX Coordinator. See, e.g., Merle H. Weiner, Legal Counsel for Survivors of Campus Sexual Violence, 29 YALE J. OF L. & FEMINISM 123, 140-141 (2017) (identifying one type of institutional betrayal as the harm that occurs when "the survivor thinks she [or he] is speaking to a confidential resource, but then finds out the advocate cannot keep their conversations private"); Carly Parnitzke Smith & Jennifer J. Freyd, Dangerous Safe Havens: Institutional Betrayal Exacerbates Sexual Trauma, 26 J. OF TRAUMATIC STRESS 1, 120 (2013) (describing "institutional betrayal" as when an important institution, or a segment of it, acts in a way that betrays its member's trust). Where a Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint knowing the complainant did not wish to do so, the recipient must respect the complainant's wishes regarding whether to participate or not in the grievance process. § 106.71 (prohibiting retaliation).

---

on whether the recipient receives a formal complaint or informal complaint. Rather, the final regulations obligate the recipient to respond to every known allegation of sexual harassment (regardless of how, or from whom, the recipient receives notice) promptly and non-deliberately indifferently, and obligate the recipient to respond by initiating a grievance process when the recipient receives a formal complaint of sexual harassment. If commenters referred to an "informal complaint of sexual harassment" to describe a report or disclosure of sexual harassment that is not a "formal complaint" as defined in § 106.30, the final regulations require recipients to respond promptly and non-deliberately indifferently (including by offering the complainant supportive measures) to such a report or disclosure, but the recipient need not initiate investigation or adjudication procedures unless the recipient receives a "formal complaint of sexual harassment." Furthermore, § 106.44(a) precludes recipients from responding to reports, disclosures, or notice of alleged sexual harassment by imposing disciplinary sanctions on a respondent without first following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. The "prompt and equitable" grievance procedures to which commenters referred still must be adopted, published, and used by a recipient to address complaints of non-sexual harassment sex discrimination, under § 106.8(c), while recipients must respond to formal complaints of sexual harassment by following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

Changes: None.

Burden on Complainants to File a Formal Complaint

Comments: Commenters argued that requiring a formal complaint in order to begin an investigation places an unfair burden on victims who want an investigation but should not have to comply with specific paperwork and procedures, or because requiring a victim to put their name in writing and flesh out the details of a harrowing experience in a written narrative may be retraumatizing. Commenters argued that many institutions follow a principle that a victim should only have to make a single statement about an incident, and therefore a victim's written or oral disclosure to a police officer, or to any responsible campus employee, should be sufficient to trigger an investigation. Commenters asserted that some State protocols for sexual assault investigations (for example, in New Hampshire) caution against collecting written statements from victims.

Commenters argued that making victims sign a document with a statement of facts is inappropriate due to the potential effect of such a document on any future litigation. Commenters argued that it is unfair to make victims sign a written statement to start an investigation because the written statement could be wrongfully used to discredit a victim during the investigation if the victim's later statements show any inconsistencies with the formal complaint, and victims in the immediate aftermath of sexual violence may have trouble focusing or recalling details, due to trauma.[570] One commenter proposed a detailed alternate process for starting investigations, under which the complainant would orally describe an incident to a compliance team, the compliance team would inform the complainant of the option for signing a written statement initiating an investigation, and the complainant would have 72 hours to decide whether to sign such a written statement.

---

[570] Commenters cited: Russell W. Strand, The Forensic Experiential Trauma Interview (FETI), https://responsesystemspanel.whs.mil/Public/docs/meetings/20130627/01_Victim_Overview/Rumburg_FETI_Interview.pdf.

Commenters argued that any report of a sexual assault, to any school or college employee, whether oral or written, formal or informal, should be sufficient to start an investigation because otherwise a significant number of sexual assaults will go un-investigated, and because schools could ignore openly hostile environments just because no one filed a formal document. Commenters argued there are many ways schools can investigate a report without involving the victim, so victims should never be forced to file complaints but schools should still investigate all credible reports. Commenters argued that the burden of starting an investigation should be on the school, not on the survivor to jump through the hoop of filing a formal complaint. Commenters argued that in order to maintain a safe, non-discriminatory learning environment, institutions must not be confined by the formalities of signatures on a complaint before they are able to move forward with an investigation. Commenters argued that if schools can ignore known sexual harassment just because no one has filed a formal complaint, institutions of higher education will have even less incentive to try to stop sex abuse scandals by their employees. Commenters argued that it is expecting a student to undergo too much risk to file a written complaint against a faculty member who is sexually abusing the student, so more students will fall prey to serial abuse by faculty.

Commenters argued that the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" would preclude third parties (such as teachers, witnesses, or school employees other than the Title IX Coordinator) from filing complaints to initiate grievance procedures, representing a departure from past Department guidance and reducing schools' efforts to redress offending behavior. Other commenters supported restricting third parties from filing formal complaints because confiding in a resident advisor or professor should not trigger an obligation for that employee to file a formal complaint on the victim's behalf. Some commenters argued that no investigation should be initiated without the consent of the victim because the victim should be the one with the power to initiate a formal process, and victims should be given the opportunity to be educated on the law, process, and rights of victims.

Commenters argued that the burden of filing a formal complaint would fall especially hard on K-12 students because the proposed safe harbor in § 106.44(b)(2) only ensured that students in higher education would receive supportive measures in the absence of a formal complaint, so younger students, who may not even be capable of writing down a description of sexual harassment, would get no help at all.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' concerns that requiring complainants who wish to initiate an investigation to sign a written document may seem like an unnecessary

“paperwork” procedure, or that a victim may find it retraumatizing to write out details of a sexual harassment experience. However, absent a written document signed by the complainant alleging sexual harassment against a respondent and requesting an investigation,[571] the Department believes that complainants and recipients may

[571] As discussed herein, the final regulations broaden the meaning of a “document filed by a complainant” to include a document or electronic submission (such as an e-mail, or use of an online portal provided for this purpose by the recipient) that contains the complainant’s physical or digital signature, or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint.

face confusion about whether an investigation is initiated because the complainant desires it, because the Title IX Coordinator believes it necessary, both, or neither. We reiterate that when a recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment, the recipient must offer supportive measures to the complainant whether or not a formal complaint is ever filed. However, a complainant's decision to initiate a grievance process should be clear, to avoid situations where a recipient involves a complainant in a grievance process when that was neither what the complainant wanted nor what the Title IX Coordinator believed was necessary. A grievance process is a weighty, serious process with consequences that affect the complainant, the respondent, and the recipient. Clarity as to the nature and scope of the investigation necessitates that a formal complaint initiating the grievance process contain allegations of sexual harassment against the respondent, so the recipient may then prepare the written notice of allegations to be sent to both parties (under § 106.45(b)(2)), which advises both parties of essential details of allegations under investigation, and of important rights available to both parties under the grievance process.

The Department acknowledges the principle, followed by some institutions and State protocols, that avoids asking victims for written statements or avoids asking victims to recount allegations more than once. We reiterate that a complainant may report (once, and verbally) in order to require a recipient to respond promptly by offering supportive measures. Reports of sexual harassment (whether made by the alleged victim themselves or by any third party) do not need to be in writing, much less in the form of a signed document.[572] The final regulations desire to ensure that every complainant receives this prompt, supportive response regardless of whether a grievance process is ever initiated. The formal complaint requirement ensures that a grievance process is the result of an intentional decision on the part of either the complainant or the Title IX Coordinator. A complainant (or a third party) may report sexual harassment to a school for a different purpose than desiring an investigation. Thus, if an investigation is an action the complainant desires, the complainant must file a written document requesting an investigation. No written document is required to put a school on notice (i.e., convey actual knowledge) of sexual harassment triggering the recipient's response obligations under § 106.44(a).

[572] Section 106.8(a).

The § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" requires a document "alleging sexual harassment against a respondent," but contains no requirement as to a detailed statement of facts. Whether or not statements made during a Title IX grievance process might be used in subsequent litigation, clarity, predictability, and fairness in the Title IX process require both parties, and the recipient, to understand that allegations of sexual harassment have been made against the respondent before initiating a grievance process. We reiterate that no written statement is required in order to receive supportive measures,[573] and that there is no time

[573] We have revised § 106.8(a) to specify that any person may report sexual harassment using the Title IX Coordinator's contact information (including during non-business hours by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address) "or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report."

limit on a complainant's decision to file a formal complaint, so the decision to sign and file a formal complaint need not occur in the immediate aftermath of sexual violence when a survivor may have the greatest difficulty focusing, recalling details, or making decisions. A complainant may disclose or report immediately (if the complainant desires) to receive supportive measures and receive information about the option for filing a formal complaint, and that disclosure or report may be verbal, in writing, or by any other means of giving notice.[574] But such a disclosure or report may be entirely separate from a complainant's later decision to pursue a grievance process by filing a formal complaint. We disagree with a commenter's suggestion to require a complainant to decide within 72 hours

---

[574] See § 106.30 defining "actual knowledge" to mean "notice" to the Title IX Coordinator, to any official with authority to take corrective action, or to any elementary or secondary school employee, where "notice" includes (but is not limited to) a report of sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a).

whether to file a formal complaint; even with the detailed steps in such a process suggested by the commenter, for reasons explained above it does not further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate to impose a time limit on a complainant's decision to file a formal complaint.

The Department disagrees that every report of a sexual assault to any recipient employee should be sufficient to start an investigation. We believe that every allegation of sexual harassment of which the recipient becomes aware[575] must be responded to, promptly and meaningfully, including by offering supportive measures to the person alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment.[576] However, we believe that complainants

---

[575] As discussed above, a recipient is charged with actual knowledge of sexual harassment when notice is given to a Title IX Coordinator, an official with authority to take corrective action, or any elementary or secondary school employee. § 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge").

[576] Section 106.44(a) § 106.30 (defining "complainant").

should retain as much control as possible[577] over whether a school's response includes involving the complainant in a grievance process. When a complainant believes that investigation and adjudication of allegations is in the complainant's best interest, the complainant should be able to require the recipient to initiate a

[577] A complainant's control over a school's response may be circumscribed by a recipient's obligations under laws other than these final regulations; for example, State laws mandating schools to report suspected child sexual abuse to law enforcement or child welfare authorities. However, these final regulations protect a complainant against being intimidated, threatened, coerced, or discriminated against for participating, or refusing to participate, in a Title IX grievance process. § 106.71.

grievance process.[578] When a Title IX Coordinator believes that with or without the complainant's desire to participate in a grievance process, a non-deliberately indifferent response to the allegations requires an investigation, the Title IX Coordinator should have the discretion to initiate a grievance process. Not investigating every report of sexual harassment will not allow schools to ignore complainants or ignore "openly hostile environments," because § 106.44(a) requires the recipient to respond promptly in a manner that is not unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, to every instance of alleged sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity of which the recipient becomes aware, including offering supportive measures to the complainant with or without a grievance process. Part of whether a decision not to investigate is "clearly unreasonable" may include a Title IX Coordinator's communication with the complainant to understand the complainant's desires with respect to a grievance process against the respondent. When a Title IX Coordinator determines that an investigation is necessary even where the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim)

[578] Section 106.6(g) (acknowledging that where a parent or guardian has the legal right to act on a complainant's behalf, the parent or guardian may file a formal complaint on behalf of the complainant).

does not want such an investigation, the grievance process can proceed without the complainant's participation; however, the complainant will still be treated as a party in such a grievance process. The grievance process will therefore impact the complainant even if the complainant refuses to participate. The Department desires to respect a complainant's autonomy as much as possible and thus, if a grievance process is initiated against the wishes of the complainant, that decision should be reached thoughtfully and intentionally by the Title IX Coordinator, not as an automatic result that occurs any time a recipient has notice that a complainant was allegedly victimized by sexual harassment. We do not believe this places "the burden" of starting an investigation on the complainant. Rather, the final regulations enable a complainant, or the Title IX Coordinator, to initiate an investigation. The final regulations appropriately leave recipients flexibility to investigate allegations even where the complainant does not wish to file a formal complaint where initiating a grievance process is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances (including the circumstances under which a complainant does not desire an investigation to take place), so that recipients may, for example, pursue a grievance process against a potential serial sexual perpetrator. The recipient is required to document its reasons why its response to sexual harassment was not deliberately indifferent, under § 106.45(b)(10), thereby emphasizing the need for a decision to initiate a grievance process over the wishes of a complainant to be intentionally, carefully made taking into account the circumstances of each situation.

The § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" does preclude third parties from filing formal complaints.[579] For the reasons discussed above, we believe that respecting a complainant's autonomy to the greatest degree possible means that an investigation against a complainant's wishes or without a complainant's willingness to participate, should happen only when the Title IX Coordinator has determined that the investigation is necessary under the particular circumstances.[580] We reiterate that any person may disclose or report a sexual harassment incident, whether that person is the complainant

---

[579] Cf. § 106.6(g).

---

[580] See Michelle L. Meloy & Susan L. Miller, The Victimization of Women: Law, Policies, and Politics 147-48 (Oxford University Press 2010) (anti-violence policies must embrace "notions of victim empowerment for self-protection by allowing victims to drop criminal charges"). The Title IX equivalent of this premise is that the Department should not require schools to investigate in the absence of a complainant's consent. The formal complaint definition in § 106.30 ensures that schools must investigate when the complainant desires that action (see also § 106.44(b)(1)), and ensures that a school only overrides a complainant's desire for the school not to investigate if the Title IX Coordinator has determined on behalf of the recipient that an investigation is needed, and in such circumstances the final regulations protect the complainant's right to refuse to participate in the grievance process. § 106.71.

(i.e., the individual who is alleged to be the victim) or any third party, such as a teacher, witness, parent, or school employee.[581] When the disclosure or report gives notice of sexual harassment allegations to a Title IX Coordinator,[582] an official with authority to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf, or any elementary and secondary school employee,[583] the recipient must respond promptly in a non-deliberately indifferent manner. Thus, even if neither the complainant nor the Title IX Coordinator decides to file a formal complaint, the recipient must still respond to the reported sexual harassment incident by offering supportive measures to the complainant

---

[581] Section 106.8(a) (expressly stating that any person may report sexual harassment using the listed contact information for the Title IX Coordinator, whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment).

[582] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge" and expressly stating that "notice" includes a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a)).

[583] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge").

and informing the complainant of the option of filing a formal complaint.[584]

We disagree that no formal complaint should ever be filed without the consent of the victim, because some circumstances may require a recipient (via the Title IX Coordinator) to initiate an investigation and adjudication of sexual harassment allegations in order to protect the recipient's educational community or otherwise avoid being deliberately indifferent to known sexual harassment. However, we have added § 106.71 to prohibit retaliation against any person exercising rights under Title IX, including the right not to participate in a Title IX grievance process, so that a complainant is protected from being coerced, intimated, threatened, or otherwise discriminated against based on the complainant's refusal to participate in a grievance process. We agree that complainants should be given the opportunity to be informed of the law, process, and victims' rights, and the final regulations require recipients to notify students, employees, and parents of elementary and secondary school students (among others) of the recipient's Title IX non-discrimination policy, contact information for the Title IX Coordinator, how to report sexual harassment, and the recipient's grievance process for formal complaints of sexual harassment.[585] The final regulations further require recipients to offer supportive measures to a complainant, discuss with each individual complainant the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain

---

[584] Sections 106.44(a), 106.44(b)(1).

[585] Section 106.8.

to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.[586]

In response to commenters' concerns that elementary and secondary school students might not receive supportive measures in the absence of a formal complaint because the supportive measures safe harbor in proposed § 106.44(b)(2) applied only to postsecondary institutions, we have

---

[586] Section 106.44(a).

removed the safe harbor in proposed § 106.44(b)(2), and revised § 106.44(a) to require all recipients to offer supportive measures to every complainant, obviating the need for a "safe harbor" that results from providing supportive measures. As to all recipients, the final regulations enable the complainant (i.e., the individual who is alleged to be the victim) or the Title IX Coordinator, to file a formal complainant that initiates a grievance process. As discussed below in this section of the preamble, the final regulations also acknowledge the legal right of a parent to act on behalf of their child, addressing the concern that children are expected to write or sign a formal complaint.

Changes: We have removed the supportive measures safe harbor in proposed § 106.44(b)(2) and have revised § 106.44(a) to require all recipients to offer supportive measures to each complainant irrespective of whether a formal complaint is ever filed. We have added § 106.6(g) acknowledging the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of a complainant, respondent, or other individual, including but not limited to the filing of a formal complaint. We have added § 106.71 to prohibit retaliation against any person exercising rights under Title IX, including the right not to participate in a Title IX grievance process.

Anonymous Reporting and Anonymous Filing of Formal Complaints

Comments: Commenters requested clarification as to whether the proposed rules discouraged or prohibited anonymous reporting; some commenters asserted that anonymous reports may disclose valid information about openly hostile environments on campus that should be investigated even though the reporting party is anonymous. Commenters argued that disallowing confidential and anonymous reporting would deter reporting because research shows that concern about confidentiality is one reason why victims of sexual crimes do not report.[587]

---

[587] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice, Sexual Assault on Campus: What Colleges and Universities Are Doing About It (2005).

Commenters argued that requiring a signed statement may act as a deterrent to reporting, citing to a report finding that several police departments have permitted victims to report anonymously in an effort to allow a victim more options and control over whether to participate in an investigation, and that police find it advantageous because they can learn more about crimes committed in the area, and anonymous

reporting may allow them to track a predator who commits multiple offenses.[588] Commenters argued that prohibiting victims from filing formal complaints anonymously would conflict with State law (such as in Illinois, and Texas) where institutions are required to provide an option for anonymous reporting and State law (such as Texas)

[588] Commenters cited: Human Rights Watch, Improving Police Response to Sexual Assault (2013).

that requires electronic reporting to be an option.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that the final regulations do not prohibit recipients from implementing anonymous (sometimes called "blind") reporting options. Anonymous or blind reporting options that have been implemented by law enforcement agencies, for example, may enable the police to gain more information about crimes and may assist in identifying patterns of repeat offenders, while providing victims with "another option for healing – an option that falls in between not reporting the crime, and being involved in a full criminal investigation."[589] As commenters noted, anonymous reports sometimes disclose valid information about sexual harassment on campus.

---

[589] National Resource Center on Domestic Violence, VAWnet, Introduction to Sabrina Garcia & Margaret Henderson, Blind Reporting of Sexual Violence, 68 FBI LAW ENFORCEMENT BULLETIN 6 (June 1999), https://vawnet.org/material/blind-reporting-sexual-violence.

Under the final regulations, when a recipient has actual knowledge of alleged sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity the final regulations require a recipient to respond in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. A recipient has actual knowledge whenever notice of sexual harassment is given to the Title IX Coordinator, an official with authority to institute corrective measures, or any elementary and secondary school employee.[590] The final regulations do not restrict the form that "notice" might take, so notice conveyed by an anonymous report may convey actual knowledge to the recipient and trigger a recipient's response obligations. A recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response must include offering supportive measures to a complainant (i.e., person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment).[591] A recipient's ability to offer supportive measures to a complainant, or to consider whether to initiate a grievance process against a respondent, will be affected by whether the report disclosed the identity of the complainant or respondent. In order for a recipient to provide supportive

[590] Section 106.30 (defining "actual knowledge").

[591] Section 106.44(a).

measures to a complainant, it is not possible for the complainant to remain anonymous because at least one school official (e.g., the Title IX Coordinator) will need to know the complainant's identity in order to offer and implement any supportive measures. Section 106.30 defining "supportive measures" directs the recipient to maintain as confidential any supportive measures provided to either a complainant or a respondent, to the extent that maintaining confidentiality does not impair the recipient's ability to provide the supportive measures. A complainant (or third party) who desires to report sexual harassment without disclosing the complainant's identity to anyone may do so, but the recipient will be unable to provide supportive measures in response to that report without knowing the complainant's identity. If a complainant desires supportive measures, the recipient can, and should, keep the complainant's identity confidential (including from the respondent), unless disclosing the complainant's identity is necessary to provide supportive measures for the complainant (e.g., where a no-contact order is appropriate and the respondent would need to know the identity of the complainant in order to comply with the no-contact order, or campus security is informed about the no-contact order in order to help enforce its terms).

Separate and apart from whether a grievance process is initiated, the final regulations require recipients to respond non-deliberately indifferently even where sexual harassment allegations were conveyed to the recipient via an anonymous report (made by the complainant themselves, or by a third party), including offering the complainant supportive measures if the anonymous report identified a complainant (i.e., person alleged to be a victim of sexual harassment). Nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from implementing reporting systems that facilitate or encourage an anonymous or blind reporting option. Thus, recipients who are obligated under State laws to offer anonymous reporting options may not face any conflict with obligations under the final regulations. The final regulations do not preclude recipients from offering electronic reporting systems, so recipients obligated to do so under State laws may not face any conflict with obligations under the final regulations. To ensure that complainants (and third parties, because any person may report sexual harassment) have clear, accessible reporting options, we have revised § 106.8(a) to expressly state that any person may report sexual harassment using the Title IX Coordinator's listed contact information, and such a report may be made at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the listed telephone number or e-mail address (or by mail to the listed office address) for the Title IX Coordinator. Recipients may additionally offer other types of electronic reporting systems.

A formal complaint initiates a grievance process (i.e., an investigation and adjudication of allegations of sexual harassment). A complainant (i.e., a person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) cannot file a formal complaint anonymously because § 106.30 defines a formal complaint to mean a document or electronic submission (such as an e-mail or using an online portal provided for this purpose by the recipient) that contains the complainant's physical or digital signature or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint. The final regulations require a recipient to send written notice of the allegations to both parties upon receiving a formal complaint. The written notice of allegations under § 106.45(b)(2)

must include certain details about the allegations, including the identity of the parties, if known.

Where a complainant desires to initiate a grievance process, the complainant cannot remain anonymous or prevent the complainant's identity from being disclosed to the respondent (via the written notice of allegations). Fundamental fairness and due process principles require that a respondent knows the details of the allegations made against the respondent, to the extent the details are known, to provide adequate opportunity for the respondent to respond. The Department does not believe this results in unfairness to a complainant. Bringing claims, charges, or complaints in civil or criminal proceedings generally requires disclosure of a person's identity for purposes of the proceeding. Even where

court rules permit a plaintiff or victim to remain anonymous or pseudonymous, the anonymity relates to identification of the plaintiff or victim in court records that may be disclosed to the public, not to keeping the identity of the plaintiff or victim unknown to the defendant.[592] The final regulations ensure that a complainant may obtain supportive

---

[592] See, e.g., Jayne S. Ressler, #WorstPlaintiffEver: Popular Public Shaming and Pseudonymous Plaintiffs, 84 TENN. L. REV. 779, 828 (2017) (arguing that Federal and State courts should adopt broader rules allowing plaintiffs to file civil lawsuits anonymously or pseudonymously, and emphasizing that this anonymity relates to whether a plaintiff is named in court records that may be viewed by the public, but does not affect the defendant's knowledge of the identity of the plaintiff) ("The plaintiff's anonymity would extend only to court filings and any other documents that would be released to the public. In other words, the defendant would have the same information about the plaintiff had the plaintiff filed the case under her own name.").

measures while keeping the complainant's identity confidential from the respondent (to the extent possible while implementing the supportive measure), but in order for a grievance process to accurately resolve allegations that a respondent has perpetrated sexual harassment against a complainant, the complainant's identity must be disclosed to the respondent, if the complainant's identity is known.

However, the identities of complainants (and respondents, and witnesses) should be kept confidential from anyone not involved in the grievance process, except as permitted by FERPA, required by law, or as necessary to conduct the grievance process, and the final regulations add § 106.71 to impose that expectation on recipients.[593]

---

[593] Section 106.71(a) (prohibiting retaliation and providing in relevant part that the recipient must keep confidential the identity of any individual who has made a report or complaint of sex discrimination, including any individual who has made a report or filed a formal complaint of sexual harassment, any complainant, any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of sex discrimination, any respondent, and any witness except as may be permitted by FERPA, or required by law, or to the extent necessary to carry out the purposes of 34 CFR part 106, including the conduct of any investigation, hearing, or judicial proceeding arising thereunder).

When a formal complaint is signed by a Title IX Coordinator rather than filed by a complainant, the written notice of allegations in § 106.45(b)(2) requires the recipient to send both parties details about the allegations, including the identity of the parties if known, and thus, if the complainant's identity is known it must be disclosed in the written notice of allegations. However, if the complainant's identity is unknown (for example, where a third party has reported that a complainant was victimized by sexual harassment but does not reveal the complainant's identity, or a complainant has reported anonymously), then the grievance process may proceed if the Title IX Coordinator determines it is necessary to sign a formal complaint, even though the written notice of allegations does not include the complainant's identity.[594]

The Department agrees with commenters that concerns about confidentiality often affect a victim's willingness to report sexual assault. The final regulations aim to give complainants as much control as

---

[594] If the complainant's identity is discovered during the investigation, the recipient would need to send supplemental notice of allegations to the parties and treat the complainant as a party throughout the grievance process. See § 106.45(b)(2)(ii). Without a complainant (i.e., a person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment) at some point being identified during an investigation, a recipient may find itself unable to meet the recipient's burden to gather evidence sufficient to reach a determination regarding responsibility. For example, without knowing a complainant's identity a recipient may not be able to gather evidence necessary to establish elements of conduct defined as "sexual harassment" under § 106.30, such as whether alleged conduct was unwelcome, or without the consent of the victim. In such a situation, the final regulations provide for discretionary dismissal of the formal complaint, or allegations therein. § 106.45(b)(3)(ii). A recipient's decision (made via the Title IX Coordinator) to initiate a grievance process over the wishes of a complainant, or where the complainant does not wish to participate, or where the complainant's identity is unknown, is evaluated under the deliberate indifference standard set forth in § 106.44(a).

possible over: whether and how to report that the complainant has been victimized by sexual harassment; whether, or what kinds, of supportive measures may help the complainant maintain equal access to education; and whether to initiate a grievance process against the respondent. Each of the foregoing decisions can be made by a complainant with awareness of the implications for the complainant's anonymity or confidentiality. The final regulations ensure that complainants have any or all of the following options: the ability to report anonymously (though a recipient will be unable to provide supportive measures without knowing the complainant's identity); the ability to report and receive supportive measures while keeping the complainant's identity confidential from the respondent (unless the respondent

must know the complainant's identity in order for the recipient to implement a supportive measure); and the right to file a formal complaint against the respondent, realizing that doing so means the respondent will know the complainant's identity, yet as to people outside the grievance process the complainant's identity must be kept confidential except as permitted by

FERPA, required by law, or as necessary to conduct the grievance process.

Changes: We have added § 106.71(a) requiring recipients to keep confidential the identity of any individual who has made a report or complaint of sex discrimination, including any individual who has made a report or filed a formal complaint of sexual harassment, any complainant, any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of sex discrimination, any respondent, and any witness, except as permitted by FERPA, required by law, or as necessary to carry out the purposes of 34 CFR part 106 to conduct any investigation, hearing, or judicial proceeding arising thereunder, which includes a grievance process.

Officials Other Than the Title IX Coordinator Filing a Formal Complaint

Comments: Commenters asked for clarification as to whether "officials with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient" are authorized to file a formal complaint, or whether the Title IX Coordinator is the sole employee authorized to file a formal complaint. Commenters requested that §

106.30 be modified so that the complainant, the Title IX Coordinator, or "any institutional administrator" can file a formal complaint; commenters argued that there are many administrators who have a significant interest in ensuring that the recipient investigates potential violations of school policy. Commenters requested clarification as to whether by filing a formal complaint, the Title IX Coordinator becomes a party in the investigation, and if this means that the Title IX Coordinator must be given the rights that the grievance procedures give to complainants, or if not, then commenters wondered who would be treated as the complainant in cases where the victim did not sign the formal complaint. Commenters argued that a Title IX Coordinator who signs a formal complaint initiating grievance procedures against a respondent is no longer neutral or impartial, is biased, and/or has a conflict of interest, especially where the Title IX Coordinator will also be the investigator.

Discussion: We appreciate the opportunity to clarify that the final regulations do not permit a formal complaint to be filed or signed by any person other than the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment or the alleged victim's parent or guardian on the alleged victim's behalf, as appropriate) or the Title IX Coordinator. While it is true that school administrators other than the Title IX Coordinator may have significant interests in ensuring that the recipient investigate potential violations of school policy, for reasons explained above, the decision to initiate a grievance process in situations where the complainant does not want an investigation or where the complainant intends not to participate should be made thoughtfully and intentionally, taking into account the circumstances of the situation including the reasons why the complainant wants or does not want the recipient to investigate. The Title IX Coordinator is trained with special responsibilities that involve interacting with complainants, making the Title IX Coordinator the appropriate person to decide to initiate a grievance process on behalf of the recipient. Other school administrators may report sexual harassment incidents to the Title IX Coordinator, and may express to the Title IX Coordinator reasons why the administrator believes that an investigation is warranted, but the decision to initiate a grievance process is one that the Title IX Coordinator must make.[595]

The Department does not view a Title IX's Coordinator decision to sign a formal complaint as being adverse to the respondent. A Title IX Coordinator's decision to sign a formal complaint is made on behalf of the recipient (for instance, as part of the recipient's obligation not to be deliberately indifferent to known allegations of sexual harassment), not in support of the complainant or in opposition to the respondent or as an indication of whether the allegations are credible, have merit, or whether there is evidence sufficient to determine responsibility. To clarify this, we have removed the phrase "or on whose behalf the Title IX

---

[595] This does not preclude recipient employees or administrators other than the Title IX Coordinator from implementing supportive measures for the complainant (or for a respondent). The final regulations, § 106.30 defining "supportive measures," require that the Title IX Coordinator is responsible for the effective implementation of supportive measures; however, this does not preclude other recipient employees or administrators from implementing supportive measures for a complainant (or a respondent) and in fact, effective implementation of most supportive measures requires the Title IX Coordinator to coordinate with administrators, employees, and offices outside the Title IX office (for example, notifying campus security of the terms of a no-contact order, or working with the school registrar to appropriately reflect a complainant's withdrawal from a class, or communicating with a professor that a complainant needs to re-take an exam).

Coordinator has filed a formal complaint" from the proposed rules' definition of "complainant" in § 106.30. We have also revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to state that when the Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, the Title IX Coordinator does not become a complainant, or otherwise a party, to a grievance process, and must still serve free from bias or conflict of interest for or against any party.

In order to ensure that a recipient has discretion to investigate and adjudicate allegations of sexual harassment even without the participation of a complainant, in situations where a grievance process is warranted, the final regulations leave that decision in the discretion of the recipient's Title IX Coordinator. However, deciding that allegations warrant an investigation does not necessarily show bias or prejudgment of the facts for or against the complainant or respondent. The definition of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment, and the conditions necessitating a recipient's response to sexual harassment allegations, are sufficiently clear that a Title IX Coordinator may determine that a fair, impartial investigation is objectively warranted as part of a recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response, without prejudging whether alleged facts are true or not. Even where the Title IX Coordinator is also the investigator,[596] the Title IX Coordinator must be trained to serve impartially,[597] and the Title IX Coordinator does not lose impartiality solely due to signing a formal complaint on the recipient's behalf.

[596] Section 106.45(b)(7) specifies that the decision-maker must be a different person from the Title IX Coordinator or investigator, but the final regulations do not preclude a Title IX Coordinator from also serving as the investigator.
[597] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to mean a document "filed by a complainant or signed by the Title IX Coordinator" and clarified that when a Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, the Title IX Coordinator is not a complainant or otherwise a party during the grievance process, and the Title IX Coordinator

must comply with these final regulations including the obligation in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to be free from bias or conflict of interest. We have also revised the definition of "complainant" in § 106.30 to remove the phrase "or on whose behalf the Title IX Coordinator has filed a formal complaint."

Complexity of a Document Labeled "Formal Complaint"

Comments: Commenters argued that the document initiating a grievance process should be labeled something other than a "formal complaint" because calling it a formal complaint makes it sound as though the survivor is complaining, or whining, about having been assaulted.

Commenters argued that requiring signed complaints is one aspect of the proposed rules that would make the Title IX campus system too much like the legal system, and survivors already feel deterred from pursuing justice through criminal and legal systems. Commenters argued that the § 106.30 definition of formal complaint was so legalistic that lawyers would have to get involved in every Title IX matter.

Commenters argued that students may think they have triggered a grievance procedure by reporting to the Title IX Coordinator only to find out that no investigation has begun because the student did not file a document meeting the requirements of a "formal complaint." Commenters argued that requiring a complainant to sign a written document with specific language about "requesting initiation of a grievance procedure" would result in some complainants believing they had filed a formal complaint when the exact paperwork was not filled out or signed correctly. Commenters asked whether a recipient would be deliberately indifferent if the recipient failed to tell a complainant who intended to file a formal complaint that the document filed failed to meet the requirements in § 106.30 and thus no grievance procedures had begun. Commenters requested clarification as to how a Title

IX Coordinator should treat an "informal complaint" that did not meet the precise definition of a formal complaint. Commenters argued that the definition of "formal complaint" means that a recipient could dismiss a meritorious complaint, or refuse to investigate, solely for immaterial technical reasons, such as the document not being signed or failing to include specific language "requesting initiation" of the grievance procedures. Commenters argued that the definition of "formal complaint" would provide an arbitrary bureaucratic loophole that would excuse recipients for their willful indifference when paperwork is not completed perfectly.

Commenters argued that the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" would make it difficult or impossible for some students to file a formal complaint. Commenters stated, for example, that young children may not have learned how to write. Commenters stated that, for example, individuals with certain disabilities may have difficulty communicating in writing. Commenters suggested that the definition be modified so that a formal complaint is "signed (or affirmed via another effective communication modality)" because otherwise, a student with a disability – especially with a communication disability or disorder – may be unable to file. Commenters suggested the definition be expanded to accommodate the needs of individuals with disabilities by accepting different communication modalities including oral, manual, AAC (augmentative and alternative communication) techniques, and assistive technologies.

Discussion: The final regulations continue to use the phrase "formal complaint" to describe the document that initiates a grievance process resolving sexual harassment allegations. The word "complaint" is commonly used in proceedings designed to resolve disputed allegations, and the word is used neutrally to describe that the person has brought allegations or charges of some kind, not pejoratively to imply that a person is unjustifiably "complaining" or "whining."[598]

"Formal complaint" is a specific term used in these final regulations to describe a document that initiates a grievance process against a respondent alleging Title IX sexual harassment. A grievance process that is consistent, transparent, and fair is necessarily a formal process, and parties should be

---

[598] For example, OCR refers to a "complainant" as a person who files a "complaint" with OCR alleging a civil rights law violation. E.g., U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, How the Office for Civil Rights Handles Complaints (Nov. 2018), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/complaints-how.html.

apprised that initiating a grievance process is a serious matter. This does not necessitate involvement of lawyers or convert a recipient's Title IX grievance process into a court proceeding. However, we agree with commenters that the way that a formal complaint was described in proposed § 106.30[599] was more restrictive than necessary and did not take into account the common use of electronic or digital transmissions. We have revised and simplified the definition of a "formal complaint" to mean "a document filed by the complainant or signed by the Title IX Coordinator alleging sexual harassment against a respondent and requesting that the recipient investigate the allegation of sexual harassment."

[599] Proposed § 106.30 defined "formal complaint" as "a document signed by a complainant or by the Title IX Coordinator alleging sexual harassment against a respondent and requesting initiation of the recipient's grievance procedures consistent with § 106.45."

The § 106.30 definition of a formal complaint describes the purpose of the document, not requirements for specific language that can be used as a bureaucratic loophole for a recipient to avoid initiating a grievance process. The purpose of the formal complaint is to clarify that the complainant (or Title IX Coordinator) believes that the recipient should investigate allegations of sexual harassment against a respondent. The Department does not assume that recipients will treat complainants attempting to file a formal complaint differently from students who attempt to file similar school paperwork; for example, when a form is missing a signature, recipients generally inquire with the student to correct the paperwork. Recipients are under an obligation under § 106.44(a) to respond promptly in a way that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances and this obligation extends to the circumstances under which a recipient processes a formal complaint (or a document or communication that purports to be a formal complaint). Under the final regulations, recipients also must document the basis for the recipient's conclusion that the recipient's response was not deliberately indifferent;[600] this provides an additional safeguard against a recipient intentionally treating imperfect paperwork as grounds for refusing to take action upon receipt of a document that purports to be a formal complaint.

[600] Section 106.45(b)(10)(ii).

We appreciate commenters' concerns that some students may be incapable of signing a document (for example, young students who have not learned how to write, or students with certain disabilities). To address these concerns, we have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to describe a "document signed by a complainant" as "a document or electronic submission (such as by electronic mail or through an online portal provided for this purpose by the recipient) that contains the complainant's physical or digital signature, or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint." We have also added § 106.6(g) recognizing the legal rights of parents and guardians to act on behalf of complainants, including with respect to filing a formal complaint of sexual harassment.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to describe a document, filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator, alleging sexual harassment, against a respondent, and requesting that the recipient investigate the allegation of sexual harassment. We have also revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to explain that the phrase "document filed by a complainant" refers to a document or electronic submission (such as an e-mail or through an online portal provided for this purpose by the recipient) that contains the complainant's physical or digital signature, or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint.

Parents' and Guardians' Rights to File a Formal Complaint

Comments: Commenters asserted that the proposed rules did not acknowledge that parents can file formal complaints on behalf of minor students and that the proposed rules therefore expect, for example, a third grade student to write down and sign a complaint document before getting help after experiencing sexual harassment. Commenters asserted that the formal complaint definition would leave minor students who may be incapable of writing and signing a document unprotected unless the Title IX Coordinator chooses to file a formal complaint on the student's behalf. Commenters argued that it is inappropriate to require a minor to sign any document because minors lack the legal capacity to bind themselves by signature. Commenters wondered what schools must do if a parent later disagrees with their child's decision to file a formal complaint or if the minor's parent is not consulted prior to filing. Other commenters wondered how a school must handle a situation where the parent, but not the child, wishes to file a formal complaint. Commenters wondered if the proposed rules would allow a Title IX Coordinator to help a complainant fill out the contents of a formal complaint.

Discussion: To address commenters' concerns that the proposed rules did not contemplate the circumstances under which a parent might have the right to file a formal complaint on their child's behalf, we have added § 106.6(g), which acknowledges the legal rights of parents and guardians to act on behalf of a complainant, respondent, or other individual with respect to exercise of rights under Title IX, including but not limited to the filing of a formal complaint. Thus, if a parent has the legal right to act on behalf of their child, the parent may act on the student's behalf by, for example, signing a formal complaint alleging that their child was sexually harassed and asking the recipient to investigate. The parent does not, in that circumstance, become the complainant (because "complainant" is defined as an individual who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment)[601] but the final regulations clarify that a parent's (or guardian's) legal right to act on behalf of the complainant (or respondent) is not altered by these final

---

[601] Section 106.30 (defining "complainant" to mean an individual "an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment") (emphasis added).

regulations. The extent to which a recipient must abide by the wishes of a parent, especially in circumstances where the student is expressing a different wish from what the student's parent wants, depends on the scope of the parent's legal right to act on the student's behalf.

Nothing in these final regulations precludes a Title IX Coordinator from assisting a complainant (or parent) from filling out a document intended to serve as a formal complaint; however, a Title IX Coordinator must take care not to offer such assistance to pressure the complainant (or parent) to file a formal complaint as opposed to simply assisting the complainant (or parent) administratively to carry out the complainant's (or parent's) desired intent to file a formal complaint. No person may intimidate, threaten, or coerce any person for the purpose of interfering with a person's rights under Title IX, which includes the right not to participate in a grievance process.[602]

Changes: We have added § 106.6(g) to the final regulations, acknowledging the legal rights of parents or guardians to act on behalf of a complainant, respondent, or other individual. We have added § 106.71 prohibiting retaliation and specifically protecting any individual's right to participate, or not participate, in a grievance process.

---

[602] Section 106.71 (prohibiting retaliation and specifically protecting any individual's right to participate or to choose not to participate in a grievance process).

Methods of Reporting and Methods of Filing a Formal Complaint

Comments: Some commenters believed that the proposed rules would require students to report in person to a Title IX Coordinator (which, commenters asserted, is challenging for many students including those in schools that have satellite campuses and a single Title IX Coordinator located on a different campus). Commenters argued that a student who goes through the inconvenience of locating the Title IX Coordinator to make an in-person report, and then later decides to pursue a formal process, would need to once again go meet the Title IX Coordinator in-person to file a formal complaint. These commenters argued that the narrow, formal definition of "formal complaint" proposed in § 106.30 would impose unnecessary barriers for complainants and result in fewer formal complaints being filed. Commenters argued that requiring complainants to file formal complaints only with the Title IX Coordinator – who may be a school official with whom the complainant has no relationship – will make survivors less comfortable with the reporting process, when already only about ten percent of campus sexual assaults are reported.[603]

Commenters argued that a formal complaint should be allowed to be filed by telephone, e-mail, or in-person, at the complainant's discretion. Commenters wondered whether Title IX Coordinators have the discretion to help a complainant fill out a formal complaint;

---

[603] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice, Research Report: The Sexual Victimization of College Women (2000).

whether a Title IX Coordinator could write out a complainant's verbal report and have the complainant sign the document; and whether the complainant's signature could be an electronic signature. Commenters argued that without clarifying that the complainant may sign electronically, the proposed rules would make it impossible for complainants who are not physically present on campus (for example, due to studying abroad, or being enrolled in an online course) to file formal complaints. Other commenters expressed concern that electronic reporting systems would not be allowed under the proposed regulations. Commenters stated that many recipients (both elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions) use exclusively online, electronic submission systems;

commenters suggested that § 106.30 should specify that a formal complaint may be "submitted" or "filed" (but not "signed") to clarify that electronic submission systems can be used for the Title IX Coordinator to receive a formal complaint.

Discussion: Neither the proposed rules, nor the final regulations, required students to report in person to a Title IX Coordinator. However, to address

commenters' concerns in this regard and to clarify that reporting to a Title IX Coordinator, and filing a formal complaint with the Title IX Coordinator, should be as accessible as possible for complainants, we have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to explain that a formal complaint may be filed with the Title IX Coordinator in person, by mail, or by electronic mail by using the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator under § 106.8(a), and by any additional method designated by the recipient. A formal complaint cannot be filed by telephone, because a formal complaint consists of a written document (or electronic submission, such as an e-mail or use of an online portal provided by the recipient for the purpose of accepting formal complaints); however, "any additional method designated by the recipient" may include an online submission system, and the final regulations now expressly reference the option for recipients to offer online portals for submission of formal complaints. The Department has also revised § 106.8(b) to specify that the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator under § 106.8(a) must be prominently displayed on the recipient's website (if the recipient has a website) and in any of the recipient's handbooks or catalogs. As discussed above, neither the proposed rules, nor the final regulations, restrict the form in which notice (e.g., a report of alleged sexual harassment) is given to the Title IX Coordinator, an official with authority to institute corrective measures, or an elementary or secondary school employee. Such notice may be given to the Title IX

Coordinator via the same contact information listed for the Title IX Coordinator in § 106.8(a) (including in person or by mail at the Title IX Coordinator's office address, by telephone, or by e-mail), or by other means of communicating with the Title IX Coordinator.[604] The final regulations thus ensure that complainants have [604] Section 106.8(a) (expressly stating that any person may report sexual harassment by using any of the listed contact information for the Title IX Coordinator or by any other means that results in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report, and such a report may be made "at any time (including during non-business hours) by using the telephone number or electronic mail address, or by mail to the office address, listed for the Title IX Coordinator.").

multiple clear, accessible methods for reporting (e.g., in person, telephone, mail, electronic mail) and multiple methods for filing formal complaints (e.g., in person, mail, electronic mail, any online portal provided by the recipient to allow electronic submissions of formal complaints), to reduce the inconvenience of "locating"

the Title IX Coordinator in order to report or to file a formal complaint.[605]

We understand commenters' concerns that a student may not have a preexisting relationship with a Title IX Coordinator; however, we reiterate that filing a formal complaint is not necessary in order to report and receive

[605] We also reiterate that any person may report sexual harassment triggering the recipient's response obligations, although only a complainant (or Title IX Coordinator) may initiate a grievance process by filing or signing a formal complaint. We have revised § 106.8(a) to emphasize the fact that any person may report sexual harassment, whether or not the person reporting is the person alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment, and we have also revised § 106.30, defining "actual knowledge," to state that "notice" constituting actual knowledge includes, but is not limited to, a report to the Title IX Coordinator as described in § 106.8(a). We have further revised § 106.8 to require recipients to notify all students, employees, parents and guardians of elementary and secondary school students, and others of the Title IX Coordinator's contact information, including prominently displaying that contact information on the recipient's website. These provisions ensure that all persons (not only complainants themselves) have a clear, accessible method of reporting sexual harassment.

supportive measures. The revisions to § 106.30 defining "formal complaint" give complainants the options of filing a formal complaint in person, by mail, by e-mail, and "any additional method designated by the recipient" so that the recipient has discretion to designate other methods for a formal complaint to be filed; further, a "document filed by a complainant" is stated to mean a mean a document or electronic submission

(such as by electronic mail or through an online portal provided for this purpose by the recipient) that contains the complainant's physical or digital signature or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint. The final regulations therefore authorize a recipient to utilize electronic submission systems, both for reporting and for filing formal complaints. The final regulations do not preclude a Title IX Coordinator from helping a complainant fill out a formal complaint, so long as what the complainant files is a document or electronic submission that contains the complainant's physical or digital signature, or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to specify that a formal complaint may be filed with the Title IX Coordinator in person, by mail, or by electronic mail, by using the contact information required to be listed for the Title IX Coordinator under § 106.8(a), and by any additional method designated by the recipient. We have further revised this provision to state that "document filed by a complainant" means a document or electronic submission (such as by electronic mail or through an online portal provided for this purpose by the recipient) that contains the complainant's digital or physical signature, or otherwise indicates that the complainant is the person filing the formal complaint.

Miscellaneous Concerns About the Formal Complaint Definition

Comments: Commenters wondered whether a complainant can file a formal complaint after having graduated. Commenters wondered whether a formal complaint could be filed against an unknown or unidentified respondent; commenters opined that the formal grievance procedures in § 106.45 seemed "elaborate" for circumstances where the perpetrator was not identified and thus there would be no possibility of punishment through a grievance proceeding. Commenters suggested that complainants should be allowed to make a formal complaint about systemic culture of harassment on a campus, not only against an individual respondent.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' questions regarding whether a complainant may file a formal complaint after the complainant has graduated. The definition of "complainant" is any individual alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment; there is no requirement that the complainant must be a student, employee, or other designated relationship with the recipient in order to be treated as a "complainant" entitled to a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response from the recipient. To clarify the circumstances under which a complainant may file a formal complaint (thereby requiring the recipient to investigate sexual harassment allegations) we have revised the § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" to state that a complainant must be participating in, or attempting to participate in, the recipient's education program or activity at the time of filing a formal complaint. A complainant who has graduated may still be "attempting to participate" in the recipient's education program or activity; for example, where the complainant has graduated from one program but intends to apply to a different program, or where the graduated complainant intends to remain involved with a recipient's alumni programs and activities. Similarly, a complainant who is on a leave of absence may be "participating or attempting to participate" in the recipient's education program or activity; for example, such a complainant may still be enrolled as a student even while on leave of absence, or may intend to re-apply after a leave of absence and thus is still "attempting to participate" even while on a leave of absence. By way of further example, a complainant who has left school because of sexual harassment, but expresses a desire to re-enroll if the recipient appropriately responds to the sexual harassment, is "attempting to participate" in the recipient's education program or activity. Because a complainant is entitled under these final regulations to a prompt response that must include offering supportive measures, the Department's intention is that recipients will promptly implement individualized services designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal access to education,[606] regardless of whether a complainant files a formal complaint, so that if a complainant later decides to file a formal complaint, the complainant has already been receiving supportive measures that help a complainant maintain educational access.

[606] Section 106.44(a); § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures").

The § 106.30 definition of "formal complaint" states that a formal complaint is a document that alleges sexual harassment "against a respondent," but the final regulations do not require a complainant to identify the respondent in a formal complaint. However, § 106.44(a) prohibits a recipient from imposing disciplinary sanctions on a respondent without first following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.[607] Section 106.45(b)(2) requires the recipient to send the parties written notice of allegations including the identities of the parties, if known, "upon receipt of a formal complaint." Thus, a recipient in receipt of a complainant's formal complaint, where the complainant has refused to identify the respondent, will be unable to comply with the § 106.45 grievance process and will not be permitted to impose disciplinary sanctions against a respondent. In such a circumstance, the recipient still must promptly respond by offering supportive measures to the complainant, pursuant to §§ 106.44(a) and 106.44(b)(1).

---

[607] See also § 106.45(b)(1)(i).

Nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from responding to a complainant's request to investigate sexual harassment that allegedly has created a hostile environment on campus; however, a recipient cannot impose disciplinary sanctions against a respondent accused of sexual harassment unless the recipient first follows a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. A complaint filed by a complainant would not constitute a formal complaint triggering a recipient's obligation to investigate unless it is a document alleging sexual harassment against a respondent, and the recipient would not be able to impose disciplinary sanctions against a respondent unless the respondent's identity is known so that the recipient follows a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. A recipient must investigate a complainant's formal complaint even if the complainant does not know the respondent's identity, because an investigation might reveal the respondent's identity, at which time the recipient would be obligated to send both parties written notice of the allegations under § 106.45(b)(2) and fulfill all other requirements of the § 106.45 grievance process.

Changes: We have revised § 106.30 defining "formal complaint" to provide that at the time of filing a formal complaint, a complainant must be participating in or attempting to participate in the education program or activity of the recipient with which the formal complaint is filed.

Postsecondary Institution

Comments: Some commenters assumed that the Department's use of the term "institution of higher education" in the NPRM means an institution as defined in the Department's regulations implementing Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended, ("HEA") and thus concluded that the Department must undergo negotiated rulemaking in order to promulgate these final regulations.

Discussion: The Department's use of the term "institution of higher education" in the NPRM did not refer to "institution of higher education" as defined in the Department's regulations implementing Title IV of the HEA. As explained in more detail elsewhere in this preamble including the "Executive Orders and Other Requirements" subsection of the

"Miscellaneous" section of this preamble, the Department is promulgating these regulations under Title IX and not under the HEA. Accordingly, the Department is not subject to the requirement of negotiated rulemaking under Title IV of the HEA.

To make it exceedingly clear that these final regulations do not refer to "institutions of higher education" in the context of the HEA, the Department revised the final regulations to refer to "postsecondary institutions" instead of "institutions of higher education." The Department derives its definition of "postsecondary institution" from the existing definitions in Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. The definition of "educational institution" in § 106.2(k) is a definition that applies to Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. Section 106.2(k)

defines an educational institution in relevant part as an applicant or recipient of the type defined by paragraph (l), (m), (n), or (o) of § 106.2. Paragraphs (l), (m), (n), and (o) of § 106.2 define an institution of graduate higher education, an institution of undergraduate higher education, an institution of professional education, and an institution of vocational education, respectively. Accordingly, the Department defines a postsecondary institution as an institution of higher education as defined in § 106.2(l), an institution of undergraduate higher education as defined in § 106.2(m), an institution of professional education as defined in § 106.2(n), and an institution of vocational education as defined in § 106.2(o). In this manner, the Department defines the subset of educational institutions as defined in § 106.2(k) that constitute postsecondary institutions as defined in § 106.30. The remainder of the entities described as educational institutions in § 106.2(k) constitute elementary and secondary schools as explained in the section above on the definition of "elementary and secondary school." The definition of "postsecondary institution" applies only to §§ 106.44 and 106.45 of these final regulations.

Changes: The Department revises § 106.30 to define a "postsecondary institution" as used in §§ 106.44 and 106.45 to mean an institution of higher education as defined in § 106.2(l), an institution of undergraduate higher education as defined in § 106.2(m), an institution of professional education as defined in § 106.2(n), and an institution of vocational education as defined in § 106.2(o), and replaces "institutions of higher education" with "postsecondary institutions" throughout the final regulations.

Respondent

Comments: At least one commenter appreciated that the Department clarified in its proposed definition that only a person in their individual capacity could be subjected to a Title IX investigation rather than an entire organization. Several commenters suggested that the

Department alter the language from "respondent" to "responding party." Other commenters recommended adding the word "accused" instead of the word "reported" in an effort to eliminate bias from the proceedings. One commenter asserted that the word "reported" implies that only a mere accusation exists and the commenter argued that a mere accusation should not make a person a respondent. One

commenter requested that the Department clarify that a respondent need not be a student, but may be a faculty or staff member. Another commenter asked for clarification regarding what constitutes a person "reported to be a perpetrator" since schools' obligations to the parties are only triggered when someone actually becomes a respondent or complainant.

Discussion: We acknowledge commenters' concerns with the language in the § 106.30 definition of "respondent." However, the Department declines to alter the term "respondent" to "responding party" because the two terms do not vary in a significant way and the term "respondent" is just as neutral as the proposed modification, without introducing potential confusion from use of "responding party" when

throughout the final regulations the word "party" is used to refer to either a complainant or a respondent. The Department also disagrees with the specific concern that using the language "reported" as opposed to "accused" to define the respondent, has the potential to bias the proceedings. The Department believes that the term "reported" carries a less negative connotation than the term "accused" without disadvantaging the complainant. We also acknowledge the suggestion that the final regulations clarify that a respondent can be a student, a faculty member, or other employee of the recipient, and the suggestion that the Department clarify whether a formal complaint is required for a party to become a "respondent." The Department believes that § 106.30 contains sufficiently clear, broad language indicating that any "individual"

can be a respondent, whether such individual is a student, faculty member, another employee of the recipient, or other person with or without any affiliation with the recipient. The Department intentionally does not limit a "respondent" to include only individuals against whom a formal complaint has been filed, because even where a grievance process is not initiated, the recipient still has general response obligations under § 106.44(a) that may affect the person alleged to have committed sexual harassment (i.e., the respondent). While the terms "complainant" and "respondent" are commonly used when a formal proceeding is pending, in an effort to eliminate confusion and to promote consistency throughout the final regulations, the Department uses the terms "complainant" and "respondent" to identify the parties in situations where a formal complaint has not been filed as well as where a grievance process is pending.

Changes: None.

Sexual Harassment

Overall Support and Opposition for the § 106.30 Sexual Harassment Definition

Comments: Many commenters expressed support for the § 106.30

definition of sexual harassment. One commenter commended the Department's § 106.30 definition because it makes clear that Title IX governs misconduct by colleges, not students, and addresses the real problem of sexual harassment while acknowledging that not all forms of unwanted sexual behavior – inappropriate and problematic as they may be – rise to the level of a Title IX violation on the part of colleges and universities. One commenter expressed strong support for shifting Title IX regulations to provide a clear, rational, understandable definition of what, precisely, constitutes sexual harassment and assault as opposed to current vague guidelines. One commenter stated that although some misinformed commenters and advocates have claimed the proposed rules would not require a school to respond to allegations of rape, the third prong of the § 106.30 definition clearly prohibits criminal sexual conduct itemized in incorporated regulation 34 CFR 668.46(a) including a single instance of rape. This commenter further expressed support for the second prong of the definition, which is limited to unwelcome conduct that is "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive," which, the

commenter stated, has proven to be the most controversial prong yet has three advantages: (1) it provides greater clarity and consistency for colleges and universities; (2) it minimizes the risk that federal definitions of sexual harassment will violate academic freedom and the free speech rights of members of the campus community; and (3) it recognizes that the Department's job is not to write new law. This commenter argued that if stakeholders desire a more expansive definition of sexual harassment, they should direct their concerns to Congress, and stated that the proposed rules clearly leave schools with the discretion to use their own, broader definitions of misconduct that do not fall within the school's Title IX obligations.

Several commenters supported the § 106.30 definition because they asserted that it would protect free speech and academic freedom while still requiring recipients to respond to sexual harassment that constitutes sex discrimination. One commenter argued that Title IX grants the Department authority to impose procedural requirements on schools to effectuate the purpose of Title IX but not to redefine what discrimination is, and when it comes to peer harassment particularly, application of broad definitions modeled on Title VII (which, the commenter asserted, does not require denial of equal access or severity), rather than Title IX's narrower definition, has led to numerous infringements on student and faculty speech and expression. This commenter stated that based on the Department's experience observing how a broader definition has been applied, the

Department reasonably may wish to adopt a narrower, clearer definition of harassment to avoid free speech problems, citing a Supreme Court case for the proposition that courts will not allow agencies to adopt regulations broadly interpreting a statute in a manner that raises potential constitutional problems.[608] This

[608] Commenters cited: Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. and Const. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 574-575 (1988) (rejecting agency's broad interpretation of law because it would raise possible free speech problems); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438 (1963) (stating broad prophylactic rules in the area of free expression are forbidden because the First Amendment demands precision of regulation).

commenter argued that the Department cannot ban all unwelcome verbal conduct (i.e., speech), or even seriously offensive speech, and that correcting an overly broad definition of harassment is an appropriate exercise of an agency's authority. The commenter argued that a broad definition may result in an agency finding liability that a court later reverses or subjecting a recipient to a lengthy, speech-chilling investigation that courts later view as a free speech violation;[609] thus, an agency needs to define harassment narrowly to avoid free speech problems ex ante rather than try to rely on ad-hoc First Amendment exceptions to a broad definition.

Several commenters supported the § 106.30 definition, arguing that the proposed rules correctly defined the

---

[609] Commenters cited: Rodriguez v. Maricopa Cmty. Coll. Dist., 605 F.3d 703 (9th Cir 2010); White v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214 (9th Cir. 2000); Lyle v. Warner Bros., 132 P.3d 211, 300 (Cal. 2006) (Chin, J., concurring); Meltebeke v. Bureau of Labor & Indus., 903 P.2d 351 (Or. 1995).

harassment a college must respond to as severe, pervasive conduct that denies equal access to an education – not conduct or speech that is merely "unwelcome," as other commenters would like. One commenter argued that students and faculty must be able to discuss sexual issues, even if that offends some people who hear it, and the fact that speech is deeply offensive to a listener is not a sufficient reason to suppress it.[610] One commenter asserted that, contrary to the suggestion of other commenters who have argued that individual instances of unwelcome speech should be suppressed to prevent any possibility of a hostile environment later developing, such a prophylactic rule to prevent harassment would be a sweeping rule, grossly overbroad in violation of the First Amendment.[611] The

---

[610] Commenters cited: Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443 (2011).
[611] Commenters cited: NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438 (1963).

commenter further argued that this First Amendment rule fully applies to colleges because the Supreme Court rejected the idea that "First Amendment protections should apply with less force on college campuses than in the community at large. Quite to the contrary, 'the vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools.'"[612]

---

[612] Commenters cited: Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 180 (1972).

Thus, the commenter asserted, even vulgar or indecent college speech is protected.[613] This commenter argued that because the First Amendment does not permit broad prophylactic rules against harassing speech, for a college to punish speech that is not severe and pervasive is a violation of the First Amendment.[614] The commenter further argued that even if speech is severe or

---

[613] Commenters cited: Papish v. Bd. of Curators, 410 U.S. 667 (1973).
[614] Commenters cited: DeJohn v. Temple Univ., 537 F.3d 301 (3d Cir. 2008).

pervasive, and thus could otherwise violate Federal employment laws like Title VII, faculty speech that offends co-workers may be protected under academic freedom when it does not target a specific employee based on race or gender[615] and the Supreme Court intentionally has adopted a narrower definition of harassment under Title IX than under Title VII, requiring that

[615] Commenters cited: Rodriguez v. Maricopa Cmty. Coll. Dist., 605 F.3d 703 (9th Cir. 2010).

conduct be both severe and pervasive enough to deny equal educational access, as opposed to merely fostering a hostile environment through severe or pervasive conduct.[616] By contrast to the second prong of the § 106.30 definition, the commenter argued that the Department does have authority to require schools to process claims of groping-based assaults, even if the

---

[616] Commenters cited: Davis v. Monroe Dep't. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 633, 650, 651, 652, 654 (1999) (noting that the Court repeated the severe "and" pervasive formulation five times).

groping did not by itself deny educational access, as a prophylactic rule to prevent such conduct from recurring and spreading, and potentially causing more harm to the victim that culminates in denial of educational access; according to this commenter, the difference is that because ignoring even a misdemeanor sexual assault creates a high risk that such conduct will persist or spread to the point of denying access and prophylactic rules are constitutionally acceptable when applied to conduct (such as sexual assault), not speech.

One commenter asserted that we live in a hypersensitive age in which disagreeable views are considered an assault on students' emotional safety or health, even though such disagreement is protected by the First Amendment.[617]

---

[617] Commenters cited: Jonathan Haidt & Greg Lukianoff, The Coddling of the American Mind (Penguin Press 2018).

This commenter agreed with the proposed rules' requirement that speech must interfere with educational "access" and not merely create a hostile environment because from a First Amendment perspective, under schools' hostile learning environment harassment codes, students and campus newspapers have been charged with racial or sexual harassment for expressing commonplace views about

racial or sexual subjects, such as criticizing feminism, affirmative action, sexual harassment regulations, homosexuality, gay marriage, or transgender rights, or discussing the alleged racism of the criminal justice system.[618] The commenter argued that to prevent speech on campus about racial or sexual subjects from being unnecessarily chilled or suppressed, a

---

[618] Commenters cited: Jerome Woehrle, Free Speech Shrinks Due to Bans on Hostile or Offensive Speech, LIBERTY UNYIELDING (Nov. 23, 2017), https://libertyunyielding.com/2017/11/23/free-speech-shrinks-due-bans-hostile-offensive-speech/ (citing various sources including books and articles).

more limited definition of sexual harassment is necessary than the expansive hostile environment concept.[619] Another commenter stated that courts have struck down campus racial and gender harassment codes that banned speech that created a hostile environment, but did not cause more tangible harm to students.[620] This

---

[619] Commenters cited: Rodriguez v. Maricopa Cmty. Coll. Dist., 605 F.3d 703 (9th Cir. 2010) (dismissing racial harassment lawsuit over instructor's racially insensitive e-mails about immigration based on the First Amendment, even though the e-mails were offensive to Hispanic employees).

[620] Commenters cited: Dambrot v. Cent. Mich. Univ., 55 F.3d 1177 (6th Cir. 1995); UWM Post v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wis. Sys., 774 F. Supp. 1163 (E.D. Wis. 1991).

commenter argued that if a regulation or campus code bans hostile environments created from verbal conduct, without requiring more tangible harm, people can and will file complaints, and bring lawsuits, over constitutionally protected speech that offended them and that including a vague First Amendment exception in such codes or regulations is not enough to protect free speech because when liability or punishment is imposed, the decision-maker doing so will just claim that the penalty is not based on the content of the speech and that any First Amendment exception does not apply. The commenter argued that to protect free speech, the very definition of harassment must include a requirement that verbal conduct deny access to an education.

The commenter argued that the § 106.30 definition of harassment properly

requires that verbal conduct be severe, not just pervasive or persistent as prior Department guidance suggested. The commenter asserted that just because offensive ideas are pervasive or persistent on a college campus does not strip the ideas of First Amendment protection and thus, only severe verbal conduct, such as fighting words, threats, and intentional infliction of severe emotional distress, should be prohibited. One commenter similarly argued that the same result is appropriate in the elementary and secondary school context, arguing that the Supreme Court's Davis decision expressly required that conduct be severe and pervasive for Title IX liability, unlike workplace conduct under Title VII, and that the Court did so precisely because of the inevitability that elementary and secondary school students frequently behave in ways that would be unacceptable among adult workers.[621] The commenter surmised that the Davis Court also likely did so to address free speech concerns raised by amici, who discussed serious problems with using the broader workplace severe or pervasive standard for college students' speech. According to this commenter, college students have broader free speech rights than employees do, and the harassment definition as to their verbal conduct thus needs to be narrower under Title IX than under Title VII. Similarly, another commenter asserted that colleges are not like workplaces where it may be natural to ban offensive speech to maximize efficiency or prevent a hostile or offensive environment; rather, colleges exist for the purpose of exchanging ideas and pursuing the truth even if words and ideas offend listeners.[622] Thus, the commenter asserted, schools should not be required to punish speakers unless their speech interferes with access to an education; according to this commenter, discussion of unpleasant sexual realities and unpopular viewpoints should not be silenced.

[621] Commenters cited: Davis, 526 U.S. 629, 652 (1999).

---

[622] Commenters cited: Dambrot v. Cent. Mich. Univ., 55 F.3d 1177 (6th Cir. 1995) (holding hostile environment harassment code was unconstitutionally vague and overbroad and was not a valid prohibition of fighting words).

One commenter asserted that the Davis standard, incorporated into the second prong of the § 106.30 definition, allows schools to prohibit sexual violence, to discipline those who commit it, and to remedy its effects and also allows schools to punish students when they determine that a student has engaged in expression (without accompanying physical or other conduct) that is discriminatory based on sex and that interferes with a student's access to education because of its severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness.[623] This commenter stated it is precisely because expression, and not just physical conduct, may be restricted or punished as harassment that the Supreme Court carefully crafted

---

[623] Commenters further argued that there is no doubt that First Amendment interests are implicated when expression on public college campuses is regulated; as the Supreme Court has established, "If there is a bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment, it is that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable." Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 414 (1989). The Supreme Court has also rejected the idea that "because of the acknowledged need for order, First Amendment protections should apply with less force on college campuses than in the community at large. Quite to the contrary, 'the vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools.'" Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 180 (1972) (internal citations omitted). Further, these protections apply even to highly offensive speech on campus: "[T]he mere dissemination of ideas – no matter how offensive to good taste – on a state university campus may not be shut off in the name alone of 'conventions of decency.'" Papish v. Bd. of Curators, 410 U.S. 667, 670 (1973) (internal citations omitted).

the Davis standard for Title IX, reiterating it multiple times in its majority opinion and distinguishing it from the employment standard applied under Title VII.

One commenter asserted that, to the extent the proposed regulations appear to be a departure from a legally sound approach, as some critics have alleged, that is only because the Departments of Education and Justice have, in recent years, insisted upon an unconstitutionally broad definition of sexual harassment unsupported by statutes, regulations, or case law while the new proposed definition is in fact a welcome return to consistency with the law itself. This commenter further noted that while Davis sets forth constitutional guidelines for what may and may not be punished under Title IX, it does not preclude recipients from addressing conduct that does not meet that standard, in non-punitive ways including for example providing the complainant with supportive measures, responding to the conduct in question with institutional speech, or offering programming designed to foster a welcoming campus climate more generally.

One commenter supported the § 106.30 definition based on belief that the Federal government should not make a solution to problems of interpersonal relations (and sometimes intimate relations) a precondition to the receipt of Federal funds because schools do not hold a "magic bullet" to prevent all student relationships from going bad, and university resources should not be diverted to respond to civil rights investigations or litigation based on just a student's post-hoc, subjective feelings of being harassed or disrespected. Another commenter believed the new definition would stop schools from acting as the "sex police." This commenter argued that schools have interpreted the current, extremely broad, definition to include asking too many times for sex; nine second stares; fist bumps; and wake up kisses, effectively requiring schools to police the sex lives of students. One commenter supported the § 106.30 definition asserting that harassment definitions should not assume weaknesses or vulnerabilities that the genders have spent decades trying to erase. Other commenters supported the definition believing it would benefit those truly sexually harassed or assaulted and put a stop to false accusations after regretful hookups. One commenter asserted that a clear definition of sexual harassment actionable under Title IX is crucial to ensure that no woman feels ignored or mistreated by a particular investigator or administrator and thus making the definition consistent with Supreme Court precedent is an important advancement for women.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment. The Department agrees that the final regulations utilize a sexual harassment definition appropriate for furthering Title IX's non-discrimination mandate while acknowledging the unique importance of First Amendment freedoms in the educational context. As described in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the NPRM proposed a three-pronged definition of sexual harassment recognizing quid pro quo harassment by any recipient employee (first prong), unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education (second prong), and sexual assault (third prong).

Overall, as revised in these final regulations, this three-part definition in § 106.30 adopts the Supreme Court's formulation of actionable sexual harassment, yet adapts the formulation for administrative enforcement in furtherance of Title IX's broad non-discrimination mandate by adding other categories (quid pro quo; sexual assault and three other Clery Act/VAWA offenses[624]) that, unlike the Davis formulation, do not require elements of severity, pervasiveness, or objective offensiveness. The Department assumes that a victim of quid pro quo sexual harassment or the sex offenses included in the Clery Act, as amended by VAWA, has been effectively denied equal access to education. The § 106.30 definition captures categories of misconduct likely to impede educational access while avoiding a chill on free speech and academic freedom. The Department agrees with commenters noting that the Department has a responsibility to enforce Title IX while not interfering with principles of free speech and academic freedom, which apply in elementary and secondary schools as well as postsecondary institutions in a manner that differs from the workplace context where Title VII prohibits sex discrimination.

---

[624] These final regulations expressly include four Clery Act/VAWA offenses as sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30: sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking.

The Department agrees that the Supreme Court carefully and deliberately crafted the Davis standard for when a recipient must respond to sexual harassment in recognition that school environments are unlike workplace environments. Precisely because expressive speech, and not just physical conduct, may be restricted or punished as harassment, it is important to define actionable sexual harassment under Title IX in a manner consistent with respect for First Amendment rights, and principles of free speech and academic freedom, in education programs and activities. Likewise, the Department agrees with the commenter who noted the distinction between a standard for when speech is actionable versus a standard for when physical conduct is actionable; the former requires a narrowly tailored formulation that refrains from effectively applying, or encouraging recipients to apply, prior restraints on speech and expression, while the latter raises no constitutional concerns with respect to application of broader prohibitions. Thus, quid pro quo harassment[625] and the four Clery Act/VAWA offenses constitute per se actionable sexual harassment, while the "catch-all" Davis formulation that covers

---

[625] While quid pro quo harassment by a recipient's employee involves speech, the speech is, by definition, designed to compel conduct; thus, the Department believes that a broad prohibition against an employee conditioning an educational benefit on participation in unwelcome sexual conduct does not present constitutional concerns with respect to protection of speech and expression. See, e.g., Saxe v. State Coll. Area Sch. Dist., 240 F.3d 200, 207 (3d Cir. 2001) ("government may constitutionally prohibit speech whose non-expressive qualities promote discrimination. For example, a supervisor's statement 'sleep with me or you're fired' may be proscribed not on the ground of any expressive idea that the statement communicates, but rather because it facilitates the threat of discriminatory conduct. Despite the purely verbal quality of such a threat, it surely is no more 'speech' for First Amendment purposes than the robber's demand 'your money or your life.'") (emphasis in original).

purely verbal harassment also requires a level of severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness. The "catch-all" Davis formulation is a narrowly tailored standard to ensure that speech and expression are prohibited only when their seriousness and impact avoid First Amendment concerns.

The Department does not intend, through these final regulations, to encourage or discourage recipients from governing the sex and dating lives of students, or to opine on whether or not recipients have become the "sex police;" whether such a trend is positive or negative is outside the purview of these final regulations. The Department's definition of sexual harassment is designed to hold recipients accountable for meaningful, fair responses to sexual harassment that violates a person's civil right to be free from sex discrimination, not to dictate a recipient's role in the sex or dating lives of its students. The Department emphasizes that any person can be a victim, and any person can be a perpetrator, of sexual harassment, and like the Title IX statute itself, these final regulations are drafted to be neutral toward the sex of each party.[626]

---

[626] Compare 20 U.S.C. 1681(a) ("No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded …") (emphasis added) with § 106.30 (defining "complainant" to mean "an individual who is alleged to be the victim…") (emphasis added).

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment in four ways: First, by moving the clause "on the basis of sex" from the second prong to the introductory sentence of the entire definition to align with Title IX's focus on discrimination "on the basis of sex" for all conduct that constitutes sexual harassment; second, by specifying that the Davis elements in the second prong (severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, denial of equal access) are determined under a reasonable person standard; third, by adding the other three Clery Act/VAWA sex offenses (dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking) to the sexual assault reference in the third prong; and fourth, by referencing the Clery Act and VAWA statutes rather than the Clery Act regulations.

Comments: Many commenters opposed the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, with some commenters arguing that the definition is unfair, would make schools unsafe and vulnerable and retraumatize survivors, is misogynistic, and promotes a hostile environment. Commenters also stated that it would negatively impact all students, especially LGBTQ students including transgender and non-binary

people who are already more reluctant to report for fear of facing bias. Many commenters directed the Department to information and data about prevalence, impact, and other dynamics of sexual harassment that is addressed in the "General Support and Opposition" section of this preamble, arguing that the "narrowed" or "stringent" definition of sexual harassment in the NPRM would increase the prevalence, impact, and costs of sexual harassment on all victims and decrease or chill reporting of sexual harassment including disproportionately negative consequences for particular demographic populations. Many commenters asserted that the proposed definition fails to encompass the wide range of types of sexual harassment that students frequently face. Many commenters argued that requiring schools to only investigate the most serious cases gives a green light to all kinds of inappropriate behavior that should also be investigated. A few commenters contended that screening out harassment claims that do not meet certain thresholds contributes to a society-wide problem where from a young age girls are told in subtle and less subtle ways to be good, nice, and quiet, that girls don't matter as much as boys, and that speaking up to say something against a boy will not be taken seriously.

One commenter asserted that Alexander v. Yale established that sexual harassment and assault in schools is not only a crime, but also impedes equitable access to education.[627] Several commenters asserted that any act of rape or assault denies the victim the ability to successfully participate in college and that a person who is raped or assaulted is traumatized, which affects all aspects of college participation and academic performance. Many commenters contended that if enacted, the proposed rules would raise a question for a victim: was my rape/assault bad enough or severe enough to warrant someone listening to me?

---

[627] Commenters cited: Alexander v. Yale Univ., 459 F. Supp. 1 (D. Conn. 1977).

Several commenters asserted that by narrowing the definition of sexual harassment, the proposed rules would invalidate the adverse experiences to which victims have been subjected. One commenter argued that while there is no silver bullet to fixing the problem of sexual assault and harassment, narrowing what actions are deemed assault in the realm of Title IX will muddy the waters even further; the commenter argued that what people perceive as vague is necessary to ensure victims are being treated fairly. Several commenters asserted that as all victims of harassment are unique, so are forms of harassment unique and should remain widely defined.

Several commenters argued that the definitions of sexual harassment need to be developed further to include cultural differences in sexual harassment and discrimination. Other commenters asserted that the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment is very limiting compared to what students on campus really feel and experience; further, students may understand an experience differently based on race, sex, and cultural factors leading to misunderstanding as to what sexual assault or sexual harassment is or is not. A few commenters argued that sexual violence or sexual violation would be a better term to use than sexual harassment. At least one commenter asserted that accused students sometimes do not recognize their behavior as violent and wondered how that reality plays into Title IX reform. At least one commenter characterized the use of qualifiers like severe and pervasive in the sexual harassment definition as creating a fact- bound focus on the behavior of the victim, an unfair result given that much of the conduct complained about may also be criminal.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that the three-pronged definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30 is unfair, misogynistic, will make schools unsafe, leave students vulnerable, retraumatize survivors, promote a hostile environment, or disadvantage LGBTQ

students. As described above, the definition is rooted in Supreme Court Title IX precedent and principles of free speech and academic freedom, applies equally to all persons regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity, provides clear expectations for when schools legally must respond to sexual harassment, and leaves schools discretion to address misconduct that does not meet the Title IX definition. The

Department appreciates the data and information commenters referred to regarding the prevalence and impact of sexual harassment on students (and employees) of all ages and characteristics. Precisely because sexual harassment affects so many students in such detrimental ways, the Department has chosen, for the first time, to exercise its authority under Title IX to codify regulations that mandate school responses to assist survivors in the aftermath of sexual harassment.

The Department does not disagree with commenters' characterizations of the Davis standard as "narrow" or even "stringent," but we contend that as a whole, the range of conduct prohibited under Title IX is adequate to ensure that abuse of authority (i.e., quid pro quo), physical violence, and sexual touching without consent (i.e., the four Clery

Act/VAWA offenses) trigger a school's obligation to respond without scrutiny into the severity or impact of the conduct, while verbal and expressive conduct crosses into Title IX sex discrimination (in the form of sexual harassment) when such conduct is so serious that it effectively denies a person equal access to education. As a whole, the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30 is significantly broader than the Davis standard alone,[628] and in certain ways broader than the judicial standards applied to workplace sexual harassment under Title VII.[629] The final regulations provide students, employees, and recipients clear direction that when incidents of quid pro quo harassment or Clery

---

[628] This is because the Davis standard, alone, evaluates even physical assaults and violence through the lens of whether an incident is severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive so as to deny a person equal access; however, under these final regulations these elements do not apply to sex-based incidents of quid pro quo harassment, sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking.

[629] Under Title VII, sexual harassment (including quid pro quo, hostile environment, and even sexual assault) must be shown to alter the conditions of employment. See Meritor Sav. Bank v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 67 (1986). Under these final regulations, quid pro quo harassment, sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking do not require a showing of alteration of the educational environment. As previously stated, the Department assumes that a victim of quid pro quo sexual harassment or the criminal sex offenses included in the Clery Act, as amended by VAWA, has been effectively denied equal access to education.

Act/VAWA offenses are reported to the recipient, the recipient must respond without inquiring into the severity or pervasiveness of such conduct. The Department understands commenters' concerns that the Davis standard's elements (severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness) will exclude from Title IX incidents of verbal harassment that do not meet those elements. However, the Department does not agree that this standard for verbal harassment (and physical conduct that does not constitute a Clery Act/VAWA offense included in these final regulations) will discourage students or employees from reporting harassment, fail to require recipient responses to a wide range of sexual harassment frequently faced by students, or send the message that girls do not matter as much as boys. The

Department believes that State and local educators desire a safe, learning-conducive environment for students and employees, and that recipients will evaluate incidents under the Davis standard from the perspective of a reasonable person in the shoes of the complainant, such that the ages, abilities, and relative positions of authority of the individuals involved in an incident will be taken into account.

To reinforce this, the final regulations revise the second prong of the sexual harassment definition to specify that the Davis elements are "determined by a reasonable person" to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that a person is effectively denied equal access to education. The Department does not dispute commenters' characterization that only serious situations will be actionable under this definition, but following the Supreme Court's reasoning in Davis, that stricture is appropriate in educational environments where younger students are still learning social skills and older students benefit from robust exchange of ideas, opinions, and beliefs.

Contrary to commenters' assertions, neither the Davis standard nor the sexual harassment definition holistically gives a green light to inappropriate behavior. Rather, the three-pronged definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30 provides clear requirements for recipients to respond to sexual harassment that constitutes sex discrimination prohibited under Title IX, while leaving recipients flexibility to address other forms of misconduct to the degree, and in the manner, best suited to each recipient's unique educational environment.

The Department agrees with commenters that for decades, sexual harassment has been a recognized form of sex discrimination that impedes equal access to education, and that rape and assault traumatize victims in ways that negatively affect participation in educational programs and activities. For this reason, contrary to the misunderstanding of many commenters, the Department intentionally included sexual assault as a per se type of sexual harassment rather than leaving sexual assault to be evaluated for severity or pervasiveness under the Davis standard. No student or employee traumatized by sexual assault needs to wonder whether a rape or sexual assault was "bad enough" or severe enough to report and expect a meaningful response from the survivor's school, college, or university. Far from narrowing what constitutes sexual assault, the Department incorporates the offense of sexual assault used in the Clery Act, which broadly defines sexual assault to include all the sex offenses listed by the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting system. The Department agrees that all victims of harassment are unique, and that harassment can take a myriad of unique forms. For this reason, the Department defines sexual harassment to include the four Clery Act/VAWA offenses, leaves the concept of quid pro quo harassment broad and applicable to any recipient employee, and does not limit the endless variety of verbal or other conduct that could meet the Davis standard. While understanding that sexual harassment causes unique harm to victims distinct from the harm caused by other misconduct, the final regulations define sexual harassment

similar to the way in which fraud is understood in the legal system, where "Fraud is a generic term, which embraces all the multifarious means which human ingenuity can devise and which are resorted to by one individual to gain an advantage over another by false suggestions or by the suppression of the truth."[630] Similarly, sexual harassment under § 106.30 is a broad

---

[630] Stapleton v. Holt, 250 P.2d 451, 453-54 (Okla. 1952).

term that encompasses the "multifarious means which human ingenuity can devise" to foist unwelcome sex-based conduct on a victim jeopardizing educational pursuits. Thus, the Department agrees with commenters that some level of open-endedness is necessary to ensure that relevant misconduct is captured. The Department believes that the § 106.30 definition provides standards that are clear enough so that victims, perpetrators, and recipients understand the type of conduct that will be treated as sex discrimination under Title IX, and open-ended enough to not artificially foreclose behaviors that may constitute actionable sexual harassment.

The Department understands commenters' concerns that cultural differences can impact the way that sexual harassment is experienced.

Cultural and other personal factors can affect sexual harassment and sexual violence dynamics, and the Department believes the definition of sexual harassment must remain applicable to all persons, regardless of cultural or other identity characteristics. To the extent that cultural or other personal factors affect a person's understanding about what constitutes sexual harassment, the Department notes that with one exception,[631] no type of sexual harassment depends on the intent or purpose of the perpetrator or victim. Thus, if a perpetrator commits misconduct that meets one or more of the three prongs, any misunderstanding due to cultural or other differences does not negate the commission of a sexual harassment violation. Similarly, a

---

[631] The one exception is the offense of "fondling," included in the Clery Act under the term "sexual assault." Under the Clery Act (referring to the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting system), fondling is a sex offense that means the "touching of the private body parts of another person for the purpose of sexual gratification, without the consent of the victim[.]" E.g., U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office of Postsecondary Education, The Handbook for Campus Safety and Security Reporting 3-6 (2016), https://www2.ed.gov/admins/lead/safety/handbook.pdf. (emphasis added).

respondent's lack of comprehension that conduct constituting sexual harassment violates the bodily or emotional autonomy and dignity of a victim does not excuse the misconduct, though genuine lack of understanding may (in a recipient's discretion) factor into the sanction decision affecting a particular respondent, or a recipient's willingness to facilitate informal resolution of a formal complaint of sexual harassment.

While the Department appreciates commenters' suggestions that "sexual violence" or "sexual violations" would be preferred terms in place of "sexual harassment," for clarity and ease of common understanding, the Department uses "sexual harassment" as the Supreme Court used that term when acknowledging that sexual harassment can constitute a form of sex discrimination covered by Title IX.

The Department disagrees that the Davis standard inappropriately or unfairly creates a fact-bound focus on the victim's behavior; rather, elements of severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness focus factually on the nature of the misconduct itself – not on the victim's response to the misconduct. To reinforce and clarify that position, we have revised § 106.30 defining "sexual harassment" to expressly state that the Davis elements of severity, pervasiveness, objective offensiveness, and effective denial of equal access, are evaluated from the perspective of a "reasonable person," so that the complainant's individualized reaction to sexual harassment is not the focus when a recipient is identifying and responding to Title IX sexual harassment incidents or allegations.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment by specifying that the elements in the Davis standard (severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, and denial of equal access) are determined under a reasonable person standard.

Comments: Several commenters asserted that the § 106.30 definition

ignores a multitude of objectionable actions thereby excusing large swaths of harassing activity from scrutiny under Title IX. Other commenters objected to the § 106.30 definition on the ground that there are a wide variety of circumstances in which unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex would violate Title IX, but which would fall outside the proposed definition of sexual harassment; several such commenters argued that the net effect of the proposed definition would be to exempt from enforcement by the Department several distinct categories of Title IX violations, and under Title IX the Department has no authority to create such exemptions.

A few commenters asserted that some sexual predators engage in grooming behaviors intended to sexualize an abuser's relationships with children gradually while building a sense of trust with intended victims.[632] Commenters asserted that grooming behaviors can include behaviors such as making inappropriate jokes, sharing pornographic photos or videos, inappropriately entering locker rooms when students are undressing, singling out children for gifts, trips or special tasks, and finding times and places to be alone with children. Commenters argued that under the proposed rules, these behaviors might not meet the definition of sexual harassment, yet responding to such behaviors is essential to preventing child sexual abuse.

---

[632] Commenters cited: Helen C. Whittle et al., A Comparison of Victim and Offender Perspectives of Grooming and Sexual Abuse, 36 DEVIANT BEHAVIOR 7 (2015).

Some commenters expressed concern that the § 106.30 definition discounts certain types of sex-based harassment that, although ostensibly

"less severe," nonetheless adversely affect survivors' participation in educational programs. A few such commenters categorized types of sex-based harassment[633] as: (i) "Sexual assault" defined as involving any unwelcome sexual contact, which the commenters stated is covered by the proposed rules' definition of

---

[633] Commenters cited: Louise Fitzgerald et al., Measuring sexual harassment: Theoretical and psychometric advances, 17 BASIC & APPLIED SOCIAL PSYCHOL. 4 (1995); Jennifer L. Berdahl, Harassment based on sex: Protecting social status in the context of gender hierarchy, 32 ACAD. OF MGMT. REV. 641 (2007); Emily Leskinen et al., Gender harassment: Broadening our understanding of sex-based harassment at work, 35 LAW & HUM. BEHAVIOR 1 (2011); National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

harassment; (ii) "sex-based harassment" as an umbrella term to mean behavior that derogates, demeans, or humiliates an individual based on that individual's sex but does not involve physical contact, and which comes in three forms: "sexual coercion" or quid pro quo involving bribes or threats that make an important outcome contingent on the victim's sexual cooperation; "unwanted sexual attention" involving expressions of romantic or sexual interest that are unwelcome, unreciprocated, and offensive to the recipient; and "gender harassment" encompassing verbal and nonverbal behaviors not aimed at sexual cooperation but that convey insulting, hostile, and degrading attitudes about one sex (though devoid of sexual content). These commenters asserted that while sexual coercion remains covered under the §106.30 definition (under the first prong regarding quid pro quo harassment), unwanted sexual attention is covered only if it is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education, and gender harassment is not covered at all by the regulatory definition even though it is the most common type of sex-based harassment in academia as well as the workplace. These commenters also asserted that research shows that gender harassment that is either severe or occurs frequently over a period of time can result in the same level of negative professional, academic, and psychological outcomes as isolated incidents of sexual coercion.[634] These commenters concluded that the only way to truly combat sexual harassment is to enact policies that address and prevent the most common form of sexual harassment (i.e., gender harassment).

[634] Commenters cited: National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine 69 (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018). Commenters further noted that sexual minorities experience gender harassment at more than double the rates of heterosexuals. Id. at 46.

Several commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules do not expressly address how technology has changed in the decades since Title IX was enacted (e.g., e-mail, the internet) and asserted that the final regulations

must squarely address cyber-harassment on the basis of sex, which commenters stated is a severe and growing trend for students.[635] In addition to asking that online or cyber-harassment be explicitly referenced, several of these commenters also asserted that the appropriate standard for judging whether cyber-harassment

---

[635] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011), for the proposition that: in the 2010-2011 school year, 36 percent of girls, 24 percent of boys, and 30 percent of all students who took the survey in grades seven through 12 experienced sexual harassment online; 18 percent of these students did not want to go to school, 13 percent found it hard to study, 17 percent had trouble sleeping, and eight percent wanted to stay home from school. Commenters also asserted that college students, too, face online sexual harassment, and in support of this assertion, some commenters cited to: David Goldman, Campus Uproar Over Yik Yak App After Sex, Harassment, Murder, CNN.COM (May 7, 2015), https://money.cnn.com/2015/05/07/technology/yik-yak-university-of-mary-washington/index.html.

must be responded to is whether such harassment meets the description of harassment set forth in the Department's 2001 Guidance.

Several commenters asserted that school boards in elementary and secondary schools will encounter confusion among the proposed Title IX sexual harassment regulatory definition, State laws governing bullying, abuse, or crimes that mandate reports to law enforcement or child welfare agencies, and school discipline violations, each of which has its own procedures that must be followed. Similarly, several commenters asserted that postsecondary institutions will encounter confusion due to differences between the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment and various State laws that define sexual harassment or sexual misconduct more broadly; these commenters referenced laws in states such as California, New York, New Jersey, Illinois, and others.

At least one commenter asserted that the requirement that any of the conduct defined as sexual harassment under § 106.30 must be "on the basis of sex" lacks guidance as to how that element must be applied; one commenter wondered if this element means that a complainant must try to prove the respondent's state of mind when most respondents would simply deny acting on the basis of the victim's sex and insist that the action was based on romance, anger, emotion, etc., or whether a complainant would need to provide statistics to show a disparate impact on people of the victim's sex in order to show that the respondent's conduct was "on the basis of sex."

At least one commenter urged the Department to seek input from stakeholders, including education leaders, on what types of technical assistance would be most helpful to school districts seeking to implement the regulatory definition.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges that not every instance of subjectively unwelcome conduct is captured under the three-pronged definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30. However, the Department believes that the conduct captured as actionable under Title IX constitutes precisely the sex-based conduct that the Supreme Court has indicated amounts to sex discrimination under Title IX, as well as physical conduct that might not meet the Davis definition (e.g., a single instance of rape, or a single instance of quid pro quo harassment). The Department disagrees that it is exempting categories of Title IX violations from coverage under Title IX; to the contrary, the § 106.30 definition ensures that sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment clearly falls under recipients' Title IX obligations to operate education programs and activities free from sex discrimination.

The Department appreciates commenters' concerns regarding grooming behaviors, which can facilitate sexual abuse. While the sexual harassment definition does not identify "grooming behaviors" as a distinct category of misconduct, some of the conduct identified by commenters and experts as constituting grooming behaviors may constitute § 106.30 sexual harassment, and behaviors that do not constitute sexual harassment may still be recognized as suspect or inappropriate and addressed by recipients outside Title IX obligations.

Similarly, the Department understands commenters' and experts' assertions that unwelcome conduct that is not "severe" can still adversely impact students and employees. The 2018 comprehensive report on "Sexual Harassment of Women" by the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (NASEM)[636] helpfully synthesizes decades of sexual harassment research and analysis to classify sex-based harassment as either sexual assault, or any of three types of sex-based harassment (sexual coercion, unwanted sexual attention, or gender harassment). The Department agrees with commenters' assertions that sexual assault and sexual coercion[637] are covered under the regulatory definition, and agrees that unwanted sexual attention is covered if such conduct meets the second prong (the Davis standard), but the Department disagrees with commenters' assertion that what NASEM and others label as "gender harassment" is not covered under § 106.30. What the Department

[636] Commenters cited: National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

[637] Commenters referred to "sexual coercion" as quid pro quo harassment.

understands NASEM and commenters to mean by gender harassment is verbal and nonverbal behaviors, devoid of sexual content, that convey insulting, hostile, degrading attitudes about a particular sex. The language of the second prong of the § 106.30 definition describes conduct on the basis of sex that is unwelcome, determined by a reasonable person to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education. That description encompasses what commenters label as "gender harassment" (as well as what commenters label "unwanted sexual attention") where the verbal or other conduct meets the Davis elements. Thus, the § 106.30 definition appropriately covers what NASEM and commenters describe as the most common type of sex-based harassment in academia and the workplace, as well as other types of sexual harassment identified by such commenters and experts. The Department appreciates the efforts made by NASEM and others to analyze the prevalence of sexual harassment within academia and to recommend approaches to reduce that prevalence, and believes that these final regulations appropriately regulate sexual harassment as a form of Title IX

sex discrimination, while respecting the Department's legal obligations to enforce the civil rights statute as passed by Congress, and apply statutory interpretations consistent with First Amendment and other constitutional protections. The Department understands that research demonstrates that the negative impact of persistent (though not severe) harassment may be similar to the impact of a single instance of severe harassment. However, guided by the Supreme Court's Davis opinion, the Department believes that unwelcome conduct (that does not constitute quid pro quo harassment or a Clery Act/VAWA offense included in § 106.30) rises to a civil rights violation where the seriousness (determined by a reasonable person to be so severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, that it negatively impacts equal access) jeopardizes educational opportunities. While non-severe instances of unwelcome harassment may negatively impact a person, and recipients retain authority to address such instances, Title IX is focused on sex discrimination that jeopardizes educational access.

The Department understands that technology has evolved in the decades since Title IX was enacted, and that the means for perpetrating sexual harassment in modern society may include use of electronic, digital, and similar methods. The § 106.30 sexual harassment definition does not make sexual harassment dependent on the method by which the harassment is carried out; use of e-mail, the internet, or other technologies may constitute sexual harassment as much as use of in-person, postal mail, handwritten, or other communications. For reasons described throughout this section of the preamble, and in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the § 106.30 definition is superior to the definition of sexual harassment in the 2001 Guidance.

The Department acknowledges that a myriad of State and Federal laws overlap

in addressing misconduct, some of which may be criminal, violative of State civil rights laws, or safety-related (such as anti-bullying legislation), and that elementary and secondary schools, as well as postsecondary institutions, face challenges in meeting obligations under various laws, as well as recipients' own policies. The Department notes that a recipient's agreement to accept Federal financial assistance obligates the recipient to comply with Title IX with respect to education programs or activities, and that compliance with Title IX does not obviate the need for a recipient also to comply with other laws. The Department does not view a difference between how "sexual harassment" is defined under these final regulations and a different or broader definition of sexual harassment under various State laws as creating undue confusion for recipients or a conflict as to how recipients must comply with Title IX and other laws. While Federal Title IX regulations require a recipient to respond to sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, a recipient may also need to respond to misconduct that does not meet that definition, pursuant to a State law. The Department more thoroughly discusses the interaction between these final regulations and

State laws in the "Section 106.6(h) Preemptive Effect" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section.

The Department appreciates commenters' concerns about how to apply the prerequisite element that sexual harassment is conduct "on the basis of sex." The Department notes that the Title IX statute prohibits exclusion, denial of benefits, and subjection to discrimination "on the basis of sex," and the Department cannot remove that qualifier in describing conduct prohibited under Title IX because Congress intended for Title IX to provide individuals with effective protections against discriminatory practices[638] "on the basis of sex."[639] Discriminatory practices on other bases or protected characteristics are not part of Title IX's

---

[638] See Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979).
[639] 20 U.S.C. 1681(a).

non-discrimination mandate. To clarify that all the conduct defined as sexual harassment must be "on the basis of sex," the final regulations revise § 106.30 by removing that phrase from the second prong, and inserting it into the introductory sentence that now begins "Sexual harassment means conduct on the basis of sex that satisfies one or more of the following" and then goes on to list the three prongs of the definition.

The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that whether conduct is "on the basis of sex" does not require probing the subjective motive of the respondent (e.g., whether a respondent subjectively targeted a complainant because of the complainant's or the respondent's actual or perceived sex, as opposed to because of anger or romantic feelings). Where conduct is sexual in nature, or where conduct references one sex or another, that suffices to constitute conduct "on the basis of sex." In Gebser and again in Davis, the Supreme Court accepted sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination without inquiring into the subjective motive of the perpetrator (a teacher in Gebser and a student in Davis).[640] The Department follows the Supreme Court's approach in interpreting conduct "on the basis of sex" to include conduct of a sexual nature, or conduct referencing or aimed at a particular sex.[641]

---

[640] See, e.g., Davis, 526 U.S. at 643 (assuming without analysis that sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination, in stating that Gebser recognized that "whether viewed as discrimination or subjecting students to discrimination, Title IX unquestionably . . . placed on [the Board] the duty not to permit teacher-student harassment in its schools") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); id. at 650 ("having previously determined that 'sexual harassment' is 'discrimination' in the school context under Title IX, we are constrained to conclude that

---

student-on-student sexual harassment, if sufficiently severe, can likewise rise to the level of discrimination actionable under the statute."); id. at 650-51 (equating physical threats directed at female students, not of a sexual nature, with sexual harassment and thereby sex discrimination by stating: "The most obvious example of student-on-student sexual harassment . . . would thus involve the overt, physical deprivation of access to school resources. Consider, for example, a case in which male students physically threaten their female peers every day, successfully preventing the female students from using a particular school resource – an athletic field or a computer lab, for instance.").

[641] This approach finds analytic support in works such as Kathleen M. Franke, What's Wrong with Sexual Harassment?, 49 STAN. L. REV. 691, 771-72 (1997), noting that "to date, the Supreme Court has been disinclined to do more than summarily conclude that sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination" under Title VII and supporting an approach to "because of sex" that focuses on the conduct, not the perpetrator's motive, but arguing that a theoretical justification for why sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination that justifies such "evidentiary short cuts" should rely on recognition that sexual harassment is a "tool or instrument of gender regulation," undertaken "in the service of hetero-patriarchal norms" that are "punitive in nature [and] produce gendered subjects: feminine women as sex objects and masculine men as sex subjects" making sexual harassment a form of sex discrimination "precisely because its use and effect police hetero-patriarchal gender norms[.]" With a theoretical understanding of why sexual harassment might constitute sex discrimination as a backdrop, sex discrimination can be inferred in individual cases from the existence of sexual harassment, justifiably obviating a need to require "proof" that a particular plaintiff experienced sexual harassment on the basis of, or because of, the plaintiff's and/or defendant's sex, instead keeping the focus of each case on the misconduct itself. Id.

The Department appreciates a commenter's recommendation to seek input from stakeholders on what types of technical assistance would be most helpful to school districts in implementing the final regulations, and the Department will act on that recommendation by seeking such input from school districts and other recipients with respect to robust technical assistance to help recipients implement the § 106.30 definition and other provisions of the final regulations.

Changes: We have revised § 106.30 defining "sexual harassment" by moving the phrase "on the basis of sex" from the second prong to the introductory sentence applying to all three prongs of the definition of sexual harassment, such that any of the conduct defined as "sexual harassment" must be "on the basis of sex."

Prong (1) Quid pro quo

Comments: At least two commenters questioned whether the quid pro quo prong of the § 106.30 definition would apply only if the employee's conditioning of an educational benefit was express (as opposed to implied, or reasonably perceived by the victim as a threat to withhold a benefit), and if this prong required a subjective intent on the part of the recipient's employee to deny the aid or benefit even if such intent was not communicated when the harassment occurred. One such commenter asserted that it is important for potential harassers and potential victims to understand what conduct is prohibited and thus the final regulations need to specify whether the quid pro quo nature of the harassment must be expressly communicated, or may be implied by the circumstances; this commenter stated that even courts do not require that a harasser explicitly articulate all the terms and conditions of the "bargain of exchange" being proposed in a quid pro quo harassment situation.

At least one commenter asserted that the final regulations need to clarify that "consenting" to unwelcome sexual conduct, or avoiding potential adverse consequences without providing the requested sexual favors, does not mean that quid pro quo harassment did not occur.

One commenter believed that quid pro quo harassment needs to also be severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive.

A few commenters asserted that the quid pro quo prong of the sexual harassment definition should be expanded to include more persons than just "employees" of the recipient, because students may also hold positions of authority over other students (for example, team captains, club presidents, graduate assistants, resident advisors) and non-employees often have regular, recipient-approved contact with students and function as agents of the recipient (for example, people supervising internships or clinical experiences, employees of vendors or contracted service providers, volunteers who regularly participate in programs or activities, or board of trustees members who serve as unpaid volunteers). One such commenter argued that the quid pro quo prong is too narrow because all people (not just employees) providing any services as part of a recipient's business should not condition services on sexual favors but also should not perpetrate any unwelcome sexual conduct or create a hostile environment.

One commenter urged the Department to clarify that in the elementary and secondary school context, even a consensual, welcome sexual relationship between a student and teacher counts as sexual harassment because such a relationship is an abuse of the teacher's power over the student; the commenter asserted that the teacher-student relationship in Gebser may have been consensual but was still sexual harassment.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that the first prong of the § 106.30 definition, describing quid pro quo harassment, applies whether the "bargain" proposed by the recipient's employee is communicated expressly or impliedly. Making educational benefits or opportunities contingent on a person's participation in unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex strikes at the heart of Title IX's mandate that education programs and activities remain free from sex discrimination; thus, the Department interprets the quid pro quo harassment description broadly to encompass situations where the quid pro quo nature of the incident is implied from the

circumstances.[642] For the same reason, the Department declines to require that quid pro quo harassment be severe and pervasive; abuse of authority in the form of even a single instance of quid pro quo harassment (where the conduct is not "pervasive") is inherently offensive and serious enough to jeopardize equal

[642] As the Davis Court recognized, the relationship between a teacher and student makes it even more likely than with peer harassment that sexual harassment threatens the equal educational access guaranteed by Title IX. See Davis, 526 U.S. at 653 ("The fact that it was a teacher who engaged in harassment in Franklin and Gebser is relevant. The relationship between the harasser and the victim necessarily affects the extent to which the misconduct can be said to breach Title IX's guarantee of equal access to educational benefits and to have a systemic effect on a program or activity. Peer harassment, in particular, is less likely to satisfy these requirements than is teacher-student harassment.").

educational access,[643] and although such harassment may involve verbal conduct there is no risk of chilling protected speech or academic freedom by broadly prohibiting quid pro quo harassment because such verbal

---

[643] Similarly, where quid pro quo harassment may not be "severe" (for example, where the unwelcome sexual conduct consists of rubbing student's back or other conduct that may not meet the "severity" element and would not constitute sexual assault but does consist of unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature), quid pro quo harassment is inherently serious enough to jeopardize equal educational access. Thus, quid pro quo harassment constitutes sexual harassment under § 106.30, without being evaluated for severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness. Determining whether unwelcome sexual conduct is proposed, suggested, or directed at a complainant, by a recipient's employee, as part of the employee "conditioning" an educational benefit on participation in the unwelcome conduct, does not require the employee to expressly tell the complainant that such a bargain is being proposed, and the age and position of the complainant is relevant to this determination. For example, elementary and secondary school students are generally expected to submit to the instructions and directions of teachers, such that if a teacher makes a student feel uncomfortable through sex-based or other sexual conduct (e.g., back rubs or touching students' shoulders or thighs), it is likely that elementary and secondary school students will interpret that conduct as implying that the student must submit to the conduct in order to maintain educational benefits (e.g., not getting in trouble, or continuing to please the teacher and earn good grades). This approach to sexual harassment by a recipient's employees is in line with the Gebser/Davis framework, where the Supreme Court noted that any sexual harassment by a teacher or school employee likely deprives a student of equal educational opportunities. See Davis, 526 U.S. at 653. In situations where an employee did not intend to commit quid pro quo harassment (for instance, where the teacher did not realize that what the teacher believed were friendly back rubs had sexual overtones and made students feel uncomfortable), the recipient may take the specific factual circumstances into account in deciding what remedies are appropriate for the complainants and what disciplinary sanctions are appropriate for the respondent.

conduct by definition is aimed at compelling a person to submit to unwelcome conduct as a condition of maintaining educational benefits.[644] The Department notes that when a complainant acquiesces to unwelcome conduct in a quid pro quo context to avoid potential negative consequences, [644] Quid pro quo harassment should be interpreted broadly in part because although a teacher, coach, or other employee perpetrating a quid pro quo conditioning of benefits may use speech in proposing or inflicting such a Hobson's choice on a student, that speech is incidental to the conduct (sex discriminatory abuse of authority) and a broad rule prohibiting such conduct raises no constitutional concerns. See, e.g., Saxe v. State Coll. Area Sch. Dist., 240 F.3d 200, 207 (3d Cir. 2001) ("government may constitutionally prohibit speech whose non-expressive qualities promote discrimination. For example, a supervisor's statement 'sleep with me or you're fired' may be proscribed not on the ground of any expressive idea that the statement communicates, but rather because it facilitates the threat of discriminatory conduct. Despite the purely verbal quality of such a threat, it surely is no more 'speech' for First Amendment purposes than the robber's demand 'your money or your life.'") (emphasis in original).

---

such "consent" does not necessarily mean that the sexual conduct was not "unwelcome" or that prohibited quid pro quo harassment did not occur.[645]

The Department believes that the quid pro quo harassment description is appropriately and sufficiently broad because it applies to all of a recipient's employees, so that it includes situations

---

[645] The approach in these final regulations to quid pro quo harassment is consistent with the 2001 Guidance at 5 (stating that quid pro quo harassment does not depend on whether "the student resists and suffers the threatened harm or submits and avoids the threatened harm" and that a prohibited quid pro quo bargain may occur "explicitly or implicitly").

where, for instance, a teacher, faculty member, or coach holds authority and control over a student's success or failure in a class or extracurricular activity, and the Department declines to expand the description to include non-employee students, volunteers, or others not deemed to be a recipient's employee. The Department understands commenters' concerns that non-employees are sometimes in positions sanctioned by the recipient to exercise control over students (or employees) or to distribute benefits on behalf of the recipient. However, the Department is persuaded by the Supreme Court's rationale in Gebser that Title IX and Title VII differ with respect to statutory reliance on agency principles.[646] The Department believes that the § 106.30

---

[646] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 283 ("Moreover, Meritor's rationale for concluding that agency principles guide the liability inquiry under Title VII rests on an aspect of that statute not found in Title IX: Title VII, in which the prohibition against employment discrimination runs against 'an employer,' 42 U.S.C. 2000e-2(a), explicitly defines 'employer' to include 'any agent,' § 2000e(b). . . . Title IX contains no comparable reference to an educational institution's 'agents,' and so does not expressly call for application of agency principles.").

quid pro quo harassment prong reasonably holds recipients responsible for the conduct of the recipient's employees without expanding that liability to all agents of a recipient. However, the unwelcome conduct of a non-employee individual may constitute sexual harassment under the second or third prongs of the § 106.30 definition.

In response to a commenter's request that the final regulations state that sexual conduct between a teacher and student counts as sexual harassment even where the conduct is consensual and welcome from the student's viewpoint, the third prong of the § 106.30 definition refers to "sexual assault" as described in the Clery Act, which in turn references sex offenses under the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting system, including statutory rape (that is, sex with a person who is under the statutory age of consent).[647] With respect to students who are underage in their jurisdiction, a sexual relationship like that in Gebser between a teacher and student[648] would therefore count as sexual harassment under § 106.30, regardless of whether the victim nominally consented or welcomed the sexual activity. Furthermore, the Department interprets "unwelcome" as

---

[647] 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v).
[648] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 278 (describing the relationship between the teacher and student in that case as involving sexual intercourse).

used in the first and second prongs of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment as a subjective element; thus, even if a complainant in a quid pro quo situation pretended to welcome the conduct (for instance, due to fear of negative consequences for objecting to the employee's suggestions or advances in the moment), the complainant's subjective statement that the complainant found the conduct to be unwelcome suffices to meet the "unwelcome" element.

Changes: None.

Prong (2) Davis standard

Davis standard generally

Comments: Several commenters supported the second prong of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, which is derived from the Supreme Court's Davis opinion. One commenter stated that previous Department guidance changed the "and" to "or" in the "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" formulation and asserted that this resulted in over-enforcement and sparked criticism from experts and law professors, including the Association of Title IX Administrators (ATIXA).[649] This commenter argued that while victim

---

[649] Commenters cited: Eugene Volokh, Open Letter from 16 Penn Law Professors about Title IX and Sexual Assault Complaints, VOLOKH CONSPIRACY (Feb. 19, 2015), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/volokh-conspiracy/wp/2015/02/19/open-letter-from-16-penn-law-school-professors-about-title-ix-and-sexual-assault-complaints/; Law Professors' Open Letter Regarding Campus Free Speech and Sexual Assault (May 16, 2016), https://www.lankford.senate.gov/imo/media/doc/Law-Professor-Open-Letter-May-16-2016.pdf; Jacob E. Gerson & Jeannie Suk Gersen, The Sex Bureaucracy, 104 CAL. L. REV. 881 (2016); National Center for Higher Education Risk Management (NCHERM), The 2017 NCHERM Group Whitepaper: Due Process and the Sex Police 2, 15 (2017) ("Some pockets in higher education have twisted the 2011 Office for Civil Rights (OCR) Dear Colleague Letter (DCL) and Title IX into a license to subvert due process and to become the sex police. . . . [T]his Whitepaper [and another ATIXA publication] push back strongly against both of those trends in terms of best practices.").

advocates have argued that the Davis standard should apply only to private lawsuits against schools, it seems illogical to subject schools to two separate standards of responsibility concerning the same conduct, and the Davis standard does not let schools "off the hook."

On the contrary, many commenters opposed the second prong of the § 106.30 definition because it uses a standard designed to award money damages in private litigation, not administrative enforcement designed to promote equal educational opportunity. Some commenters argued that Gebser does not actually define sexual harassment and that Davis cited to the Supreme Court's Meritor opinion indicating intent to utilize the same definition for sexual harassment under Title IX as the Court has used under Title

VII. One commenter argued that the Davis Court inaccurately paraphrased the Meritor decision when stating "and" instead of "or" (in "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive"), and asserted there is nothing in the Davis opinion that indicates that the Court intended to apply a higher standard for hostile environment harassment under Title IX than under Title VII.

At least one commenter asserted that if students cannot receive different recourse from the Department than they can in Federal courts, then students will find civil litigation to be a better avenue which will lead to costly redirection of school resources toward defending Title IX litigation, a result exacerbated by the fact that the final regulations expressly prohibit awards of money damages in Department enforcement actions while money damages are available in private lawsuits.

At least one commenter argued that with regard to student-on-student harassment, the Supreme Court in Davis did not modify Gebser by defining "sexual harassment" in some limited way; rather, Davis addressed the amount and type of sexual harassment (as that phrase is commonly understood) which, if engaged in by a student harasser, would constitute "discrimination" and thus violate Title IX. At least one commenter argued that the NPRM failed to recognize the difference between the anti-discrimination clause and the anti-exclusion clause of the Title IX statute[650] by incorrectly assigning the purpose of the anti-discrimination clause to the anti-exclusion clause. One such

---

[650] Title IX, codified at 20 U.S.C. 1681(a): "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance[.]"

commenter argued that the purpose of the anti-discrimination clause is to forbid gender-based adverse action under a covered program or activity, regardless of whether that action has any impact on the victim's access to that program or activity while the purpose of the anti-exclusion clause is to protect access to a program or activity, regardless of whether the misconduct potentially affecting access occurs under, or outside, that program or activity.

One commenter argued that the NPRM's definition of hostile environment sexual harassment does not allow for the central method of analysis that both courts and existing Department guidance have instructed schools to use in evaluating sexual harassment complaints: balancing relevant factors in recognition of the totality of the circumstances. The commenter asserted that this holistic approach is crucial for recipients to fulfill their Title IX responsibilities to prevent the discriminatory conduct's occurrence and end it when it does occur. At least one commenter similarly argued that the "severe and pervasive" prong of the definition creates ambiguity from lack of guidance on how to apply the standard and without such guidance schools will screen out situations that should be addressed.

A few commenters noted that the second prong of the § 106.30 definition appropriately requires actionable harassment to be severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive yet leaves recipients flexibility to address misconduct that does not meet that standard through codes of conduct outside the Title IX context.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for the Davis definition of actionable sexual harassment embodied in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition. The Department agrees that adopting the Davis standard for harassment that does not constitute quid pro quo harassment or a Clery Act/VAWA offense, included in § 106.30, appropriately holds recipients responsible for addressing serious, unwelcome sex-based conduct that deprives a person of equal access to education, while avoiding constitutional concerns raised by subjecting speech and expression to the chilling effect of prior restraints. The Department agrees that aligning the Title IX sexual harassment definition in administrative enforcement and private litigation contexts provides clear, consistent expectations for recipients without letting recipients "off the hook." The Department chooses to adopt in these final regulations the Davis standard defining actionable sexual harassment, as one of three parts of a sexual harassment definition. This approach provides consistency with the Title IX rubric for judicial and administrative enforcement and gives a recipient flexibility and discretion to address sexual harassment while ensuring that complainants can rely on their school, college, or university to meaningfully respond to a sexual harassment incident.

The Department understands the argument of many commenters that adoption of the Gebser/Davis framework is not legally required and therefore the Department should adopt a broader approach to administrative enforcement than that applied by the Supreme Court in private Title IX lawsuits. The Supreme Court did not restrict its Gebser/Davis approach to private lawsuits for money damages, and the Department believes that the Supreme Court's framework provides the appropriate starting point for administrative enforcement of Title IX, with adaptions of that framework to hold recipients responsible for more than what the Gebser/Davis framework alone would require.[651]

The Department disagrees with a commenter who asserted that the Davis Court mistakenly or inaccurately "paraphrased" the Meritor description of actionable workplace harassment; rather, the Department believes that the Davis Court intentionally and accurately acknowledged the "severe or pervasive"

---

[651] For further discussion, see the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble.

formulation in Meritor yet determined that the "severe and pervasive" standard was more appropriate in the educational context. The Department notes that the Davis Court repeated the "severe and pervasive" formulation five times[652] showing that the Court noted differences between an educational and workplace environment that warranted a different standard under Title IX than under Title VII.[653]

[652] Davis, 526 U.S. at 633, 650, 651, 652, 654.

The Department disagrees with the commenter who asserted that the Department's adoption of Davis standards will lead to increased litigation against recipients because students will see no difference between recourse from the Department and recourse available in private litigation.

---

[653] Id. at 651 ("Courts, moreover, must bear in mind that schools are unlike the adult workplace and that children may regularly interact in a manner that would be unacceptable among adults. . . . Indeed, at least early on, students are still learning how to interact appropriately with their peers.").

While one of the three prongs of the § 106.30 sexual harassment definition is adopted from Davis, the other two prongs differ from the Davis standard; moreover, the other parts of the Gebser/Davis framework adopted by the Department in the final regulations adapt that framework in a way that broadens the scope of a complainant's rights vis-à-vis a recipient (for example, the actual knowledge condition in the final

regulations is defined broadly to include notice to any Title IX Coordinator and any elementary or secondary school employee, in addition to officials with authority to take corrective action; the deliberate indifference standard expressly requires a recipient to offer supportive measures to a complainant and for a Title IX Coordinator to discuss supportive measures with a complainant, with or without the filing of a formal complaint and to explain to a complainant the process for filing a formal complaint). Therefore, while rooted in the Supreme Court's framework, the final regulations appropriately impose requirements on recipients that benefit complainants, which Federal courts applying the Davis framework do not impose.[654] We have also revised § 106.3(a) to remove reference to whether the Department will or will not seek money damages as part of remedial action required of a recipient for Title IX violations; for further discussion, see the "Section 106.3(a) Remedial Action" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble.

[654] Consistent with constitutional due process and fundamental fairness, these final regulations also ensure that a recipient's supportive response to a complainant treats respondents equitably by refraining from punishing or disciplining a respondent without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. § 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(1)(i); § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" as non-punitive, non-disciplinary, not unreasonably burdensome to the other party); see also the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

The Department agrees with a commenter's characterization of Davis

as not so much redefining sexual harassment as describing the amount and type of sexual harassment that constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX. Likewise, while the Department refers to a "definition" of sexual harassment in § 106.30, the Department notes that the provision describes what amount and type of sexual harassment is actionable under Title IX; that is, what conditions activate a recipient's legal obligation to respond.

The Department disagrees with commenters who argued that the Davis standard in the second prong of § 106.30 fails to recognize the difference between the anti-discrimination clause and the anti-exclusion clause of Title IX. In Davis, the Supreme Court acknowledged that Title IX contains three separate clauses (anti-exclusion, denial of benefits, anti-discrimination), yet with respect to actionable sexual harassment under Title IX the Davis Court repeatedly used the formulation of sexual harassment that is "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive," at one point seeming to equate it with the denial of benefits clause and at others seeming to equate it with the "subjected to discrimination" clause.[655] Regardless of which of the three Title IX statutory clauses the Davis Court attached to its sexual harassment standard, the Court emphasized several times that the harassment must "deprive the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school"[656] or [655] 526 U.S. at 650 ("The statute's other prohibitions, moreover, help give content to the term 'discrimination' in this context. Students are not only protected from discrimination, but also specifically shielded from being 'excluded from participation in' or 'denied the benefits of' any 'education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.' 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a). The statute makes clear that, whatever else it prohibits, students must not be denied access to educational benefits and opportunities on the basis of gender. We thus conclude that funding recipients are properly held liable in damages only where they are deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment, of which they have actual knowledge, that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it can be said to deprive the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school."); id. at 644-45 (holding that a recipient is liable where its "deliberate indifference 'subjects' its students to harassment – "That is, the deliberate indifference must, at a minimum, 'cause [students] to undergo' harassment or 'make them liable or vulnerable' to it.") (internal citations omitted).

---

[656] Id. at 650.

must have "effectively denied equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities"[657] or "that it denies its victims the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect."[658] The Supreme Court's understanding of sexual harassment as prohibited conduct under Title IX requires sexual harassment to meet a seriousness standard involving denial of equal access to education, regardless of whether the sexual harassment is viewed as causing denial of benefits, exclusion from participation, or subjection to discrimination.

---

[657] Id. at 651.
[658] Id. at 652.

The Department disagrees that the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment precludes or disallows a totality of the circumstances analysis to evaluate whether alleged conduct does or does not meet the definition. The Davis Court noted that evaluation of whether conduct rises to actionable sexual harassment depends on a constellation of factors including the ages and numbers of parties involved,[659] and nothing in the final regulations disallows or disapproves of that common sense approach to determinations of severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness. To reinforce this, the final

---

[659] Id. at 651.

regulations include language in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition stating that the Davis elements are determined under a reasonable person standard. The Department does not believe that recipients will "screen out" situations that should be addressed due to lack of guidance on how to apply the "severe and pervasive" elements; the Department is confident that recipients' desire to provide students with a safe, non-discriminatory learning environment will lead recipients to evaluate sexual harassment incidents using common sense and taking circumstances into consideration, including the ages, disability status, positions of authority of involved parties, and other factors.

The Department appreciates commenters who stated, accurately, that the final regulations leave recipients

flexibility to address misconduct that does not meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, through a recipient's own code of conduct that might impose behavioral expectations on students and faculty distinct from Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, and we have revised § 106.45(b)(3) to clarify that even when a recipient must dismiss a formal complaint because the alleged conduct does not meet the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30, such dismissal is only for purposes of Title IX and does not preclude the recipient from responding to the allegations under the recipient's own code of conduct.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment by specifying that the elements in the Davis standard (severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, and denial of equal access) are determined under a reasonable person standard. We have revised § 106.45(b)(3)(i) to clarify that dismissal of a formal complaint because the alleged conduct does not constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 is a dismissal for purposes of Title IX but does not preclude the recipient from responding to the allegations under the recipient's own code of conduct. We have also revised § 106.3(a) to remove reference to whether the Department will or will not seek money damages as part of remedial action required of a recipient for Title IX violations.

Comments: Many commenters argued that the definition for Title IX sexual harassment should be aligned with the definition for Title VII, under which employers are liable for harassment that is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of employment.[660] Some commenters argued that under the proposed rules, schools would be held to a lower standard under Title IX to protect students (some of whom are minors) than the standard of protection for employees under Title VII. Some such commenters asserted that everyone on campus benefits from a culture in which sexual assault and harassment are deterred as they would be in a work environment and that Title IX, which applies to students, must not be weaker than Title VII.[661] Several commenters argued that the Title VII standard protects against visual and graphic displays, slurs, comments, and an array of other activities that are severe or pervasive on the basis of sex,

[660] Commenters cited: Meritor Sav. Bank v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 67 (1986) (holding under Title VII "For sexual harassment to be actionable, it must be sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of [the victim's] employment and create an abusive working environment.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted; brackets in original) (emphasis added); U.S. Equal Emp. Opportunity Comm'n, Enforcement Guidance on Vicarious Employer Liability for Unlawful Harassment by Supervisors (Jun. 18, 1999).

---

[661] Commenters cited: Ellison v. Brady, 924 F.2d 872 (9th Cir. 1991) for the proposition that if an employer is aware of and allows the continuation of sexual harassment creating a hostile work environment, it is a violation of Title VII.

while the NPRM would deny students the same protections by requiring conduct be both severe and pervasive.

Other commenters argued that college students must be able to succeed in college without being told that sexual assault and harassment is just something they must endure so they can finally get jobs at companies that do protect them from assault and harassment. Some commenters further argued that colleges and universities do a severe disservice to would-be harassers and assaulters by creating an environment where, unlike their future work environments, harassment and assault are tolerated. A few commenters asserted that because students can simultaneously be both students and employees it is necessary for the prohibited conduct to be the same under both Title VII and Title IX.

Many commenters asserted that the hostile environment standard expressed in the 2001 Guidance or the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter should be adopted in the final regulations, such that sexual harassment is "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" and such harassment is actionable when the conduct is "sufficiently serious that it interferes with or limits a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's programs." Some commenters asserted that the "looser" definition from Department guidance provides greater protection for victims compared to the subjectivity and gray areas created by ill-fitting terminology used in the § 106.30 definition. Many commenters argued that "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" is a simple definition of harassment that avoids the self-doubt and discouragement victims may feel if victims are required under the proposed rules to wonder if the harassment they experience fits the § 106.30 definition. Some commenters argued that the § 106.30 definition makes it too easy to dismiss cases as not severe enough when any case of unwelcome sexual conduct should be clearly prohibited out of common sense and fairness.

Some commenters asserted that the Department's guidance definition is more in line with the reality of the type of misconduct that occurs most often. Other commenters pointed to the "Factors Used to Evaluate Hostile Environment Sexual Harassment" section of the 2001 Guidance[662] outlining a variety of factors used to determine if [662] Commenters cited: 2001 Guidance at 5-7 (listing factors including: the degree to which the conduct affected one or more students' education; the type, frequency, and duration of the conduct; the identity of the relationship between the alleged harasser and the subject or subjects of the harassment; the number of individuals involved; the age and sex of the alleged harasser and the subject or subjects of the harassment; the size of the school, location of the incidents, and context in which they occurred; other incidents at the school; and incidents of gender-based, but nonsexual harassment).

---

a hostile environment has been created and argued that schools should continue to use these factors to evaluate conduct in order to draw common sense conclusions about what conduct is actionable.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges, as has the Supreme Court, that both Title VII and Title IX prohibit sex discrimination. Significant differences in these statutes, however,

lead to different standards for actionable harassment in the workplace, and in schools, colleges, and universities. The Department disagrees with commenters who asserted that an identical standard for prohibited conduct in the workplace and in an educational environment is the appropriate outcome. In the elementary and secondary school context, students and recipients benefit from an approach to non-discrimination law that distinguishes between school and workplace settings.[663] In the higher education context, as some commenters noted, students and faculty must be able to discuss sexual issues even if that offends some people who hear the discussion.[664] Similarly, as a commenter stated, the Supreme Court rejected the idea that "First Amendment protections

---

[663] See Davis, 526 U.S. at 650 ("Courts, moreover, must bear in mind that schools are unlike the adult workplace and that children may regularly interact in a manner that would be unacceptable among adults. . . . Indeed, at least early on, students are still learning how to interact appropriately with their peers.").
[664] See Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443 (2011).

should apply with less force on college campuses than in the community at large. Quite to the contrary, 'the vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools.'"[665] Thus, even vulgar or indecent college speech is protected.[666] The Davis standard ensures that speech and expressive conduct is not peremptorily

---

[665] Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 180 (1972) (internal citation omitted).
[666] Papish v. Bd. of Curators, 410 U.S. 667 (1973).

chilled or restricted, yet may be punishable when the speech becomes serious enough to lose protected status under the First Amendment.[667] The rationale for preventing a hostile workplace environment free from any severe or pervasive sexual harassment that alters conditions of employment does not raise the foregoing concerns (i.e., allowing for the social and

---

[667] The Department notes that requiring severity, pervasiveness, objective offensiveness, and resulting denial of equal access to education for a victim, matches the seriousness of conduct and consequences of other types of speech unprotected by the First Amendment, such as fighting words, threats, and defamation.

developmental growth of young students learning how to interact with peers in the elementary and secondary school context; fostering robust exchange of speech, ideas, and beliefs in a college setting). Thus, the Department does not believe that aligning the definitions of sexual harassment under Title VII and Title IX furthers the purpose of Title IX or benefits students and employees

participating in education programs or activities.[668]

The Davis standard embodied in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition differs from the third prong prohibiting sexual assault (and in the final regulations, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking) because the latter conduct is not required to be evaluated for severity, pervasiveness, offensiveness, or causing a denial of equal access; rather, the latter conduct is assumed to deny equal access to education and its prohibition raises no constitutional concerns. In this manner, the final regulations obligate recipients to respond to single instances of sexual assault and sex-related violence more broadly than employers' response obligations under Title VII, where even physical conduct must be severe or pervasive and alter the conditions of employment, to be actionable.[669] The Department therefore disagrees that the final regulations provide students less protection against sexual assault than employees receive in a workplace, or that sexual assault is tolerated to a greater extent under these Title IX regulations than under Title VII.

---

[668] See Azhar Majeed, The Misapplication of Peer Harassment Law on College and University Campuses and the Loss of Student Speech Rights, 35 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 385, 449 (2009) (arguing that restrictions on workplace speech "ultimately do not take away from the workplace's essential functions – to achieve the desired results, make the client happy, and get the job done" and free expression in the workplace "is typically not necessary for that purpose" such that workplaces are often "highly regulated environments" while "[o]n the other hand, freedom of speech and unfettered discussion are so essential to a college or university that compromising them fundamentally alters the campus environment to the detriment of everyone in the community" such that free speech and academic freedom are necessary preconditions to a university's success.).

---

[669] E.g., Meritor, 477 U.S. at 67 ("not all workplace conduct that may be described as harassment affects a term, condition, or privilege of employment within the meaning of Title VII") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); Brooks v. City of San Mateo, 229 F.3d 917, 927 (9th Cir. 2000) (where the plaintiff alleged a sexual assault in the form of fondling plaintiff's breast: "The harassment here was an entirely isolated incident. It had no precursors, and it was never repeated. In no sense can it be said that the city imposed upon Brooks the onerous terms of employment for which Title VII offers a remedy."). Under the final regulations, a single instance of sexual assault (which includes fondling) requires a recipient's prompt response, including offering the complainant supportive measures and informing the complainant of the option of filing a formal complaint. § 106.30 (defining "sexual harassment" to include "sexual assault"); § 106.44(a).

For reasons discussed above and in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the Davis definition in § 106.30 provides a definition for non-quid pro quo, non-Clery Act/VAWA offense sexual harassment better aligned with the purpose of Title IX than the definition of hostile environment harassment in the 2001 Guidance or the withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter. The Davis Court carefully crafted its formulation of actionable sexual harassment under Title IX for private lawsuits under Title IX, and the Department is persuaded by the Supreme Court's reasoning that administrative enforcement of Title IX is similarly best served by requiring a recipient to respond to sexual harassment that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education. The Department believes that rooting a definition of sexual harassment in the Supreme Court's interpretation of Title IX provides more clarity without unnecessarily chilling speech and expressive conduct; these advantages are lacking in the looser definitions used in Department guidance. The Davis definition in § 106.30 utilizes the phrase unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex, which is broader than the "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" phrase used in Department guidance.[670] The other elements in § 106.30 (severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive) provide a standard of evaluation more precise than the "sufficiently serious" description in Department guidance, yet serve a similar purpose – ensuring that conduct addressed as a Title IX civil rights issue represents serious conduct unprotected by the First Amendment or principles of free speech and academic freedom. As discussed further below, the "effectively denies a person equal access" element in § 106.30 has the advantage of being adopted from the Supreme Court's interpretation of Title IX, yet does not act as a more stringent element than the "interferes with or limits a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's programs" language found in Department guidance. The Department does not believe that recipients will err on the side of ignoring reports of conduct that might be considered severe and pervasive, and believes that a prohibition on any unwelcome sexual conduct would sweep up speech and expression protected by the First Amendment, and require schools to intervene in situations that do not present a threat to equal educational access. Because the § 106.30 definition provides precise standards for evaluating actionable harassment focused on whether sexual harassment has deprived a person of equal educational access, the Department believes it is unnecessary to list the factors from the 2001 Guidance that purport to evaluate whether a hostile environment has been created.

[670] As noted by some commenters, sex-based harassment includes unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature but also includes unwelcome conduct devoid of sexual content that targets a particular sex. The final regulations use the phrase "sexual harassment" to encompass both unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature, and other forms of unwelcome conduct "on the basis of sex." § 106.30 (defining "sexual harassment").

Changes: None.

Comments: Many commenters believed that the second prong of the § 106.30 definition means that rape and sexual assault incidents will be scrutinized for severity and set a "pain scale" for sexual assault such that only severe sexual assault will be recognized under Title IX, or that a definition that requires a school to intervene only if sexual violence is "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" means that someone would need to be repeatedly, violently raped before the school would act to support the survivor.

Many commenters criticized the second prong of the § 106.30 definition

by asserting that, under that standard, only the most severe harassment situations will be investigated, which will reduce and chill reporting of sexual harassment when sexual harassment is already underreported. Many such commenters argued that victims will be afraid to report because the school will scrutinize whether the harassment suffered was "bad enough" and that instead the Department needs to err on the side of caution by including more, not less, conduct as reportable harassment. Many commenters similarly argued that many victims are already unsure of whether their experience qualifies as serious enough to report and therefore narrowing the definition will only discourage victims from reporting unwanted sexual conduct. Many commenters argued that a broad definition of sexual harassment is needed because research shows that students are unlikely to report when their experience does not match common beliefs about what rape is, and because even "less severe" forms of harassment may also lead to negative outcomes and increase a victim's risk of further victimization. Similarly, some commenters noted that research shows that victims already minimize their experiences[671] and knowing that school administrators will be judging their report for whether it is really serious, really pervasive, and really objectively offensive, will result in more victims feeling dissuaded from reporting due to uncertainty about whether their report will meet the definition or not.

[671] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct iv (Westat 2015) ("More than 50 percent of the victims of even the most serious incidents (e.g., forced penetration) say they do not report the event because they do not consider it 'serious enough.'").

Several commenters argued that the Federal government should stand by a zero-tolerance policy against sexual harassment, and that applying a narrow definition means that some forms of harassment are acceptable, contrary to Title IX's bar on sex discrimination. Several commenters argued that the § 106.30 definition will allow abusers to do everything just short of the narrowed standard while keeping their victims in a hostile environment, further silencing victims.

A few commenters stated that if a student believes conduct "makes me feel uncomfortable," that should be sufficient to require the school to respond. At least one commenter suggested that the final regulations provide guidance on what misconduct is actionable by using behavioral measures such as the Sexual

Experiences Survey[672] or the Sexual Experiences Questionnaire.[673]

At least one commenter argued that the language of offensiveness and severity clouds the necessary understanding of unequal power relations and negates a culture of consent. Several commenters asserted that a definition of sexual harassment

---

[672] Commenters cited: Mary Koss & Cheryl J. Oros, Sexual Experiences Survey: A research instrument investigating sexual aggression and victimization, 50 JOURNAL OF CONSULTING & CLINICAL PSYCHOL. 3 (1982).
[673] Commenters cited: Louise Fitzgerald et al., Measuring sexual harassment: Theoretical and psychometric advances, 17 BASIC & APPLIED SOCIAL PSYCHOL. 4 (1995).

that holds up only the dramatic and extreme as worthy of investigation would do little to change rape culture. Many commenters argued that while individual acts are rarely pervasive, individual acts across a society can result in pervasiveness throughout society so that what seem like one-off or minor incidents, or "normal" sexual gestures and conventions, actually do create a pervasive rape culture because they are rooted in patriarchy (for example, a culture that accepts statements like “these women come to parties to get laid”), misunderstanding or ignorance of consent (for example, “she didn’t say no” despite several cues of discomfort and unwillingness), and lack of support from authority figures (for example, reactions from school personnel like “boys will be boys,” or “this is just college campus culture”).

Some commenters argued that to achieve a drop in cases of sexual misconduct, even seemingly minor incidents that make women feel threatened need to be taken seriously.

Similarly, a few commenters argued that the threat of potential violence against women permeates American society and interferes with educational equity. At least one commenter argued that young women already are affected in many ways by the constant presence of potential violence, such that women feel that they cannot be alone with another student for study group purposes, with a teaching assistant to get extra help, or with a professor during office hours. This commenter further stated that young women already do not feel safe attending an academic function if it means walking to her car in the dark, or collaborating online for fear of enduring cyber harassment. A few commenters argued that a narrow definition of harassment ignores the scope of gender-based violence in our society and does nothing to address patterns of harassment as opposed to just an individual case that moves through a formal process.

A few commenters asserted by adding the "and" between "severe, pervasive and objectively offensive"

survivors will be forced to quantify their suffering to fit into an imaginary scale determined according to a pass or fail rubric and artificially create categories of legitimate and illegitimate misconduct, when misconduct that is either severe or pervasive or objectively offensive should be more than enough to warrant stopping the misconduct. Many commenters opined that the § 106.30 definition sets an arbitrary and unnecessarily high threshold for when conduct would even constitute harassment. Many commenters viewed the § 106.30 definition as raising the burden of proof on victims to an unnecessary degree, making their reporting process more strenuous and exhausting, and requiring survivors to prove their abuse is worthy of attention. Other commenters noted that the burden is on recipients to show the severity of the reported conduct yet asserted that survivors will still feel pressured to present their complaint in a certain way in order to be perceived as credible enough. A few commenters asserted that this raises concerns especially for people with disabilities, who may react to and communicate about trauma differently. At least one commenter stated that to the extent that the § 106.30 definition is in response to the perception that students and Title IX Coordinators have been pursuing a lot of formal complaints over low-level harassment, such a perception is inaccurate.

Many commenters argued that what is severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive leaves too much room for interpretation and will be subject to the biases of Title IX Coordinators and other school administrators. Another

commenter expressed concern that schools would have too much discretion to decide whether conduct was severe, pervasive, and offensive and this will lead to arbitrary decisions to turn away reporting parties. Several commenters asserted that permitting administrators to judge the severity, pervasiveness, and offensiveness of reported conduct will foster a culture of institutional betrayal because some institutions will choose to investigate misconduct while others will not. A few commenters asserted that courts have found some unwanted sexual behavior (for example, a supervisor forcibly kissing an employee) is not severe and pervasive even though such behavior may constitute criminal assault or battery under State laws and that a definition of sexual harassment must at least cover misconduct that would be considered criminal.

Several commenters argued that a narrow definition would contribute to the overall effect of the proposed rules to eliminate most sexual harassment from coverage under Title IX, to the point of absurdity. Several commenters asserted that research shows that narrow definitions of sexual assault indicate that reports will decrease while underlying violence does not decrease.[674] At least one commenter argued that the proposed rules seek to use a single definition of sexual harassment in all settings, from prekindergarten all the way up to graduate school, and this lack of a nuanced approach fails to take into account the vast developmental differences between children, young adults, and college and graduate students. One commenter stated that especially for community college students, whose connections to a physical campus and its resources can be limited, a narrower definition of sexual harassment with "severe and pervasive" rather than "severe or pervasive" could make it harder for reporting parties to prove their victimization.

---

[674] Commenters cited: Mary P. Koss, The Scope of Rape: Incidence and Prevalence of Sexual Aggression and Victimization in a National Sample of Higher Education Students, 55 JOURNAL OF CONSULTING & CLINICAL PSYCHOL. 2 (1987).

One commenter asserted that conduct that may not be considered severe in an isolated instance can qualify as severe when that conduct is pervasive, because "severe" and "pervasive" should not always entail two separate inquiries. One commenter suggested that the second prong of § 106.30 be changed to mirror the Title IX statute, by using the phrase "causes a person to be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity."

Discussion: The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that sexual assault (which includes rape) is referenced in the third prong of the § 106.30 definition of "sexual harassment," while the Davis standard (with the elements of severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive) is the second prong. This means that any report of sexual assault (including rape) is not subject to the Davis elements of whether the incident was "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive." Thus, contrary to commenters' concerns, the final regulations do not require rape or sexual assault incidents to be "scrutinized for severity," rated on a pain scale, or leave students to be repeatedly or violently raped before a recipient must intervene.

The Department intentionally did not want to leave students (or employees) wondering if a single act of sexual assault might not meet the Davis standard, and therefore included sexual assault (and, in the final regulations, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking) as a stand-alone type of sexual harassment that does not need to demonstrate severity, pervasiveness, objective offensiveness, or denial of equal access to education, because denial of equal access is assumed. Complainants can feel confident turning to their school, college, or university to report and receive supportive measures in the wake of a sexual assault, without wondering whether sexual assault is "bad enough" to report. The Department understands that research shows that rape victims often do not report due to misconceptions about what rape is (e.g., a misconception that rape must involve violence inflicted by a stranger), and that rape victims may minimize their own experience and not report sexual assault, for a number of reasons.[675] The definition of sexual assault referenced in § 106.30 broadly defines sexual assault to include all forcible and nonforcible sex offenses described in the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting system. Those

---

[675] The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct iv (Westat 2015) ("More than 50 percent of the victims of even the most serious incidents (e.g., forced penetration) say they do not report the event because they do not consider it "serious enough.").

offenses do not require an element of physical force or violence, but rather turn on lack of consent of the victim. The Department believes that these definitions form a sufficiently broad definition of sexual assault that reflects the range of sexually violative experiences that traumatize victims and deny equal access to education. The Department believes that by utilizing a broad definition of sexual assault, these

final regulations will contribute to greater understanding on the part of victims and perpetrators as to the type of conduct that constitutes sexual assault. The FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting system similarly does not exclude from sexual assault perpetration by a person known to the victim (whether as an acquaintance, romantic date, or intimate partner relationship), and the final regulations' express inclusion of dating violence and domestic violence reinforces the reality that sex-based violence is often perpetrated by persons known to the victim rather than by strangers.

As to unwelcome conduct that is not quid pro quo harassment, and is not a Clery Act/VAWA offense included in § 106.30, the Davis standard embodied in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition applies. The Department understands commenters' concerns that this means that only "the most severe" harassment situations will be investigated and that complainants will feel deterred from reporting non-sexual assault harassment due to wondering if the harassment is "bad enough" to be covered under Title IX. The Department understands that research shows that even "less severe" forms of sexual harassment may cause negative outcomes for those who experience it. The Department believes, however, that severity and pervasiveness are needed elements to ensure that Title IX's non-discrimination mandate does not punish verbal conduct in a manner that chills and restricts speech and academic freedom, and that recipients are not held responsible for controlling every stray, offensive remark that passes between members of the recipient's community.

The Department does not believe that evaluating verbal harassment situations for severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness will chill reporting of unwelcome conduct, because recipients retain discretion to respond to reported situations not covered under Title IX. Thus, recipients may encourage students (and employees) to report any unwanted conduct and determine whether a recipient must respond under Title IX, or chooses to respond under a non-Title IX policy.

The Department believes that the Supreme Court's Gebser and Davis opinions provide the appropriate principles to guide the Department with respect to appropriate interpretation and enforcement of Title IX as a non-sex discrimination statute. Title IX is not an anti-sexual harassment statute; Title IX

prohibits sex discrimination in education programs or activities. The Supreme Court has held that sexual harassment may constitute sex discrimination under Title IX, but only when the sexual harassment is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person's equal access to education. Title IX does not represent a "zero tolerance" policy banning sexual harassment as such, but does exist to provide effective protections to individuals against discriminatory practices, within the parameters set forth under the Title IX statute (20 U.S.C. 1681 et seq.) and Supreme Court case law. While the Supreme Court interpreted the level of harassment differently under Title VII than under Title IX, neither Federal non-sex discrimination civil rights law represents a "zero-tolerance" policy banning all sexual harassment.[676] Rather, interpretations of both Title VII and Title IX focus on sexual harassment that constitutes sex discrimination interfering with equal participation in a workplace or educational environment, respectively. Contrary to the concerns of [676] E.g., Chesier v. On Q Financial Inc., 382 F. Supp. 3d 918, 925-26 (D. Ariz. 2019) (reviewing Title VII cases involving single instances of sexual harassment determined not to be sufficiently severe enough to affect a term of employment under Title VII) ("not all workplace conduct that may be described as 'harassment' affects a term, condition, or privilege of employment within the meaning of Title VII. . . . For sexual harassment to be actionable, it must be sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of [the victim's] employment and create an abusive working environment.") (citing to Meritor, 477 U.S. at 67) (emphasis and brackets in original); Julie Davies, Assessing Institutional Responsibility for Sexual Harassment in Education, 77 TULANE L. REV. 387, 398, 407 (2002) ("Although the Court adopted different standards for institutional liability under Titles VII and IX, several themes serve as leitmotifs, running through the cases regardless of the technical differences. Neither Title VII nor Title IX is construed as a federal civility statute; the Court does not want entities to be obliged to litigate cases where plaintiffs have been subjected to 'minor' annoyances and insults.") (internal citation omitted).

---

commenters, the fact that not every instance of sexual harassment violates Title VII or Title IX does not mean that sexual harassment not covered under one of those laws is "acceptable" or encourages perpetration of sexual harassment.[677] The Department does not believe that parameters around what constitutes actionable sexual harassment under a Federal civil rights statute creates an environment where abusers "do everything just short of the narrowed standard" to torment and silence victims. A course of unwelcome conduct directed at a victim to keep the victim fearful or silenced likely crosses over into "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" conduct actionable under Title IX. Whether or not misconduct is actionable under Title IX,

---

[677] See, e.g., Brooks v. City of San Mateo, 229 F.3d 917, 927 (9th Cir. 2000) ("Our holding in no way condones [the supervisor's] actions. Quite the opposite: The conduct of which [the plaintiff] complains was highly reprehensible. But, while [the supervisor] clearly harassed [the plaintiff] as she tried to do her job, not all workplace conduct that may be described as harassment affects a term, condition, or privilege of employment within the meaning of Title VII. The harassment here was an entirely isolated incident. It had no precursors, and it was never repeated. In no sense can it be said that the city imposed upon [the plaintiff] the onerous terms of employment for which Title VII offers a remedy.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

it may be actionable under another part of a recipient's code of conduct (e.g., anti-bullying). These final regulations only prescribe a recipient's mandatory response to conduct that does meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment; these final regulations do not preclude a recipient from addressing other types of misconduct.

For the same reasons that Title IX does not stand as a zero-tolerance ban on all sexual harassment, Title IX does not stand as a Federal civil rights law to prevent all conduct that "makes me feel uncomfortable." The Supreme Court noted in Davis that school children regularly engage in "insults, banter, teasing, shoving, pushing, and gender-specific conduct that is upsetting to the students subjected to it" yet a school is liable under Title IX for responding to such behavior only when the conduct is

"so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it denies its victims the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect."[678] Though not specifically in the Title IX context, the Supreme Court has noted that speech and expression do not lose First Amendment protections on college

---

[678] Davis, 526 U.S. at 650-51*; see also* Azhar Majeed, The Misapplication of Peer Harassment Law on College and University Campuses and the Loss of Student Speech Rights, 35 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 385, 399 (2009) ("misapplication of harassment law . . . has contributed to a sense among students that there is a general 'right' not to be offended' – a false notion that ill serves students as they transition from the relatively insulated college or university setting to the larger society. Colleges and universities too often address the problems of sexual and racial harassment by targeting any expression which may be perceived by another as offensive or undesirable.") (citing Alan Charles Kors & Harvey A. Silverglate, The Shadow University: The Betrayal of Liberty on America's Campuses (Free Press 1998) ("At almost every college and university, students deemed members of 'historically oppressed groups' . . . are informed during orientations that their campuses are teeming with illegal or intolerable violations of their 'right' not to be offended.")).

campuses, and in fact, colleges and universities represent environments where it is especially important to encourage free exchange of ideas, viewpoints, opinions, and beliefs.[679] The Department believes that the Davis formulation, applied to unwelcome

---

[679] Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 180-81 (1972) ("At the outset we note that state colleges and universities are not enclaves immune from the sweep of the First Amendment. 'It can hardly be argued that either students or teachers shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate.' Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Cmty. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 506 (1969). Of course, as Mr. Justice Fortas made clear in Tinker, First Amendment rights must always be applied 'in light of the special characteristics of the . . . environment in the particular case.' Ibid. And, where state-operated educational institutions are involved, this Court has long recognized 'the need for affirming the comprehensive authority of the States and of school officials, consistent with fundamental constitutional safeguards, to prescribe and control conduct in the schools.' Id., at 507. Yet, the precedents of this Court leave no room for the view that, because of the acknowledged need for order, First Amendment protections should apply with less force on college campuses than in the community at large. Quite to the contrary, '(t)he vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools.' The college classroom with its surrounding environs is peculiarly the 'marketplace of ideas,' and we break no new constitutional ground in reaffirming this Nation's dedication to safeguarding academic freedom.") (internal citations omitted).

conduct that is not quid pro quo harassment and not a Clery Act/VAWA offense included in § 106.30, appropriately safeguards free speech and academic freedom,[680] while [680] As noted in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department is aware that Title IX applies to all recipients operating education programs or activities regardless of a recipient's status as a public institution with obligations to students and employees under the U.S. Constitution or as a private institution not subject to the U.S. Constitution. However, the principles of free speech, and of academic freedom, are crucial in the context of both public and private institutions. E.g., Kelly Sarabynal, 39 JOURNAL OF L. & EDUC. 145, 145, 181-82 (2010) (noting that "The vast majority of [public and private] universities in the United States promote themselves as institutions of free speech and thought, construing censorship as antipathetic to their search for knowledge") and observing that where public universities restrict speech (for example, through anti-harassment or anti-hate speech codes) the First Amendment "solves the conflict between a university's policies promising free speech and its speech-restrictive policies by rendering the speech-restrictive policies unconstitutional" and arguing that as to private universities, First Amendment principles embodied in a private university's policies should be enforced contractually against the university so that private liberal arts and research universities are held "to their official promises of free speech" which leaves private institutions control over changing their official promises of free speech if they so choose, for instance if the private institution expects students to "abide by the dictates of the university's ideology"). The Department is obligated to interpret and enforce Federal laws consistent with the U.S. Constitution. E.g., Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. and Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 574-575 (1988) (refusing to give deference to an agency's interpretation of a statute where the interpretation raised First Amendment concerns); 2001 Guidance at 22. While the Department has recognized the importance of responding to sexual harassment under Title IX while protecting free speech and academic freedom since 2001, as explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, protection of free speech and academic freedom was weakened by the Department's use of wording that differed from the Davis definition of what constitutes actionable sexual harassment under Title IX and for reasons discussed in this section of the preamble, these final regulations return to the Davis definition verbatim, while also protecting against even single instances of quid pro quo harassment and Clery/VAWA offenses, which are not entitled to First Amendment protection.

requiring recipients to respond even to verbal conduct so serious that it loses First Amendment protection and denies equal access to the recipient's educational benefits.

While the Department appreciates a commenter's suggestion to describe prohibited conduct by references to terms used in the Sexual Experiences Survey or the Sexual Experiences

Questionnaire,[681] for the above reasons the Department believes that the better formulation of prohibited conduct under Title IX is captured in § 106.30, prohibiting conduct on the basis of sex that is either quid pro quo harassment, unwelcome conduct so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education, or sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking under the Clery Act and VAWA.

---

[681] Mary Koss & Cheryl J. Oros, Sexual Experiences Survey: A research instrument investigating sexual aggression and victimization, 50 JOURNAL OF CONSULTING & CLINICAL PSYCHOL. 3 (1982) (discussing survey questions designed to assess experiences with sexual harassment consisting of a series of questions about whether a respondent has encountered specific examples of sexual behavior); Louise Fitzgerald et al., Measuring sexual harassment: Theoretical and psychometric advances, 17 BASIC & APPLIED SOCIAL PSYCHOL. 4 (1995).

The Department understands commenters' concerns that the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, and the Davis standard in the second prong particularly, does not sufficiently acknowledge unequal power relations and societal factors that contribute to perpetuation of violence against women, and commenters' arguments that in order to reduce the prevalence of sexual misconduct across society even minor-seeming incidents should be taken seriously. The Department believes that the Supreme Court's recognition of sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination[682] represents an important acknowledgement that sexual harassment often is not a matter of private, individualized misbehavior but is representative of sex-based notions and attitudes that contribute to systemic sex discrimination. However, the Department heeds the Supreme Court's interpretation of sexual harassment as sex discrimination under Title IX, premised on conditions that hold recipients liable for how to respond to sexual harassment. The § 106.30

[682] E.g., Meritor, 477 U.S. at 64 ("Without question, when a supervisor sexually harasses a subordinate because of the subordinate's sex, that supervisor 'discriminate[s]' on the basis of sex."); Gebser, 524 U.S. at 283 (reference in Franklin to Meritor "was made with regard to the general proposition that sexual harassment can constitute discrimination on the basis of sex under Title IX, . . . an issue not in dispute here.") (internal citations omitted).

definition of sexual harassment adopts the Supreme Court's Davis definition, adapted under the Department's administrative enforcement authority to provide broader protections for students (i.e., by ensuring that quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA offenses included in § 106.30 count as sexual harassment without meeting the Davis standard). Similarly, the Department believes that by clearly defining sexual harassment to include sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking, affected parties will understand that no instance of sexual violence is tolerated under Title IX and may reduce the fear commenters described being felt by some young women participating in educational activities that involve proximity with fellow students or professors.

The Department does not believe that the § 106.30 definition creates categories of "legitimate" sexual misconduct or makes victims prove that their abuse is worthy of attention. The three-pronged definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30 captures physical and verbal conduct serious enough to warrant the label "abuse," and thereby assures complainants that sex-based abuse is worthy of attention and intervention by a complainant's school, college, or university. The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that the burden of describing or proving elements of the § 106.30 definition does not fall on complainants; there is no magic language needed to "present" a report or formal complaint in a particular way to trigger a recipient's response obligations. Rather, the burden is on recipients to evaluate reports of sexual harassment in a common sense manner with respect to whether the facts of an incident constitute one (or more) of the three types of misconduct described in § 106.30. This includes taking into account a complainant's age, disability status, and other factors that may affect how an individual complainant describes or communicates about a situation involving unwelcome sex-based conduct.

The Department disagrees with commenters' contention that § 106.30 gives school officials too much discretion to decide whether conduct was severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive or that these elements will lead to arbitrary decisions to turn away reporting parties based on biases of school administrators, fostering a culture of institutional betrayal, or that the § 106.30 definition eliminates "most" sexual harassment from coverage under Title IX, or that this definition is problematic because not all unwanted sexual behavior is severe and pervasive. Elements of severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness must be evaluated in light of the known circumstances and depend on the facts of each situation, but must be determined from the perspective of a reasonable person standing in the shoes of the complainant. The final regulations revise the second prong of the § 106.30 definition to state that the Davis elements must be determined under a reasonable person standard. Title IX Coordinators are specifically required under the final regulations to serve impartially, without bias for or against complainants or respondents generally

or for or against an individual complainant or respondent.[683] A recipient that responds to a report of sexual harassment in a manner that is clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances violates the final regulations,[684] incentivizing Title IX Coordinators and other recipient officials to carefully, thoughtfully, and reasonably evaluate each complainant's report or formal complaint.

[683] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).
[684] Section 106.44(a).

The Department appreciates commenters' contention that recipients' Title IX offices have not been processing great quantities of "low-level" harassment cases; however, if that is accurate, then the § 106.30 definition simply will continue to ensure that sexual harassment is adequately addressed under Title IX, for the benefit of victims of sexual harassment. Far from excluding "most" sexual harassment from Title IX coverage, the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30 requires recipients to respond to three separate broadly-defined categories of sexual harassment. While not all unwanted sexual conduct is both severe and pervasive, as explained above, the Supreme Court has long acknowledged that not all misconduct amounts to sex discrimination prohibited by Federal civil rights laws like Title VII and Title IX, even where the misconduct amounts to a criminal violation under State law.[685] Where a Federal civil rights law does not find sexual harassment to also constitute prohibited sex discrimination, this does not mean the conduct is acceptable or [685] See, e.g., Brooks v. City of San Mateo, 229 F.3d 917, 924, 927 (9th Cir. 2000) (Plaintiff alleged a workplace sexual assault in the form of a supervisor fondling plaintiff's breast, which is "egregious" and the perpetrator "spent time in jail" for the assault, yet the Court held that "[t]he harassment here was an entirely isolated incident. It had no precursors, and it was never repeated. In no sense can it be said that the city imposed upon [the plaintiff] the onerous terms of employment for which Title VII offers a remedy."); see also Davis, 526 U.S. at 634 (noting that the peer harasser in that case was charged with, and pled guilty to, sexual battery, yet still evaluating the harassment by whether it amounted to severe, pervasive, objectively offensive conduct).

---

does not constitute a different violation, such as assault or battery, under non-sex discrimination laws. The Department does not believe that the § 106.30 definition of sexual assault is a "narrow" definition, as it includes all forcible and nonforcible sex offenses described in the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting system and thus this definition will not discourage reporting of sexual assault.

The Department disagrees that it is inappropriate to use a uniform definition of sexual harassment in elementary and secondary school and postsecondary institution contexts. No person, of any age or educational level, should endure quid pro quo harassment, severe, pervasive, objectively offensive unwelcome conduct, or a Clery Act/VAWA offense included in § 106.30, without recourse from their school, college, or university. The § 106.30 definition applies equally in every educational setting, yet the definition may be applied in a common sense manner that takes into account the ages and developmental abilities of the involved parties.

The Department disagrees with a commenter's contention that community college students will find it more difficult to report sexual harassment because such students have less of a connection to a physical campus. Under § 106.8 of the final regulations, contact information for the Title IX Coordinator, including an office address, telephone number, and e-mail address, must be posted on the recipient's website, and that provision expressly states that any person may report sexual harassment by using the Title IX Coordinator's contact information. We believe this will simplify the process for community college students, as well as other complainants, to make a report to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator.

The Department disagrees with a commenter's assertion that pervasiveness necessarily transforms harassment into also being severe, because these elements are separate inquiries; however, the Department reiterates that a course of conduct reported as sexual harassment must be evaluated in the context of the particular factual circumstances, under a reasonable person standard, when determining whether the conduct is both severe and pervasive. The Department appreciates a commenter's suggestion to revise the second prong of the § 106.30 definition by stating that severe, pervasive, objectively offensive conduct counts when it "causes a person to be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity" instead of "effectively denies a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity" to more closely mirror the language in the Title IX statute. However, as discussed above, the Department notes that when considering sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination under Title IX, the Supreme Court in Davis repeatedly used the "denial of equal access" phrase to describe when sexual harassment is actionable, implying that this is the equivalent of a violation of Title IX's prohibition on exclusion from participation, denial of benefits, and/or subjection to discrimination.[686] We

---

[686] Davis, 526 U.S. at 650 ("The statute's other prohibitions, moreover, help give content to the term 'discrimination' in this context. Students are not only protected from discrimination, but also specifically shielded from being 'excluded from participation in' or 'denied the benefits of' any 'education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.' 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a). The statute makes clear that, whatever else it prohibits, students must not be denied access to educational benefits and opportunities on the basis of gender. We thus conclude that

believe this element as articulated by the Davis Court thus represents the full scope and intent of the Title IX statute.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment by specifying that the elements in the Davis definition of sexual harassment (severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, and funding recipients are properly held liable in damages only where they are deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment, of which they have actual knowledge, that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it can be said to deprive the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school."); id. at 644-45 (holding that a recipient is liable where its "deliberate indifference 'subjects' its students to harassment – "[t]hat is, the deliberate indifference must, at a minimum, 'cause [students] to undergo' harassment or 'make them liable or vulnerable' to it."); id. at 650-652 (expressing the denial of access element in different ways as "depriv[ing] the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school," "effectively den[ying] equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities," and "den[ying] its victims the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect.").

---

denial of equal access) are determined under a reasonable person standard.

Comments: Several commenters described State laws under which a recipient is required to respond to a broader range of misconduct than what meets the Davis standard, and stated that the NPRM places recipients in a "Catch-22" by requiring recipients to dismiss cases that do not meet the narrower § 106.30 definition; one such commenter urged the Department to either broaden the definition of sexual harassment or remove the mandatory dismissal provision in § 106.45(b)(3). A few commenters requested clarification on whether a school may choose to include a wider range of misconduct than conduct that meets this definition. Many commenters urged the Department not to prevent recipients from addressing misconduct that does not meet the § 106.30 definition because State laws and institutional policies often require recipients to respond. A few commenters asserted that even if the final regulations allow recipients to choose to address misconduct that does not meet the § 106.30 definition, this creates two different processes and standards (one for "Title IX sexual harassment" and one for other sexual misconduct) which will lead to confusion and inefficiency. At least one commenter stated that the Title IX equitable process should be used for all sexual misconduct violations such that the final regulations should allow recipients to use that process for Title IX, VAWA, Clery Act, and State law sex and gender offenses under a single campus policy and process. At least one commenter recommended that the Department clarify that the final regulations establish minimum Federal standards for responses to sex discrimination and that recipients retain discretion to exceed those minimum standards.

Discussion: The Department is aware that various State laws define actionable sexual harassment differently than the § 106.30 definition, and that the NPRM's mandatory dismissal provision created confusion among commenters as to whether the NPRM purported to forbid a recipient from addressing conduct that does not constitute sexual harassment under § 106.30. In response to commenters' concerns, the final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(3)(i)[687] to clearly state that dismissal for Title IX purposes does not preclude action under another provision of the [687] Section 106.45(b)(3)(i) ("The recipient must investigate the allegations in a formal complaint. If the conduct alleged by the complainant would not constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 even if proved, did not occur in the recipient's education program or activity, or did not occur against a person in the United States, then the recipient must dismiss the formal complaint with regard to that conduct for purposes of sexual harassment under title IX or this part; such a dismissal does not preclude action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct.") (emphasis added).

---

recipient's code of conduct. Thus, if a recipient is required under State law or the recipient's own policies to investigate sexual or other misconduct that does not meet the § 106.30 definition, the final regulations clarify that a recipient may do so. Similarly, if a recipient wishes to use a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 to resolve allegations of misconduct that do not constitute sexual harassment under § 106.30, nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from doing so. Alternatively, a recipient may respond to non-Title IX misconduct under disciplinary procedures that do not comply with § 106.45. The final regulations leave recipients flexibility in this regard, and prescribe a particular grievance process only where allegations concern sexual harassment covered by Title IX. The Department does not agree that this results in inefficiency or confusion, because so long as a recipient complies with these final regulations for Title IX purposes, a recipient retains discretion as to how to address non-Title IX misconduct. Because the final regulations extend the § 106.30 definition to include all four Clery Act/VAWA offenses (sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, stalking), the Title IX grievance process will apply to formal complaints alleging the Clery Act/VAWA offenses included in § 106.30, and recipients may choose to use the same process for State-law offenses, too.

The Department appreciates a commenter's suggestion to clarify (and does so here) that the final regulations establish Federal standards for responding to sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment, and recipients retain discretion to respond to more conduct than what these final regulations require.

Changes: The final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(3)(i) to clearly state that dismissal for Title IX purposes does not preclude action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct.

Comments: Many commenters opposed the second prong of the § 106.30 sexual harassment definition by giving examples of harassing conduct that might not be covered. One such commenter stated that the "severe and pervasive" standard will conflict with elementary and secondary school anti-bullying policies, asserting that, for example, a classmate repeatedly taunting a girl about her breasts may not be considered both severe and pervasive enough to fall under the proposed rules, whereas a similarly- described scenario was clearly covered under the 2001 Guidance (at p. 6).

A few commenters raised examples such as snapping a girl's bra, casual jokes and comments of a sexual nature, or unwelcome e-mails with sexual content, which commenters asserted can be ignored under § 106.30 because the unwanted behavior might be considered not severe even though it is pervasive, leaving victims in a state of anxiety and negatively impacting victims' ability to access education.

One commenter asserted that under § 106.30, a professor whispering sexual comments to a female student would be "severe" but since it happened once it would not be "pervasive" so even if the female student felt alarmed and uncomfortable and dropped that class, the recipient would not be obligated to respond. The same commenter asserted that the following example would not be sexual harassment under § 106.30 because the conduct would be pervasive but not severe: a graduate assistant e-mails an undergraduate student multiple times per week for two months, commenting each time in detail about what the student wears and how she looks, making the student feel uncomfortable about the unwanted attention to the point where she drops the class.

One commenter described attending a holiday party for graduate students where a fellow student wore a shirt with the words "I'm just here for the gang bang" and while the offensive shirt did not prevent the commenter from continuing an education it made the commenter feel unsafe and showed how deep-seated toxic rape culture is on college campuses; the commenter contended that narrowing the definition of harassment will only perpetuate this culture.

One commenter recounted the experience of a friend who was drugged at a dorm party; the commenter contended that because the boys who drugged the girl did not also rape her, the situation would not even be investigated under the new Title IX rules

even though an incident of boys drugging a girl creates a dangerous, ongoing threat on campus.

One commenter urged the Department to authorize recipients to create lists of situations that constitute per se harassment, for example where a recipient receives multiple reports of students having their towels tugged away while walking to the dorm bathrooms, or reports of students lifting the skirts or dresses of other students. The commenter asserted that creating lists of such per se violations will create more consistent application of the harassment definition within recipient communities and address problematic situations that occur frequently at some institutions.

Discussion: In response to commenters who presented examples of misconduct that they believe may not be covered under the Davis standard in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition, the Department reiterates that whether or not an incident of unwanted sex-based conduct meets the Davis elements is a fact-based inquiry, dependent on the circumstances of the particular incident. However, the Department does not agree with some commenters who speculated that certain examples would not meet the Davis standard, and encourages recipients to use common sense in evaluating conduct under a reasonable person standard, by taking into account the ages and abilities of the individuals involved in an incident or course of conduct.

Furthermore, the Department reiterates that the Davis standard is only one of three categories of conduct on the basis of sex prohibited under § 106.30, and incidents that do not meet the Davis standard may therefore still constitute sexual harassment under § 106.30 (for example, as fondling, stalking, or quid pro quo harassment). The Department also reiterates that inappropriate or illegal behavior may be addressed by a recipient even if the conduct clearly does not meet the Davis standard or otherwise constitute sexual harassment under § 106.30, either under a recipient's own code of conduct or under criminal laws in a recipient's jurisdiction (e.g., with respect to a commenter's example of drugging at a dorm party).

The Department understands commenters' concerns that anything less than the broadest possible definition of actionable harassment may result in some situations that make a person feel unsafe or uncomfortable without legal recourse under Title IX;

however, for the reasons described above, the Department chooses to adopt the Supreme Court's approach to interpreting Title IX, which requires schools to respond to sexual harassment that jeopardizes the equal access to education promised by Title IX. Whether or not a college student wearing a t-shirt with an offensive slogan constitutes sexual harassment under Title IX, other students negatively impacted by the t-shirt are free to opine that such expression is inappropriate, and recipients remain free to utilize institutional speech to promote their values about respectful expressive activity.

The Department notes that nothing in the final regulations prevents a recipient from publishing a list of situations that a recipient has found to meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, to advise potential victims and potential perpetrators that particular conduct has been found to violate Title IX, or to create a similar list of situations that a recipient finds to be in violation of the recipient's own code of conduct even if the conduct does not violate Title IX.

Changes: None.

Comments: At least one commenter urged the Department to expressly include verbal sexual coercion in the §

106.30 definition of sexual harassment, noting that studies indicate that college women are likely to experience verbal sexual coercion as a tactic of sexual assault on a continuum ranging from non-forceful verbal tactics to incapacitation to physical force, and that studies indicate that verbal sexual coercion is the most common sexual assault tactic.[688]

---

[688] Commenters cited: Brandie Pugh & Patricia Becker, Exploring Definitions and Prevalence of Verbal Sexual Coercion and its Relationship to Consent to Unwanted Sex: Implications for Affirmative Consent Standards on College Campuses, 8 BEHAVIORAL SCI. 8 (2018).

One commenter insisted that the second prong of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment is too broad and contended that the Department should adopt the minority view in the Davis case, or alternatively change the second prong to "unwelcome physical conduct on the basis of sex that is so severe, and objectively offensive" (eliminating the word pervasive because a single act of a physical nature could trigger the statute while excluding purely verbal conduct from the definition).

At least one commenter suggested that the second prong should be subject to a general requirement of objective reasonableness; the commenter asserted that objective offensiveness is no substitute for requiring all the elements of the hostile environment claim be not only subjectively valid but also objectively reasonable. The

commenter asserted that the stakes are high: many complaints come to Title IX offices from students who sincerely believe that they have experienced sexual harassment, meeting any subjective test, but which cannot survive reasonableness scrutiny and thus objective reasonableness under all the circumstances is a necessary guard against arbitrary enforcement.

At least one commenter stated that subjective factors must be taken into consideration to decide if conduct is severe and pervasive because how severe the experience is to a particular victim depends on factors such as the status of the offender, the power the offender holds over the victim's life, the victim's prior history of trauma, or whether the victim has a support system for dealing with the trauma.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' concerns that verbal sexual coercion is the most common sexual assault tactic, but declines to list verbal coercion as an element of sexual harassment or sexual assault. As explained in the "Consent" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, the Department leaves flexibility to recipients to define consent as well as terms commonly used to describe the absence or negation of consent (e.g., incapacity, coercion, threat of force), in recognition that many recipients are under State laws requiring particular definitions of consent, and that other recipients desire flexibility to use definitions of consent and related terms that reflect the unique values of a recipient's educational community.

The Department disagrees with commenters who argued that the Davis standard is too broad and that the Department should adopt the dissenting viewpoint from the Davis decision. For reasons explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the Supreme Court appropriately described the conditions under which sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX, and the Department's goal through these final regulations is to impose requirements for recipients to provide meaningful, supportive responses fair to all parties when allegations of sexual harassment are brought to a recipient's attention. Similarly, the Department declines a commenter's recommendation to restrict the Davis standard solely to "physical" conduct because the Supreme Court has acknowledged that not all speech is protected by the First Amendment, and that verbal harassment can constitute sex discrimination requiring a response when it is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it denies a person equal access to education.

The Department is persuaded by commenters' recommendation that the second prong of the § 106.30 definition must be applied under a general reasonableness standard. We have revised § 106.30 to state that sexual harassment includes "unwelcome conduct" on the basis of sex "determined by a reasonable person" to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal educational access. We interpret the Davis standard formulated

in § 106.30 as subjective with respect to the unwelcomeness of the conduct (i.e., whether the complainant viewed the conduct as unwelcome), but as to elements of severity, pervasiveness, objective offensiveness, and denial of equal access, determinations are made by a reasonable person in the shoes of the complainant.[689] The Department

---

[689] See Davis, 526 U.S. at 653-54 (applying the severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, denial of access standard to the facts at issue under an objective) ("Petitioner alleges that her daughter was the victim of repeated acts of sexual harassment by G. F. over a 5-month period, and there are allegations in support of the conclusion that G. F.'s misconduct was severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive. The harassment was not only verbal; it included numerous acts of objectively offensive touching, and, indeed, G. F. ultimately pleaded guilty to criminal sexual misconduct. . . . Further, petitioner contends that the harassment had a concrete, negative effect on her daughter's ability to receive an education.").

believes this approach appropriately safeguards against arbitrary application, while taking into account the unique circumstances of each sexual harassment allegation.

Changes: We have revised the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment by specifying that the elements in the Davis standard (severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, and denial of equal access)

are determined under a reasonable person standard.

Comments: Many commenters opposed the § 106.30 definition on the ground that a narrow definition fails to stop harassing behavior before it escalates into more serious violations. Some commenters urged the Department to consider statistics regarding violent offenders who could be identified by examining their history of harassment that escalated over time into violence. Other commenters emphasized that sexual harassment is often a first stop on a continuum of violence and schools have a unique opportunity and duty to intervene early. At least one commenter asserted that the definition should be more in line with academic definitions of sexual harassment.[690] At least one commenter analogized to laws against drunk driving, asserting that such laws do not distinguish between instances where a driver is marginally above the legal intoxication limit from those where a driver is significantly above the limit; the commenter argued that just as all driving while intoxicated situations are dangerous, all harassment regardless of severity is dangerous. Another commenter likened the § 106.30 approach to choosing not to address a rodent infestation until the problem escalates and becomes costlier to redress.

---

[690] Commenters cited: Handbook for Achieving Gender Equity Through Education 215-229 (Susan G. Klein et al. eds., 2d ed. 2007).

A few commenters argued that waiting until sexually predatory behavior becomes extremely serious risks women's lives, pointing to instances where women reporting domestic violence have been turned away by police due to individual incidents seeming "non-severe" and then been killed by their violent partners.[691]

Many commenters stated that a victim turned away while trying to report a less severe instance of harassment will be unlikely to try and report a second time when the harassing conduct has escalated into a more severe situation.

---

[691] Commenter cited: Elizabeth Bruenig, What Do We Owe Her Now?, THE WASHINGTON POST (Sept. 21, 2018); Lindsay Gibbs, College track star warned police about her ex-boyfriend 6 times in the 10 days before he killed her, THINKPROGRESS (Dec. 18, 2018), https://thinkprogress.org/mccluskey-university-of-utah-warned-police-about-ex-boyfriend-6-times-bc08aed0fad5/; Sirin Kale, Teen Killed By Abusive Ex Even After Reporting Him to Police Five Times, VICE (Jan. 15, 2019), https://broadly.vice.com/en_us/article/59vnbx/teen-killed-by-abusive-ex-even-after-reporting-him-to-police-five-times.

Discussion: The Department understands commenters' concerns that sometimes harassing behavior escalates into more serious harassment, up to and even including violence and homicide, and that commenters therefore advocate using a very broad definition of sexual harassment that captures even seemingly "low level" harassment. The Department is persuaded that every instance of dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking should be considered sexual harassment under Title IX and has therefore revised § 106.30 to include these offenses in addition to sexual assault. However, for the reasons described above, the Department chooses to follow the Supreme Court's framework recognizing that Title IX is a non-sex discrimination statute and not a prohibition on all harassing conduct, and declines to define actionable sexual harassment as broadly as some academic researchers define harassment. The Department further believes that § 106.30 appropriately recognizes certain forms of harassment as per se sex discrimination (i.e., quid pro quo and Clery Act/VAWA offenses included in § 106.30), while adopting the Davis definition for other types of harassment such that free speech and academic freedom[692] are not chilled or curtailed by an overly broad definition of sexual harassment.[693] The Department believes that as a whole, the § 106.30 definition appropriately requires recipient intervention into situations that form a course of escalating conduct, without

---

[692] The Supreme Court has recognized academic freedom as protected under the First Amendment. See, e.g., Keyishian v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of State of N.Y., 385 U.S. 589, 603 (1967) ("Our Nation is deeply committed to safeguarding academic freedom, which is of transcendent value to all of us and not merely to the teachers concerned. That freedom is therefore a special concern of the First Amendment, which does not tolerate laws that cast a pall of orthodoxy over the classroom. The vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools. . . . The classroom is peculiarly the marketplace of ideas. The Nation's future depends upon leaders trained through wide exposure to that robust exchange of ideas which discovers truth out of a multitude of tongues, (rather) than through any kind of authoritative selection.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

[693] Eugene Volokh, How Harassment Law Restricts Free Speech, 47 RUTGERS L. REV. 563 (1995) ("[T]he vagueness of harassment law means the law actually deters much more speech than might ultimately prove actionable."); Kingsley R. Browne, Title VII as Censorship: Hostile-Environment Harassment and the First Amendment, 52 OHIO ST. L. J. 481, 483 (1991) ("A broad definition of sexual and racial harassment necessarily delegates broad powers to courts to determine matters of taste and humor, and the vagueness of the definition of 'harassment' leaves those subject to regulation without clear notice of what is permitted and what is forbidden. The inescapable result is a substantial chilling effect on expression.").

requiring recipients to intervene in situations that might – but have not yet – risen to a serious level. By adding dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking to the third prong of the § 106.30 definition, it is even more likely that conduct with potential to escalate into violence or even homicide will be reported and addressed before such escalation occurs.

The Department contends that, similar to laws setting a legal limit over which a person's blood alcohol level constitutes illegal driving while intoxicated,[694] the § 106.30 definition as a whole sets a threshold over which a person's unwelcome conduct constitutes sexual harassment. While some harassment does not meet the threshold, serious incidents that jeopardize equal educational access exceed the threshold and are actionable. In addition, the § 106.30 definition includes single instances of quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA offenses, requiring recipients to address serious problems before such problems have repeated or multiplied and become more difficult to address. Similarly, the Department disagrees that § 106.30

[694] While several States have zero-tolerance laws for driving while intoxicated that set illegal blood alcohol content levels at anything over 0.00, those zero-tolerance laws only apply to persons under the legal drinking age; for persons age 21 and older, all States have laws that set an illegal blood alcohol content level at 0.08 – in other words, not all levels of intoxication are prohibited, but rather only blood alcohol content levels above a certain amount. See Michael Wechsler, DUI, DWI, and Zero Tolerance Laws by State, THELAW.COM, https://www.thelaw.com/law/dui-dwi-and-zero-tolerance-laws-by-state.178/.

makes complainants wait until sexually predatory behavior becomes extremely serious, because the definition as a whole captures serious conduct (not just "extremely" serious conduct) that Title IX prohibits.

The Department understands commenters' concerns that if a complainant reports a sexual harassment incident that does not meet the § 106.30 definition, that complainant

may feel discouraged from reporting a second time if the sexual harassment escalates to meet the § 106.30 definition. However, complainants and recipients have long been familiar with the concept that sexual harassment must meet a certain threshold to be considered actionable under Federal non-discrimination laws.[695] The final regulations follow the same approach, and the Department does not believe that having a threshold for when harassment is actionable will chill reporting. The Department also reiterates that recipients retain discretion to respond to misconduct not covered by Title IX.

[695] In the workplace under Title VII, and in educational environments under Title IX as interpreted in the Department's 2001 Guidance, not all sexual harassment is actionable. Title VII requires severe or pervasive conduct that alters a condition of employment. E.g., Meritor, 477 U.S. at 67 ("For sexual harassment to be actionable, it must be sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of [the victim's] employment and create an abusive working environment.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The 2001 Guidance requires conduct "sufficiently serious" to deny or limit the complainant's ability to participate in education to be actionable under Title IX. 2001 Guidance at 5.

Changes: None.

Comments: Several commenters argued that adopting a narrower definition of sexual harassment makes it easier for sexist, misogynistic, and homophobic microaggressions, including sexist hostility and crude behavior, to continue unchecked. Commenters argued that making the definition of sexual harassment less inclusive tacitly condones microaggressions, making campuses less safe and decreasing diversity because more students from underrepresented groups will perform worse in school or leave school entirely.

A few commenters recommended that the definition include microaggressions. Some commenters asserted that microaggressions can cause the same negative impact on victims as more severe harassment does.[696] Other commenters asserted that using a "severe, pervasive, and

---

[696] Commenter cited: Lucas Torres & Joelle T. Taknint, Ethnic microaggressions, traumatic stress symptoms, and Latino depression: A moderated mediational model, 62 JOURNAL OF COUNSELING PSYCHOL. 3 (2015).

objectively offensive" standard fails to consider personal, cultural, and religious differences in determining what constitutes sexual harassment, ignoring the fact that especially for individuals in marginalized identity groups, microaggressions may not seem pervasive or severe to an outsider but accumulate to make marginalized students feel unwelcome and unable to continue their education. One

commenter suggested that rather than narrow the definition of harassment, it should be expanded to include what one professor has called "creepiness."[697] A few commenters asserted that cat-calling and other microaggressions may constitute more subtle forms of sexual harassment yet cause very real harms to victims[698] and the final regulations

---

[697] Commenters cited: Bonnie Mann, Creepers, Flirts, Heroes, and Allies: Four Theses on Men and Sexual Harassment, 11 AM. PHIL. ASS'N NEWSLETTER ON FEMINISM & PHILOSOPHY 24 (2012).

[698] Commenter cited: Emma McClure, Theorizing a Spectrum of Aggression: Microaggressions, Creepiness, and Sexual Assault, 14 THE PLURALIST 1 (2019) (noting an accepted definition of "microaggressions" as "the brief and commonplace daily verbal, behavioral, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate hostile, derogatory, or negative racial, gender, sexual-orientation, and religious slights and insults to the target person or group" and stating that "although each individual microaggression may seem negligible, when repeated over time, microaggressions can seriously damage the target's mental and physical health").

should protect more students from harmful violations of bodily and mental autonomy and dignity. At least one commenter argued that research indicates that gendered microaggressions, while not extreme, increase the likelihood of high-severity sexual violence[699] and that unaddressed

[699] Commenters cited: Rachel E. Gartner & Paul R. Sterzing, Gender Microaggressions as a Gateway to Sexual Harassment and Sexual Assault: Expanding the Conceptualization of Youth Sexual Violence, 31 AFFILIA: J. OF WOMEN & SOCIAL WORK 4 (2016).

subtly aggressive behavior leads to more extreme sexual harassment.[700]

One commenter suggested that recipients will save money by investigating all survivor complaints, including of microaggressions, rather than waiting until harassment is severe and pervasive, because trauma from sexual harassment is analogous to chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE)

---

[700] Commenters cited: Dorothy Espelage et al., Longitudinal Associations Among Bullying, Homophobic Teasing, and Sexual Violence Perpetration Among Middle School Students, 30 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 14 (2015).

in contact sports – it is not necessarily one big trauma that causes CTE but many repeated and seemingly asymptomatic injuries that accumulate over time causing CTE. Commenters argued that schools should be required, or at least allowed, to intervene in cases less severe than the § 106.30 definition.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' concerns about the harm that can result from microaggressions, cat-calling, and hostile, crude, or "creepy" behaviors that can make students feel unwelcome, unsafe, disrespected, insulted, and discouraged from participating in a community or in programs or activities. However, the Supreme Court has cautioned that while Title VII and Title IX both prohibit sex discrimination, neither of these Federal civil rights laws is designed to become a general civility code.[701] The Supreme Court interpreted Title IX's non-discrimination mandate to prohibit sexual harassment that rises to a level of severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness such that it denies equal access to education.[702] The Davis Court

---

[701] Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 788 (1998) ("These standards for judging hostility are sufficiently demanding to ensure that Title VII does not become a 'general civility code.' . . . Properly applied, they will filter out complaints attacking the ordinary tribulations of the workplace, such as the sporadic use of abusive language, gender-related jokes, and occasional teasing.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); Davis, 526 U.S. at 684 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) ("the majority seeks, in effect, to put an end to student misbehavior by transforming Title IX into a Federal Student Civility Code."); id. at 652 (refuting dissenting justices' arguments that the majority opinion permits too much liability under Title IX or turns Title IX into a general civility code, by emphasizing that it is not enough to show that a student has been teased, called offensive names, or taunted, because liability attaches only to sexual harassment that is severe and pervasive); Julie Davies, Assessing Institutional Responsibility for Sexual Harassment in Education, 77 TULANE L. REV. 387, 398, 407 (2002) ("Although the Court adopted different standards for institutional liability under Titles VII and IX, several themes serve as leitmotifs, running through the cases regardless of the technical differences. Neither Title VII nor Title IX is construed as a federal civility statute; the Court does not want entities to be obliged to litigate cases where plaintiffs have been subjected to 'minor' annoyances and insults.") (internal citation omitted).

[702] Davis, 526 U.S. at 652.

acknowledged that while misbehavior that does not meet that standard may be "upsetting to the students subjected to it,"[703] Title IX liability attaches only to sexual harassment that does meet the Davis standard. The Department declines to prohibit microaggressions as such, but notes that what commenters and researchers consider

[703] Id. at 651-52.

microaggressions[704] could form part of a course of conduct reaching severity, pervasiveness, and objective offensiveness under § 106.30, though a fact-specific evaluation of specific conduct is required. As to a commenter's likening of microaggressions to "asymptomatic" injuries that in the aggregate cause CTE

---

[704] See, e.g., Emma McClure, Theorizing a Spectrum of Aggression: Microaggressions, Creepiness, and Sexual Assault, 14 THE PLURALIST 1 (2019) (noting an accepted definition of "microaggressions" as "the brief and commonplace daily verbal, behavioral, and environmental indignities, whether intentional or unintentional, that communicate hostile, derogatory, or negative racial, gender, sexual-orientation, and religious slights and insults to the target person or group").

from playing contact sports, actionable sexual harassment under Title IX involves conduct that is unwelcome and so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity. Where harm results from behavior that does not meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, nothing in these final regulations precludes recipients from addressing such behavior under a recipient's own student or employee conduct code.

As noted above, the fact that not every harassing or offensive remark is prohibited under Title IX in no way condones or encourages crude, insulting, demeaning behavior, which recipients may address through a variety of actions; as a commenter pointed out, a recipient's response

could include providing a complainant with supportive measures, responding to the conduct in question with institutional speech, or offering programming designed to foster a more welcoming campus climate generally, including with respect to marginalized identity groups. We have revised § 106.45(b)(3) in the final regulations to clarify that mandatory dismissal of a formal complaint due to the allegations not meeting the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment does not preclude a recipient from acting on the allegations through non-Title IX codes of conduct. The final regulations also permit a recipient to provide supportive measures to a complainant even where the conduct alleged does not meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment.

Changes: We have revised § 106.45(b)(3) to clarify that mandatory dismissal of a formal complaint because the allegations do not constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 does not preclude a recipient from addressing the allegations through the recipient's code of conduct.

Comments: Several commenters argued that concern for protecting free speech and academic freedom does not require or justify using the Davis definition of sexual harassment in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition because harassment is not protected speech if it creates a hostile environment.[705] Commenters asserted that schools have the authority to regulate harassing speech,[706] that there is no conflict between the First Amendment and Title IX's protection against sexually harassing speech, and that the

---

[705] Commenters cited: Joanna L. Grossman & Deborah L. Brake, A Sharp Backward Turn: Department of Education Proposes to Protect Schools, Not Students, in Cases of Sexual Violence, VERDICT (Nov. 29, 2018) ("There is no legitimate First Amendment or academic freedom protection afforded to unwelcome sexual conduct that creates a hostile educational environment.").

[706] Commenters cited: Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Cmty. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 513-14 (1969) (holding school officials can regulate student speech if they reasonably forecast "substantial disruption of or material interference with school activities" or if the speech involves "invasion of the rights of others").

Department has no evidence that a broader definition of harassment over the last 20 years has infringed on constitutionally protected speech or academic freedom. On the other hand, at least one commenter argued that verbal conduct creating a hostile environment may still be constitutionally protected speech.[707]

---

[707] Commenters cited: White v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214, 1236-37 (9th Cir. 2000) (refusing to extend labor law precedents allowing restrictions on workplace speech to non-workplace contexts such as discriminatory speech about housing projects); UWM Post, Inc. v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wis. Sys., 774 F. Supp. 1163 (E.D. Wis. 1991) (holding student speech that created a hostile environment was protected even though workplace speech creating a hostile environment is banned by Title VII).

Discussion: The Supreme Court has not squarely addressed the intersection between First Amendment protection of speech and academic freedom, and non-sex discrimination Federal civil rights laws that include sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination (i.e., Title VII and Title IX).[708] With respect to sex discriminatory conduct in the form of

---

[708] Saxe v. State College Area Sch. Dist., 240 F.3d 200, 204, 207 (3d Cir. 2001) ("There is no categorical 'harassment exception' to the First Amendment's free speech clause.") ("Although the Supreme Court has written extensively on the scope of workplace harassment, it has never squarely addressed whether harassment, when it takes the form of pure speech, is exempt from First Amendment protection") ("Loosely worded anti-harassment laws may pose some of the same problems as the St. Paul hate speech ordinance [struck down by the Supreme Court as unconstitutional in R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377 (1992)]: they may regulate deeply offensive and potentially disruptive categories of speech based, at least in part, on subject matter and viewpoint.").

admissions or hiring and firing decisions, for example, prohibiting such conduct does not implicate constitutional concerns even when the conduct is accompanied by speech,[709] and similarly, when sex discrimination occurs in the form of non-verbal sexually harassing conduct, or speech used to harass in a quid pro quo

---

[709] E.g., John F. Wirenius, Actions as Words, Words as Actions: Sexual Harassment Law, the First Amendment and Verbal Acts, 28 WHITTIER L. REV. 905 (2007) (identifying a First Amendment issue only with respect to hostile environment sexual harassment, as opposed to discriminatory conduct in the form of discrete employment decisions and quid pro quo sexual harassment).

manner, stalk, or threaten violence against a victim, no First Amendment problem exists.[710] However, with respect to speech and expression, tension exists between First Amendment protections and the government's interest in ensuring workplace and educational environments free from sex

[710] Id.; Wisconsin v. Mitchell, 508 U.S. 476, 484 (1993) (citing Supreme Court cases in support of the view that a variety of conduct can be prohibited even where the person engaging in the conduct uses speech or expresses an idea, such that the First Amendment provides no protection for physical assault, violence, threat of violence, or other special harms distinct from communicative impact); United States v. Osinger, 753 F.3d 939, 953 (9th Cir. 2014) ("Because the sole immediate object of [the defendant's] speech was to facilitate his commission of the interstate stalking offense, that speech isn't entitled to constitutional protection.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

discrimination when the speech is unwelcome on the basis of sex.[711]

In striking down a city ordinance banning bias-motivated disorderly conduct, the Supreme Court in R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul emphasized that the First

---

[711] Andrea Meryl Kirshenbaum, Hostile Environment Sexual Harassment Law and the First Amendment: Can the Two Peacefully Coexist?, 12 TEX. J. OF WOMEN & THE L. 67, 68-70 (2002) ("Although the Supreme Court has never directly addressed this issue, the tension between the First Amendment and hostile environment sexual harassment law is evidenced by an increase in litigation involving these issues in courts throughout the nation." . . . "the clash between the First Amendment and the hostile environment sexual harassment doctrine is acute."); Peter Caldwell, Hostile Environment Sexual Harassment & First Amendment Content-Neutrality: Putting the Supreme Court on the Right Path, 23 HOFSTRA LAB. & EMP. L. J. 373 (2006) ("Where pure expression is involved, Title VII steers into the territory of the First Amendment. It is no use to deny or minimize this problem because, when Title VII is applied to sexual harassment claims founded solely on verbal insults, pictorial or literary matter, the statute imposes content-based, viewpoint-discriminatory restrictions on speech."); John F. Wirenius, Actions as Words, Words as Actions: Sexual Harassment Law, the First Amendment and Verbal Acts, 28 WHITTIER L. REV. 905 (2007) ("For nearly two decades, a debate has smoldered over the perceived tension between the law of sexual harassment and the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of speech. As the protection against sexual harassment in the workplace spread beyond overt discrimination in discrete employment decisions and quid pro quo sexual harassment to include the less readily quantified 'hostile work environment,' free speech advocates became less sanguine about the compatibility between the protections against workplace discrimination and the First Amendment, especially its proscription of viewpoint discrimination."). The same tension exists with respect to the First Amendment, and verbal and expressive unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex under Title IX, and the Department aims to ensure through a carefully crafted definition of actionable sexual harassment that "discrete" sex offenses "and quid pro quo sexual harassment" are per se sexual harassment under Title IX because no First Amendment issues are raised, while verbal and expressive conduct is evaluated under the Davis standard so that prohibiting sexual harassment under Title IX is consistent with the First Amendment.

Amendment generally prevents the government from proscribing speech or expressive conduct "because of disapproval of the ideas expressed. Content-based regulations are presumptively invalid."[712] The Supreme Court explained that even categories of speech that can be regulated consistent with the First Amendment (for example, obscenity and defamation) cannot do so

---

[712] R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 382 (1992).

in a content-discriminatory manner (for instance, by prohibiting only defamation that criticizes the government).[713] The Supreme Court further explained that while "fighting words" can permissibly be proscribed under First Amendment doctrine, such a conclusion is based on the nature of fighting words to provoke injury and violence,[714] not merely the impact on the listener to be insulted or

---

[713] See id. at 383-84.

[714] Id. at 380-81 (citing Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 572 (1942) for proposition that "fighting words" represent "conduct that itself inflicts injury or tends to incite immediate violence").

offended, and government still cannot regulate "based on hostility—or favoritism—towards the underlying message expressed."[715] Side-stepping the direct question of how the First Amendment prohibition against content-based regulations applies to hostile environment sexual harassment claims based on speech rather than acts, the R.A.V. Court stated that "sexually-based

[715] Id. at 386.

'fighting words'" could "produce a violation of Title VII's general prohibition against sexual discrimination in employment practices" because "[w]here the government does not target conduct on the basis of its expressive conduct, acts are not shielded from regulation merely because they express a discriminatory idea or philosophy."[716] The R.A.V. Court struck down the city

---

[716] Id. at 389-90 (internal citation omitted) (emphasis added).

ordinance at issue, even though it was intended to protect persons in historically marginalized groups from victimization, in part because the "secondary effect" of whether a particular listener or audience is offended by speech does not justify restricting the speech.[717] In striking down the ordinance, the Supreme Court noted that city officials retained the ability to communicate their hostility for certain biases – but not "through the means of imposing unique limitations upon speakers who (however benightedly) disagree."[718]

[717] Id. at 394.

Seven years after deciding R.A.V. under the First Amendment, the Supreme Court decided Davis under Title IX. While the Davis Court did not raise the issue of First Amendment

---

[718] Id. at 395-96.

intersection with anti-sexual harassment regulation,[719] it focused on the sexually harassing conduct of the peer-perpetrator in that case,[720] indicating that the Supreme Court recognizes that proscribing conduct, as opposed to

---

[719] The majority opinion did not address First Amendment concerns, although the dissent raised the issue. Davis, 526 U.S. at 667-68 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) ("A university's power to discipline its students for speech that may constitute sexual harassment is also circumscribed by the First Amendment. A number of federal courts have already confronted difficult problems raised by university speech codes designed to deal with peer sexual and racial harassment. See, e.g., Dambrot v. Cent. Michigan Univ., 55 F.3d 1177 (6th Cir. 1995) (striking down university discriminatory harassment policy because it was overbroad, vague, and not a valid prohibition on fighting words); UWM Post, Inc. v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wisconsin Sys., 774 F.Supp. 1163 (E.D. Wis. 1991) (striking down university speech code that prohibited, inter alia, 'discriminatory comments' directed at an individual that 'intentionally . . . demean' the 'sex . . . of the individual' and 'create an intimidating, hostile or demeaning environment for education, university related work, or other university-authorized activity'); Doe v. Univ. of Mich., 721 F. Supp. 852 (E.D. Mich. 1989) (similar); Iota XI Chapter of Sigma Chi Fraternity v. George Mason Univ., 993 F.2d 386 (4th Cir. 1993) (overturning on First Amendment grounds university's sanctions on a fraternity for conducting an 'ugly woman contest' with 'racist and sexist' overtones) The difficulties associated with speech codes simply underscore the limited nature of a university's control over student behavior that may be viewed as sexual harassment."). Presumably, the majority believed that ensuring that even verbal harassment that meets the severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive standard avoids this constitutional problem; the majority expressed a similar rationale in response to the dissent's contention that the majority opinion permitted too much liability against recipients. Davis, 526 U.S. at 651-53.

[720] Davis, 526 U.S. at 653 ("Petitioner alleges that her daughter was the victim of repeated acts of sexual harassment by G. F. over a 5-month period, and there are allegations in support of the conclusion that G. F.'s misconduct was severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive. The harassment was not only verbal; it included numerous acts of objectively offensive touching, and, indeed, G. F. ultimately pleaded guilty to criminal sexual misconduct.") (emphasis added).

speech, raises no constitutional concerns, and that even when anti-harassment rules are applied to verbal harassment, requiring the harassment to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education avoids putting recipients in the untenable position of protecting a recipient from legal liability arising from how the recipient responds to sexual harassment only by unconstitutionally restricting its students' (or employees') rights to freedom of speech and expression.

The legal commentary and Supreme Court precedent often cited by commenters[721] arguing that the Davis definition of sexual harassment is not necessary for protection of First Amendment freedoms because

---

[721] E.g., Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Cmty. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 513-14 (1969); Joanna L. Grossman & Deborah L. Brake, A Sharp Backward Turn: Department of Education Proposes to Protect Schools, Not Students, in Cases of Sexual Violence, VERDICT (Nov. 29, 2018).

harassment is unprotected if it creates a hostile environment, and because schools have authority to regulate harassing speech, do not support a conclusion that a categorical "harassment exception" exists under First Amendment law and do not justify applying a standard lower than the Davis standard for speech-based harassment in the educational context. For example, the statement in a legal commentary

frequently cited by commenters that "[t]here is no legitimate First Amendment or academic freedom protection afforded to unwelcome sexual conduct that creates a hostile educational environment" contains no citations to legal authority.[722] Likewise, commenters citing Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Comm. Sch. Dist. for the

[722] Joanna L. Grossman & Deborah L. Brake, A Sharp Backward Turn: Department of Education Proposes to Protect Schools, Not Students, in Cases of Sexual Violence, VERDICT (Nov. 29, 2018) (stating, without citation to legal authority, the proposition that "There is no legitimate First Amendment or academic freedom protection afforded to unwelcome sexual conduct that creates a hostile environment").

proposition that school officials can regulate student speech if they reasonably forecast "substantial disruption of or material interference with school activities" or if the speech involves "invasion of the rights of others" fail to acknowledge: (i) in Tinker the Supreme Court struck down the school decision in that case forbidding students from wearing armbands expressing opposition to war because that expressive conduct was akin to pure speech warranting First Amendment protection;[723] (ii) the Tinker Court insisted that the "substantial disruption" or "interference with school activities" exceptions only apply where school officials have more than unspecified fear of disruption or interference;[724] and (iii) the precise

---

[723] Tinker, 393 U.S. at 505-06 ("the wearing of armbands in the circumstances of this case was entirely divorced from actually or potentially disruptive conduct by those participating in it. It was closely akin to 'pure speech' which, we have repeatedly held, is entitled to comprehensive protection under the First Amendment.").
[724] Id. at 508 ("undifferentiated fear or apprehension of disturbance is not enough to overcome the right to freedom of expression").

scope of Tinker's "interference with the rights of others" language is unclear, but is comparable to the Davis standard.[725] By requiring threshold levels of serious interference with work or education environments before sexual harassment is actionable, the Supreme Court standards under

---

[725] B.H. ex rel. Hawk v. Easton Area Sch. Dist., 725 F.3d 293 (3d Cir. 2013) ("As we have repeatedly noted, the precise scope of Tinker's 'interference with the rights of others' language is unclear.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); cf. Brett A. Sokolow et al., The Intersection of Free Speech and Harassment Rules, 38 HUM. RIGHTS 19 (2011) ("The Tinker standard is comparable to the Davis standard, which places the threshold for harassment at the point where conduct 'bars the victim's access to an educational opportunity,' in that speech can be restricted only when the educational process is substantially impeded. In other words, when reviewing school policies, and the implementation thereof, it is critical to ensure students are being disciplined as a result of the objective impact of their speech, and not solely based on its content and/or the feelings of those to whom that speech is targeted.").

Meritor[726] (for the workplace) and Davis[727] (for schools, colleges, and universities) prevent these non-discrimination laws from infringing on speech and academic freedom,[728]

[726] Meritor, 477 U.S. at 67; see also John F. Wirenius, Actions as Words, Words as Actions: Sexual Harassment Law, the First Amendment and Verbal Acts, 28 WHITTIER L. REV. 905, 908 (2007) (arguing that the hostile work environment doctrine, properly understood with its critical threshold requirement that harassing speech be severe or pervasive enough to create an objectively hostile or abusive work environment, converts harassing speech into "verbal conduct" that may be regulated under Title VII consistent with the First Amendment). Similarly, when harassing speech is severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive enough to create deprivation of equal educational access it may be regulated under Title IX consistent with the First Amendment.

[727] Davis, 526 U.S. at 651 ("Rather, a plaintiff must establish sexual harassment of students that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive, and that so undermines and detracts from the victims' educational experience, that the victim-students are effectively denied equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities."); Brett A. Sokolow, et al., The Intersection of Free Speech and Harassment Rules, 38 HUM. RIGHTS 19 (2011) (cautioning that institutional anti-harassment policies must not prevent students from exercising rights of speech and expression, a result that the Davis standard makes clear).

[728] E.g., Brett A. Sokolow et al., The Intersection of Free Speech and Harassment Rules, 38 HUM. RIGHTS 19, 20 (2011) ("[S]chool regulations and actions that impact speech must be content and viewpoint neutral and must be narrowly tailored to fit the circumstances. These regulations must be clear enough for a person of ordinary intelligence to understand, or courts will find them unconstitutionally void for vagueness. They cannot overreach by covering both protected and unprotected speech or courts will find them unconstitutionally overbroad. The regulation cannot act to preemptively prevent students from exercising their right to freely express themselves because the courts will find the prior restraint of speech presumptively unconstitutional.") ("In some ways, activist courts, agencies, and educational messages about civility and tolerance may have given a false impression that any sexist, ageist, racist, and so forth, remark is tantamount to harassment. As a society, we now use the term 'harassment' to mean being bothered, generically. We must distinguish generic harassment from discriminatory harassment. The standard laid out in Davis . . . makes this clear: To be considered discriminatory harassment, the conduct in question must be 'so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively bars the victim's access to an educational opportunity or benefit.'") (emphasis in original).

precisely because non-discrimination laws are not "categorically immune from First Amendment challenge when they are applied to prohibit speech solely on the basis of its expressive content."[729]

The First Amendment plays a crucial role in ensuring that the American government remains responsive to the will of the people and effects peaceful change by fostering free, robust

---

[729] Saxe, 240 F.3d at 209.

exchange of ideas,[730] including those relating to sex-based equality and dignity.[731] There is no doubt that words can wound, and speech can feel like an "assault, seriously harm[ing] a private

---

[730] See Terminiello v. City of Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4 (1949) ("The vitality of civil and political institutions in our society depends on free discussion. . . . [I]t is only through free debate and free exchange of ideas that government remains responsive to the will of the people and peaceful change is effected. The right to speak freely and to promote diversity of ideas and programs is therefore one of the chief distinctions that sets us apart from totalitarian regimes. Accordingly a function of free speech under our system of government is to invite dispute. It may indeed best serve its high purpose when it induces a condition of unrest, creates dissatisfaction with conditions as they are, or even stirs people to anger. Speech is often provocative and challenging. It may strike at prejudices and preconceptions and have profound unsettling effects as it presses for acceptance of an idea. That is why freedom of speech, though not absolute . . . is nevertheless protected against censorship or punishment, unless shown likely to produce a clear and present danger of a serious substantive evil that rises far above public inconvenience, annoyance, or unrest.") (internal citations omitted).

[731] Azhar Majeed, The Misapplication of Peer Harassment Law on College and University Campuses and the Loss of Student Speech Rights, 35 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 385, 397 (2009) ("In drafting and applying their harassment policies, colleges and universities frequently target protected speech merely because the expression in question is alleged to be sexist, prejudicial, or demeaning. . . . This approach ignores the fact that even explicitly sexist or racist speech is entitled to protection, and all the more so where it espouses views on important issues of social policy. Few people would disagree, for example, that the subjects of relations between the sexes, women's rights, and the pursuit of economic and social equality are all important matters of public concern and debate. Therefore, speech relating to such topics, regardless of whether it takes a favorable or negative view of women, is highly germane to the debate of public matters and social policy. In the marketplace of ideas, these expressions should not be suppressed merely to avoid offense or discomfort.") (citing Am. Booksellers Ass'n v. Hudnut, 771 F.2d 323 (7th Cir. 1985) (holding invalid under the First Amendment a statute that prohibited pornography depicting the subordination of women because the statute was a content-based restriction – that is, it applied not to all sexual depictions but to depictions of women in a disfavored manner).

individual" with effects that often linger.[732] Nonetheless, serious risks attach to soliciting the coercive power of government to enforce even laudable social norms such as respect and civility.[733] Even low-value speech warrants constitutional protection, in part because government should not be

---

[732] Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 461 (2011) (Breyer, J., concurring); s*ee also Davis*, 526 U.S. at 651-52 (acknowledging that gender-based banter, insults, and teasing can be upsetting to those on the receiving end).

[733] Catherine J. Ross, Assaultive Words and Constitutional Norms, 66 JOURNAL OF LEGAL EDUC. 739, 744 (2017) ("Recently, students have been in the vanguard, demanding that offensive speech be silenced. Students ask to be protected from hurtful words, sentiments, even gestures, and inadvertent facial clues or rolling eyes that communicate dismissal. They seek the coercive power of authority to enforce laudable social norms – respect, dignity, and equality regardless of race, ethnicity, gender, gender identity, and so forth. Meritorious as these proclaimed goals are, the rules and penalties some students lobby for would suppress the expressive rights of others including students, faculty, and invited guests, a particularly disturbing prospect at an institution devoted to the academic enterprise.").

the arbiter of valuable versus worthless expression.[734] This principle holds true for elementary and secondary schools as well as postsecondary institutions.[735]

---

[734] Id. at 749-50 (2017) ("Many people question whether rude epithets, crude jokes, and disparaging statements are the kind of expression that merits First Amendment protection. The Supreme Court has long held the Constitution protects the right to speak 'foolishly and without moderation.' You might maintain that racist, misogynist and other vile speech makes no contribution at all to the exchange of ideas – but the Speech Clause protects even so-called low-worth expression, in large part because no public authority can be trusted to distinguish valuable from worthless expression. The government cannot ban hateful expression, no matter how hurtful.") (citing Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 25-26 (1971)). Furthermore, permitting censorship of speech in an effort to be on the right side of history with respect to racial or sexual equality ignores the role that commitment to the First Amendment has played in achieving milestones for racial and sexual equality. See, e.g., Nadine Strossen, Regulating Racist Speech on Campus: A Modest Proposal?, 1990 DUKE L. J. 484, 536-37 (1990) ("History demonstrates that if the freedom of speech is weakened for one person, group, or message, then it is no longer there for others. The free speech victories that civil libertarians have won in the context of defending the right to express racist and other anti-civil libertarian messages have been used to protect speech proclaiming anti-racist and pro-civil libertarian messages. For example, in 1949, the ACLU defended the right of Father Terminiello, a suspended Catholic priest, to give a racist speech in Chicago. The Supreme Court agreed with that position in a decision that became a landmark in free speech history. Time and again during the 1960s and 1970s, the ACLU and other civil rights groups were able to defend free speech rights for civil rights demonstrators by relying on the Terminiello decision [Terminiello v. City of Chicago, 337 U.S. 1 (1949)].") (internal citations omitted); see also Anthony D. Romero, Equality, Justice and the First Amendment, AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION (ACLU) (Aug. 15, 2017), https://www.aclu.org/blog/free-speech/equality-justice-and-first-amendment (explaining that the ACLU's nearly century-long history defending freedom of speech "including speech we abhor" is due to belief that "our democracy will be better and stronger for engaging and hearing divergent views. Racism and bigotry will not be eradicated if we merely force them underground. Equality and justice will only be achieved if society looks such bigotry squarely in the eyes and renounces it. . . . There is another reason that we have defended the free speech rights of Nazis and the Ku Klux Klan. . . . We simply never want government to be in a position to favor or disfavor particular viewpoints.").

[735] See Catherine J. Ross, Assaultive Words and Constitutional Norms, 66 JOURNAL OF LEGAL EDUC. 739, 754-55 (2017) ("Constitutional doctrine asks our youngest students to use the traditional constitutional responses to vile speech: Walk away, don't listen, or respond with 'more and better speech.' These general First Amendment principles apply with at least as much vigor to college campuses, where most students are adults, not schoolchildren, the guiding ethos of higher education supplements constitutional mandates, and students are not compelled to attend. Looking at what the Constitution requires in grades K-12 reveals a lot about what we should expect the adults enrolled in college to have the capacity to withstand. Since our constitutional framework expects this degree of coping from children beginning in elementary school, it is not asking too much of college students to handle offensive sentiments by using the standard First Amendment tools: Walk away, throw the pamphlet in the trash, get off the screen or, even better, tackle objectionable speech with more and better speech.") (discussing and citing Nuxoll v. Indian Prairie Sch. Dist. # 204, 523 F.3d 668, 672 (7th Cir. 2008); Saxe v. State Coll. Area Sch. Dist., 240 F.3d 200, 202 (3d Cir. 2001); Nixon v. N. Local Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 383 F. Supp. 2d 965, 967 (S.D. Ohio 2005)).

Schools, colleges, and universities, and their students and employees, who find speech offensive, have numerous avenues to confront offensive speech without "the means of imposing unique limitations upon speakers who (however benightedly) disagree."[736]

---

[736] R.A.V., 505 U.S. at 395-96. As a commenter observed, recipients retain the ability and discretion to respond to offensive speech by a student (or employee) by providing the complainant with supportive measures, responding to the offensive speech with institutional speech, or offering programming designed to foster a welcoming campus climate more generally.

The Department believes that the tension between student and faculty freedom of speech, and regulation of speech to prohibit sexual harassment, is best addressed through rules that prohibit harassing and assaultive physical conduct, while ensuring that harassment in the form of speech and expression is evaluated for severity, pervasiveness, objective offensiveness, and denial of equal access to education.

This is the approach taken in the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, under which quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA offenses receive per se treatment as actionable sexual harassment, while other forms of harassment must meet the Davis standard. This approach balances the "often competing demands of the First Amendment's express guarantee of free speech and the Fourteenth

Amendment's implicit promise of dignity and equality."[737]

Contrary to commenters' assertions, evidence that broadly and loosely worded anti-harassment policies have infringed on constitutionally protected speech and academic freedom is widely available.[738] The fact that broadly-

---

[737] Catherine J. Ross, Assaultive Words and Constitutional Norms, 66 JOURNAL OF LEGAL EDUC. 739, 739 (2017) ("Campuses are rocked by racially and sexually offensive speech and counter speech. Offensive speech and counter speech, including demonstrations and calls for policies that shield the vulnerable and repercussions for offenders, are both protected by the Constitution. Yet some college administrations regulate this protected speech. Expression on both sides of a cultural and political divide brings to the fore a conflict that has been simmering in legal commentary for about two decades: the tension between the often competing demands of the First Amendment's express guarantee of free speech and the Fourteenth Amendment's implicit promise of dignity and equality. This clash between two fundamental principles seems to have been exacerbated recently by a renewed focus on identity politics both on campus and in national and international affairs.").

[738] E.g., Azhar Majeed, The Misapplication of Peer Harassment Law on College and University Campuses and the worded anti-harassment policies have been applied to protected speech "leads many potential speakers to conclude that it is better to stay silent and not risk the consequences of being charged with

---

Loss of Student Speech Rights, 35 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 385, 391-92 (2009) (discussing examples of universities punishing protected speech including: a student-employee charged with racial harassment merely for reading a book entitled Notre Dame vs. The Klan; finding a professor guilty of racial harassment for explaining in a Latin American Politics class that the term "wetbacks" is commonly used as a derogatory reference to Mexican immigrants; investigating a criminal law professor for a sexually hostile environment where the professor's exam presented a hypothetical case in which a woman seeking an abortion felt thankful after she was attacked because the physical attack resulted in the death of her fetus; finding a student guilty of sexual harassment for posting flyers joking that freshman women could lose weight by using the stairs); see also Nadine Strossen, Law Professor and former ACLU President, 2015 Richard S. Salant Lecture on Freedom of the Press at Harvard University (Nov. 5, 2015), https://shorensteincenter.org/nadine-strossen-free-expression-an-endangered-species-on-campus-transcript/ (identifying the free speech and academic freedom problems with "the overbroad, unjustified concept of illegal sexual harassment as extending to speech with any sexual content that anyone finds offensive," opining that the current college climate exalts a misplaced concept of "safety" by insisting that "safety seeks protection from exposure to ideas that make one uncomfortable . . . . [W]hen it comes to safety, our students are being doubly disserved. Too often, denied safety from physical violence, which is critical for their education, but too often granted safety from ideas, which is antithetical to their education," and detailing numerous examples "of campus censorship in the guise of punishing sexual harassment" including: subjecting a professor to investigation for writing an essay critical of current sexual harassment policies; punishing a professor who, during a lecture, paraphrased Machiavelli's comments about raping the goddess Fortuna; finding a professor guilty of sexual harassment for teaching about sexual topics in a graduate-level course called "Drugs and Sin in American Life;" suspending a professor for showing a documentary that examined the adult film industry; punishing a professor for having students play roles in a scripted skit about prostitution in a course on deviance; punishing a professor for requiring a class to write essays defining pornography; firing an early childhood education professor who had received multiple teaching awards, for occasionally using vulgar language and humor about sex in her lectures about human sexuality).

harassment. . . . This halts much campus discussion and debate, taking away from the campus's function as a true marketplace of ideas."[739] Where speech and expression are not given sufficient "breathing room," the "safety valve" function of speech is

---

[739] Azhar Majeed, The Misapplication of Peer Harassment Law on College and University Campuses and the Loss of Student Speech Rights, 35 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 385, 397 (2009) ("Of course, sexual and racial harassment policies, regardless of the terms in which they are drafted, are oftentimes applied against protected speech, which again leads many potential speakers to conclude that it is better to stay silent and not risk the consequences of being charged with harassment. . . . The unfortunate result, then, is that students have a strong incentive to refrain from saying anything provocative, inflammatory, or bold and to instead cautiously stick to that which is mundane or conventional. This halts much campus discussion and debate, taking away from the campus's function as a true marketplace of ideas."); id. at 432-34 (discussing several Federal court cases striking down university anti-harassment codes as applied to constitutionally protected speech, including Cohen v. San Bernardino Valley Coll., 92 F.3d 968 (9th Cir. 1996); Iota Xi Chapter of Sigma Chi Fraternity v. George Mason Univ., 993 F.2d 386 (4th Cir. 1993); Silva v. Univ. of N.H., 888 F. Supp. 293 (D. N.H. 1994)).

diminished.[740] Furthermore, even seemingly low-value speech can have a "downstream effect of leading to constructive discussion and debate which would not have taken place otherwise."[741] For these reasons, the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment is designed to capture non-speech

---

[740] Azhar Majeed, The Misapplication of Peer Harassment Law on College and University Campuses and the Loss of Student Speech Rights, 35 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 385, 398-99 (2009) ("Furthermore, one of the benefits of providing breathing room for such expression is that it allows the speaker to espouse his or her views through constructive dialogue rather than act out of frustration by committing acts of violence or hate crimes. This outlet has been labeled the 'safety valve' function of speech.").

[741] Id. ("By exposing the real ugliness of prejudice, ignorance and hate, such speech can reach and convince people in ways that polite conversation never could. Moreover, ignorant or misguided speech, though seemingly possessing little value or merit on its own, often has the 'downstream' effect of leading to constructive discussion and debate which would not have taken place otherwise. Consequently, the initial expression greatly benefits the marketplace of ideas and enriches students' understanding of important issues by increasing the potential for real and meaningful debate on campus.").

conduct broadly (based on an assumption of the education-denying effects of such conduct), while applying the Davis standard to verbal conduct so that the critical purposes of both Title IX and the First Amendment can be met.

Changes: None.

So Severe

Comments: Some commenters asserted that the "so severe" element of the second prong of the § 106.30 definition

means that recipients must ignore many harassment incidents that result in academic, economic, and psychological harm and suffering including depression and post-traumatic stress disorder, whereas the better approach is to treat any level of harassment as seriously as the most severe level. Some commenters asserted that schools should never try to tell a survivor what was or was not severe because the survivor is the only person who can determine what was severe. Other commenters wondered what threshold determines an incident as "severe," whether severity refers to the mental impact on the victim or the physical nature of the unwelcome conduct (or both), and how a victim is expected to prove severity.

Discussion: For reasons discussed above, the Department believes that severity is a necessary element to balance protection from sexual harassment with protection of freedom of speech and expression. The Department interprets the Davis standard formulated in § 106.30 as subjective with respect to the unwelcomeness of the conduct (i.e., whether the complainant viewed the conduct as unwelcome), and the final regulations clarify that the elements of severity, pervasiveness, objective offensiveness, and resulting denial of equal access are determined under a reasonable person standard.[742] In this way, evaluation of whether harassment is "severe" appropriately takes into account the circumstances facing a particular complainant, such as the complainant's age, disability status, sex, and other characteristics. This evaluation does not burden a complainant to "prove severity," because a complainant need only describe what occurred and the recipient must then consider whether the described occurrence was severe from the perspective of a reasonable person in the complainant's position.

---

[742] See Davis, 526 U.S. at 653-54 (applying the severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, denial of access standard to the facts at issue under an objective approach) ("Petitioner alleges that her daughter was the victim of repeated acts of sexual harassment by G. F. over a 5-month period, and there are allegations in support of the conclusion that G. F.'s misconduct was severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive. The harassment was not only verbal; it included numerous acts of objectively offensive touching, and, indeed, G. F. ultimately pleaded guilty to criminal sexual misconduct. . . . Further, petitioner contends that the harassment had a concrete, negative effect on her daughter's ability to receive an education.").

Changes: None.

And Pervasive

Comments: Many commenters believed that the "pervasive" element of the second prong of the § 106.30 definition means that students would be forced to endure repeated, escalating levels of harassment before seeking help from schools, and that by the time schools must intervene it might be too late because victims will already have suffered emotional harm and derailed educational futures (e.g., ineligibility for an advanced placement course or rejection from admission to a dream college after grades dropped due to harassment that was not deemed pervasive). Several commenters asserted that every instance of discrimination deserves investigation, or else patterns of harassment will not be discovered because each single instance will be dismissed as not

“pervasive.” Some such commenters argued that without an investigation, a school will not know whether a single instance of an inappropriate remark or joke is truly an isolated incident or part of a pattern. A few commenters argued that especially in elementary and secondary schools, students whose reports are turned away for not being “pervasive” will be very unlikely to report again when the conduct repeats and does become pervasive.

Several commenters described scenarios that they asserted would not be covered as sexual harassment under § 106.30 because they fail to meet the pervasive element even though such scenarios present severe, objectively offensive, threatening, humiliating, harm-inducing consequences on victims, including: a professor blocking a teaching assistant's exit from a small office while badgering the assistant with sexual insults; a teacher inappropriately touching a student while making sexually explicit comments during an after-school meeting; students posting videos of "revenge porn" on social media.

Discussion: The Department reiterates that quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA offenses (sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking) constitute sexual harassment under § 106.30 without any evaluation for pervasiveness. Thus, students do not have to endure repeated incidents of such abuse without recourse from a recipient. The Department further reiterates that recipients retain discretion to provide supportive measures to any complainant even where the harassment is not pervasive.

The Department disagrees that an investigation into every offensive comment or joke is necessary in order to discern whether the isolated comment is part of a pervasive pattern of harassment. For reasons discussed above, chilling speech and expression by investigating each instance of unwelcome speech is not a constitutionally permissible way of ensuring that unlawful harassment is not occurring. The Department appreciates commenters' concerns that if a complainant receives no support after reporting one incident (that does not rise to the level of actionable harassment under Title IX) the complainant may feel deterred from reporting again if the harassment escalates and meets the Davis standard. This is one reason why the Department emphasizes that recipients remain free to provide supportive measures even where alleged conduct does not meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment, and to utilize institutional speech and provide general programming to foster a respectful educational environment, none of which requires punishing or chilling protected speech.

With respect to the scenarios presented by commenters as examples of harassment that may not meet the Davis standard because of lack of pervasiveness, the Department declines to make definitive statements about examples, due to the necessarily fact-specific nature of the analysis. However, we note that sexual harassment by a teacher or professor toward a student or subordinate may constitute quid pro quo harassment, which does not need to meet a pervasiveness element. The

Davis standard as applied in § 106.30 is broad, encompassing any unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex that a reasonable person would find so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that a person is effectively denied equal educational access. Disseminating "revenge porn," or conspiring to sexually harass people (such as fraternity members telling new pledges to "score"), or other unwelcome conduct that harms and humiliates a person on the basis of sex may meet the elements of the Davis standard including pervasiveness, particularly where the unwelcome sex-based conduct involves widespread dissemination of offensive material or multiple people agreeing to potentially victimize others and taking steps in furtherance of the agreement. Finally, a single instance of unwelcome physical conduct may meet definitions of assault or battery prohibited by other laws, even if the incident does not meet one of the three prongs of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment.

Changes: None.

Objectively Offensive

Comments: Several commenters argued that the "objectively offensive" element of the second prong of the § 106.30 definition will mean different things to different school officials, and result in similar incidents being investigated by some schools and not by others. Several commenters asserted that "objectively offensive" creates an unnecessary and inappropriate scrutiny of victims and their experiences, creating barriers to reporting and making campuses less safe, contributing to victim-blaming, perpetuating myths and misconceptions about sexual violence, and minimizing the harm caused by sexual harassment.

Several commenters asserted that nothing is "objectively" offensive because what is offensive is based on how conduct subjectively makes a person feel yet "objective" means not influenced by personal feelings; these commenters argued that therefore the term "objectively offensive" is an oxymoron. At least one commenter argued that research shows that individuals experience sex-based misconduct differently, depending on prior life experiences, previous victimization, and other factors.[743]

Commenters similarly opined that offensiveness depends on the impact of the conduct, not the intent of the perpetrator. One commenter opined that cat-calling may not sound objectively threatening, yet knowing that cat-calling and similar objectification of women may contribute to physical violence against women[744] might cause a woman targeted by cat-calling to feel unsafe.

---

[743] Commenters cited: Emma M. Millon et al., Stressful Life Memories Relate to Ruminative Thoughts in Women with Sexual Violence History, Irrespective of PTSD, FRONTIERS IN PSYCHIATRY 9 (2018).

At least one commenter argued that what is "objectively offensive" tends to be interpreted as what white, privileged men would find to be offensive, lending itself to a "boys will be boys" attitude that excuses a lot of behavior that offends women and marginalized

---

[744] Commenters cited: Eduardo A. Vasquez et al., The sexual objectification of girls and aggression towards them in gang and non-gang affiliated youth, 23 PSYCHOL., CRIME & L. 5 (2017).

individuals. One commenter recommended that the Department issue guidance for what factors to consider so that unconscious bias does not impact evaluation of what conduct is "offensive." One commenter claimed that the § 106.30 definition fails to account for the intersectional dynamics (race, gender, sexual orientation, culture, etc.) that may impact the severity and objective offensiveness of an act. This commenter argued that since the purpose of having an investigation is to decide whether conduct was in fact severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive it makes little sense to require schools to dismiss claims at the outset when the rape culture pyramid explains how small microaggressions and supposedly "less severe" offenses fuel a culture for severe behaviors to become normalized.

This commenter recommended that "objectively offensive" should be defined and understood with a high bar for sensitive, respectful language and conduct towards all in the community.

At least one commenter argued that because violence against women is often normalized,[745] and perpetrators of even heinous sexual crimes rationalize their behaviors through victim

---

[745] Commenters cited: Heather R. Hlavka, Normalizing Sexual Violence: Young Women Account for Harassment and Abuse, 28 GENDER & SOC'Y 3 (2014).

blaming,[746] these social realities make it very difficult for any act of sexual violence or harassment to be deemed "objectively offensive" even when the acts are disruptive or traumatic to the victim. At least one commenter asserted that the § 106.30 definition eliminates the possibility of recipients focusing on unique or personally harmful situations; for example, when private or "inside"

---

[746] Commenters cited: Diana Scully, & Joseph Marolla, Convicted rapists' vocabulary of motive: Excuses and justifications, 31 SOCIAL PROBLEMS 5 (1984).

jokes do not seem offensive to outsiders but have a harmful connotation for the victim.

Several commenters noted that under case law, what is objectively offensive is analyzed from the perspective of a reasonable person standing in the shoes of the complainant, using an approach that rejects disaggregation of allegations and instead looks at the aggregate or cumulative impact of conduct.[747] One commenter urged the Department to clarify that whether conduct is "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" depends on evaluation by a reasonable person and the hypothetical "reasonable person" must consider both male and female views of what is "offensive."

At least one commenter argued that the "objectively offensive" element

---

[747] Commenters cited: Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17 (1993).

undermines a longstanding analytic requirement that recipients evaluate conduct from both objective and subjective viewpoints (e.g., 2001 Guidance at p. 5).

Discussion: The Department agrees with commenters who note that whether harassing conduct is "objectively offensive" must be evaluated under a reasonable person standard, as a reasonable person in the complainant's position,[748] though the Department declines to require a commenter's suggestion that the "reasonable person" standard must consider offensiveness from both male and female perspectives because the latter suggestion would invite application of sex stereotypes. The final regulations revise the second prong of the § 106.30 definition to

---

[748] See Davis, 526 U.S. at 653-54 (applying the severe, pervasive, objectively offensive, denial of access standard to the facts at issue under an objective approach) ("there are allegations in support of the conclusion that G. F.'s misconduct was severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive. The harassment was not only verbal; it included numerous acts of objectively offensive touching"); s*ee also Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Serv., Inc.*, 523 U.S. 75, 81 (1998) ("We have emphasized, moreover, that the objective severity of harassment should be judged from the perspective of a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position, considering all the circumstances.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted.).

expressly state that the Davis elements are determined under a reasonable person standard.

The Department disagrees that "objectively offensive" is oxymoronic; the objective nature of the inquiry simply means that evaluation is made by a reasonable person considering whether, standing in the shoes of the complainant, the conduct would be offensive. The reasonable person standard appropriately takes into account whether a reasonable person, in the position of the particular complainant, would find the conduct offensive, thus the standard should not result in victims being blamed or excluded from receiving support regardless of whether the school officials evaluating the conduct share the same race, sex, age, or other characteristics as the complainant. It would be inappropriate for a Title IX Coordinator to evaluate conduct for objective offensiveness by shrugging off unwelcome conduct as simply "boys being boys" or make similar assumptions based on bias or prejudice. To take that approach would risk evidencing sex-based bias in contravention of § 106.45(a) or bias for or against a complainant or respondent in violation of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), in addition to indicating improper evaluation of the Davis elements under a reasonable person standard. For reasons discussed under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), the Department leaves recipients flexibility to decide the content of the training required for Title IX personnel under that provision, and nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from addressing implicit or unconscious bias as part of such training.

The Department disagrees that this standard inappropriately results in different schools making different decisions about what is objectively offensive. The Department believes that a benefit of the Davis standard as formulated in the second prong of § 106.30 is that whether harassment is actionable turns on both subjectivity

(i.e., whether the conduct is unwelcome, according to the complainant) and objectivity (i.e., "objectively offensive") with the Davis elements determined under a reasonable person standard, thereby retaining a similar "both subjective and objective" analytic approach that commenters point out is used in the 2001 Guidance.[749] The fact-

[749] 2001 Guidance at 5 (conduct should be evaluated from both a subjective and objective perspective); id. at fn. 39 (citing case law for the proposition that whether conduct is severe, or objectively offensive, must be judged from the perspective of a reasonable person in the complainant's position, such as Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 20-22 (1993) (requiring subjective and objective creation of a hostile work environment)).

specific nature of evaluating sexual harassment does mean that different people may reach different conclusions about similar conduct, but this is not unreasonable because the specific facts and circumstances of each incident and the parties involved may require different conclusions. The Davis standard does not require an "intent" element; unwelcome conduct so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it denies a person equal educational opportunity is actionable sexual harassment regardless of the respondent's intent to cause harm.

The Department disagrees that the objectively offensive element results in unnecessary scrutiny of victims' experiences that will create reporting barriers, make campuses less safe, lead to victim-blaming, or perpetuate sexual violence myths and misconceptions.

The Davis standard ensures that all students, employees, and recipients understand that unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex is actionable under Title IX when a reasonable person in the complainant's position would find the conduct severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive such that it effectively denies equal access to the recipient's education program or activity.

For reasons explained above, the Department appreciates commenters' concerns that even conduct characterized by commenters as low-level harassment (such as cat-calling and microaggressions) can be harmful, and that some situations have escalated from minor incidents into violence and even homicide against women. This is why, in response to commenters, we have revised final § 106.30 to include as per se sexual harassment every incident of the Clery Act/VAWA offenses of dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking (in addition to sexual assault, which was referenced in the NPRM and remains part of the final regulations). In this way, the § 106.30 definition stands firmly against sex-based physical conduct, including violence and threats of violence, while ensuring that verbal and expressive conduct is punishable as

Title IX sex discrimination only when the conduct crosses a line from protected speech into sexual harassment that denies a person equal access to education. For the same reasons, the § 106.30 definition pushes back against an historical, societal problem of normalizing violence against women. By not imposing an "intent" element into the sexual harassment definition, § 106.30 makes clear that sexual harassment under any part of the § 106.30 definition cannot be excused by trying to blame the victim or rationalize the perpetrator's behavior, tactics pointed to by commenters (and supported by research) as common reasons why victims (particularly women) have often faced dismissiveness, shame, or ridicule when reporting sex-based violence to authorities.

Changes: We have revised the second prong of the § 106.30 definition to expressly state that the Davis elements are determined under a reasonable person standard.

Effectively Denies Equal Access

Comments: Many commenters objected to the element in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition that conduct "effectively denies a person equal access" as a confusing, stringent, unduly restrictive standard that will harm survivors, benefit perpetrators, and send the message to assailants that non-physical sexual harassment is acceptable. At least one commenter stated that requiring conduct to rise to the level of denying a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity is inconsistent with the language of Title IX because it is a higher bar than the statute's provision

(20 U.S.C. 1681) that "no person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving federal financial assistance." Several commenters asserted that waiting until a complainant's access to education has been denied means that students must wait for help until harassing or violent behaviors cause victims to reach a breaking point, making a mockery of institutional responsibility and the values of an educational community.

Many commenters believed that the "effectively denies equal access" element supports a culture that conveys acceptance of sexual harassment of women as long as the victims continue showing up to school, leaving girls and women in situations that are difficult and discouraging without recourse until they have lost access altogether. Many commenters believed that in order to file a Title IX complaint meeting this element, a victim would need to drop out of school entirely, fail a class, have a panic attack, be unable to function, or otherwise provide evidence of denial of access. Commenters argued that this standard makes no sense because help should be given to complainants before

access has been denied, and will lead to more victims dropping out of school. One commenter relayed a personal story of sexual assault and stated that the commenter felt deterred from reporting the incident because the commenter was unsure whether, under the NPRM, the university would consider the incident significant enough to respond, despite the fact that the commenter knew of witnesses who could attest to the incident, and the commenter had to switch out of a class to avoid crossing paths with the perpetrator.

Many commenters believed that this element has a perverse effect of leaving students who demonstrate resilience by managing to attend classes and participate in educational activities despite being subjected to harassment and abuse without protection from the harassment they suffer. A few

commenters opposed this element because it places the focus on a survivor's response to trauma instead of on the unwelcome conduct itself, when everyone responds differently to trauma. One commenter recounted an experience of reporting sexual violence to the police and being told that they did not appear "traumatized enough" to be credible; the commenter argued that this element of the § 106.30 definition leaves too much subjectivity with school officials to interpret a victim's reaction to trauma.[750]

One commenter supported the proposed rules because for the first time the Department is regulating sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination under Title IX, and sexual assault as a form of sexual harassment,

---

[750] Commenters cited: Rebecca Campbell, Survivors' Help-Seeking Experiences With the Legal and Medical Systems, 20 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2005), for the proposition that trauma cannot be identified or understood by looking at someone and everyone responds to trauma in a different manner.

but expressed concern that many commenters interpret the "effectively denies equal access" element as requiring students to drop out of school before action can be taken, amounting to a "constructive expulsion" requirement that is much more strict than what Title IX requires. Many commenters expressed the belief that this element means harassment is not actionable unless a complainant has been effectively driven off campus, and most of these commenters urged the Department to use "denies or limits" or simply "limits" instead of "effectively denies" to clarify that unwelcome conduct is actionable when it limits (not only when it has already denied) equal access to education. Many such commenters noted that the 2001 Guidance used "deny or limit" to recognize that students should not be denied a remedy for sexual harassment because they continue to come to class or participate in athletic practice no matter at what personal or emotional cost. At least one commenter stated that the 2001 Guidance only prohibits conduct that is sufficiently serious to deny or limit a student's educational benefits or opportunities from both a subjective and objective perspective, so if the purpose of the proposed definition is to minimize its misapplication to low-level situations that remain protected by the First Amendment (for public institutions) and principles of academic freedom (for private institutions), that could be accomplished simply through clarification of the 2001 Guidance rather than adopting the Davis definition.

Several commenters wondered how a victim is supposed to prove effective denial, and stated that such a hurdle

only perpetuates the harmful concept of "the perfect victim" that already causes too many victims to question whether their experience has been "bad enough" to be considered valid and worthy of intervention. One commenter asserted that knowledge about high functioning depression is growing more common, but a victim who is attending classes and does not appear significantly affected might believe they cannot even report sexual harassment and must continue suffering in silence. One commenter wondered if this element would mean that a third grade student sexually harassed by a sixth grade student who still attends school but expresses anxiety to their parent every day, begins bed-wetting, or cries themselves to sleep at night, has experienced “effective denial” or not. The same commenter further wondered if a ninth grader joining the wrestling team who gets sexually hazed by teammates has been "effectively denied" access if he quits the team but still carries on with other school activities. Another commenter stated that "deny access" would seem to allow for a professor to make inappropriate gender related jokes, making students of that gender feel uncomfortable in the class and potentially perform poorer,

although they still attend class, so thus they are not "denied," but rather just "negatively impacted."

One commenter argued that this element mirrors the statutory language of "excluded from participation," but neglects the other two clauses (denial of benefits and subjected to discrimination) in the Title IX statute. This commenter stated that while this higher standard might be appropriate under the Supreme Court's rubric for Title IX private lawsuits, the Department should not reduce its own administrative authority because sexual harassment can, and does, deny people educational benefits and opportunities even without excluding them entirely from access to education. This commenter argued that if Congress intended for the denial of benefits clause to be as narrow as the exclusion from participation clause,

Congress would not have bothered using the two phrases separately; rules of statutory construction mean that Congress does not use words accidentally or without meaning. The commenter argued that a plain interpretation of the Title IX statute means that a lower level of denial of benefits could violate Title IX as much as a higher level of exclusion from participation. The commenter asserted that this does not mean that a very minor limitation of access would meet the standard, but some limitations (short of "denial") should meet the standard and must be covered by Title IX.

One commenter expressed concern over the varied interpretations of "access" to educational activities among Federal courts, noting that some interpret it narrowly (i.e., the ability of a student to enter in or begin an educational activity) while others interpret it more broadly (i.e., the ability to enter into an educational activity free from discriminatory experiences). Another commenter requested clarification that the Department interprets the "effective denial of equal access" element as not just physical inability to attend classes but also where a complainant experiences negative impacts on learning opportunities. Some

commenters expressed concern that recipients will be confused about whether they are obligated to intervene if a student skips class to avoid a harasser, has difficulty focusing in class because of harassment, or suffers a decline in their grade point average (GPA) due to harassment, since these consequences have not yet cut off the student's "access" to education.

A few commenters expressed concern that this element could have detrimental effects on international students because they rely on student visas that require them to meet a certain academic performance, so waiting until academic performance has suffered may be too late to help the international student because the student may already have lost their student visa. At least one commenter argued that this element is inappropriate in the elementary and secondary school context because the time-limited nature of education during the developmental years means that requiring inaction until a student has already lost educational access impedes basic civil rights.

One commenter wondered if a recipient exercising disciplinary power over student misconduct that does not affect the complainant's access to its program or activity, but declining to do so for sexual harassment, would be making a gender-based exception that constitutes sex discrimination in violation of Title IX.

Several commenters urged the Department to adopt an alternative approach adapted from workplace sexual harassment law, under which unwelcome conduct is actionable where it creates an environment reasonably perceived (and actually perceived) as hostile and abusive, altering work conditions, without requiring any showing of a tangible adverse action or psychological harm.[751] One such commenter urged the Department to adopt this "tried and tested formula" because the harm done to a survivor's educational access and performance should be just one factor in determining whether harassing conduct creates an environment which would be reasonably perceived as hostile, and no single factor should be dispositive but rather based on the totality of all the circumstances.[752] One commenter suggested replacing "effectively denies a person's equal access" with "effectively bars a person's access to an educational opportunity or benefit"

---

[751] Commenters cited: Harris, 510 U.S. at 22.

---

[752] Commenters cited: Harris, 510 U.S. at 22-23 ("This is not, and by its nature cannot be, a mathematically precise test . . . But we can say that whether an environment is 'hostile' or 'abusive' can be determined only by looking at all the circumstances . . . no single factor is required.").

because the former sets too high a standard while the "effectively bars" phrase is used in Davis.[753]

A few commenters argued that eliminating hostile environment in its entirety from analyses of sexual harassment leaves victims without recourse and reflects the Department's ignorance of the realities of sexual violence because conduct considered

---

[753] Commenters cited: Davis, 526 U.S. at 640 ("that such an action will lie only for harassment that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively bars the victim's access to an educational opportunity or benefit").

benign when examined in isolation can be oppressive and limiting when considered in the context of sexual trauma. One such commenter argued that the decision to eliminate the concept of "hostile environment" without anything in its place is a callous decision that fundamentally contradicts the purpose of Title IX. This commenter contended that harassment in the form of cat-calling, for instance, creates a hostile environment even without interfering with access to education, and should not be tolerated.

One commenter stated that the NPRM is inconsistent because at some points, the Department writes that schools must intervene in harassment that "effectively denies a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity," but at other points, the

Department omits the critical word "equal" before "access."

Discussion: The Department understands commenters' concerns that the "effectively denies a person equal access" element sets too high a bar for a sexual harassment complainant to seek assistance from their school, college, or university. The Department reiterates that this element does not apply to the first or third prongs of the §

106.30 definition (quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA offenses, none of which need a demonstrated denial of equal access in any particular situation because the Department agrees with commenters that such acts inherently jeopardize equal educational access).

The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that, contrary to many commenters' fears and concerns, this element does not require that a complainant has already suffered loss of education before being able to report sexual harassment. This element of the Davis standard formulated in § 106.30 requires that a person's "equal" access to education has been denied, not that a person's total or entire educational access has been denied. This element identifies severe, pervasive, objectively offensive unwelcome conduct that deprives the complainant of equal access, measured against the access of a person who has not been subjected to the sexual harassment. Therefore, we do not intend for this element to mean that more victims will withdraw from classes or drop out of school, or that only victims who do so will have recourse from their schools.

This element is adopted from the Supreme Court's approach in Davis,

where the Supreme Court specifically held that Title IX's prohibition against exclusion from participation, denial of benefits, and subjection to discrimination applies to situations ranging from complete, physical exclusion from a classroom to denial of equal access.[754] In line with this approach, the § 106.30 definition does [754] See Davis, 526 U.S. at 651 ("It is not necessary, however, to show physical exclusion to demonstrate that students have been deprived by the actions of another student or students of an educational opportunity on the basis of sex. Rather, a plaintiff must establish sexual harassment of students that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive, and that so undermines and detracts from the victims' educational experience, that the victim-students are effectively denied equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities.") (emphasis added).

not apply only when a complainant has been entirely, physically excluded from educational opportunities but to any situation where the sexual harassment "so undermines and detracts from the victims' educational experience, that the victim-students are effectively denied equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities."[755] Neither

[755] See id. at 650-652 (describing the denial of access element variously as: "depriv[ing] the victims of access to the educational opportunities or benefits provided by the school," "effectively den[ying] equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities" and "den[ying] its victims the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect.") (emphasis added).

the Supreme Court, nor the final regulations in § 106.30, requires showing that a complainant dropped out of school, failed a class, had a panic attack, or otherwise reached a "breaking point" in order to report and receive a recipient's supportive response to sexual harassment. The Department acknowledges that individuals react to sexual harassment in a wide variety of ways, and does not interpret the Davis standard to require certain manifestations of trauma or a "constructive expulsion." Evaluating whether a reasonable person in the complainant's position would deem the alleged harassment to deny a person "equal access" to education protects complainants against school officials inappropriately judging how a complainant has reacted to the sexual harassment. The § 106.30 definition neither requires nor permits school officials to impose notions of what a "perfect victim" does or says, nor may a recipient refuse to respond to sexual harassment because a complainant is "high-functioning" or not showing particular symptoms following a sexual harassment incident.

School officials turning away a complainant by deciding the complainant was "not traumatized enough" would be impermissible under the final regulations because § 106.30 does not require evidence of concrete manifestations of the harassment. Instead, this provision assumes the negative educational impact of quid pro quo harassment and Clery Act/VAWA offenses included in § 106.30 and evaluates other sexual harassment based on whether a reasonable person in the complainant's position would be effectively denied equal access to education compared to a similarly situated person who is not suffering the alleged sexual harassment. Thus, contrary to commenters' concerns, victims do not need to suffer in silence, and do not need to worry about what types of symptoms of trauma will be "bad enough" to ensure that a recipient responds to their report. Commenters' examples of a third grader who starts

bed-wetting or crying at night due to sexual harassment, or a high school wrestler who quits the team but carries on with other school activities following sexual harassment, likely constitute examples of denial to those complainants of "equal" access to educational opportunities even without constituting a total exclusion or denial of an education, and the Department reiterates that no specific type of

reaction to the alleged sexual harassment is necessary to conclude that severe, pervasive, objectively offensive sexual harassment has denied a complainant "equal access."

For reasons described above, the Department believes that adoption and adaption of the Davis standard better serves both the purposes of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate and constitutional protections of free speech and academic freedom, and thus the final regulations retain the Davis formulation of effective denial of equal access rather than the language used in Department guidance documents. While commenters correctly assert that the Department is not required to use the Davis standard, for the reasons explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department is persuaded that the Supreme Court's Title IX cases provide the appropriate backdrop for Title IX enforcement, and the Department has intentionally adapted that framework for administrative enforcement to provide additional protections to complainants (and respondents) not required in private Title IX litigation. With respect to the denial of equal access element, neither the Davis Court nor the Department's final regulations require complete exclusion from an education, but rather denial of "equal" access. Signs of enduring unequal educational access due to severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive sexual harassment may include, as commenters suggest, skipping class to avoid a harasser, a decline in a student's grade point average, or having difficulty concentrating in class; however, no concrete injury is required to conclude that serious harassment would deprive a reasonable person in the complainant's position of the ability to access the recipient's education program or activity on an equal basis with persons who are not suffering such harassment. This clarification addresses the concerns of some commenters that a rule requiring total denial of access would harm international students whose student visas may be in jeopardy if their academic performance suffers, and the similar concerns from commenters that waiting to help until an elementary school student has dropped out of school would irreparably damage the student's educational pathways. For the same reasons, § 106.30 does not raise the issue identified by a commenter as to whether a school would be violating

Title IX by requiring a student to suffer total exclusion before responding to sexual harassment as compared to other types of misconduct.

For reasons described above, the Department is persuaded by Supreme Court reasoning that different standards for actionable harassment are appropriate under Title IX (for educational environments) and Title VII (for the workplace). However, neither law requires "tangible adverse action or psychological harm" before the sexual harassment may be actionable, as a commenter feared would be required under these final regulations.

The Department agrees that the Supreme Court used a variety of phrasing through the majority opinion to describe the "denial of equal access" element. However, the Department does not agree with the commenter who

suggested that using “effectively bars access to an educational opportunity or benefit ” instead of “effectively denies equal access to an education program or activity” yields a broader or better formulation, and in fact, the Department believes that under the Davis Court’s reasoning, denial of “equal access” to a recipient’s education program or activity reflects a broad standard that appropriately captures situations of unequal access due to sex discrimination, in conformity with Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, and § 106.30 reflects this standard by using the phrase "effectively denies a person equal access."

The Department disputes that § 106.30 eliminates the concept of hostile environment "without anything in its place." While the concept of a hostile environment originated under Title VII to describe sexual harassment creating a hostile or abusive workplace environment altering the conditions of a complainant's job, when interpreting Title IX the Supreme Court carefully applied a standard tailored to address the particular discriminatory ill addressed by Title IX: denying a person "the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect."[756] Contrary to [756] Id. at 652 (holding schools liable where the sexual harassment "denies its victims the equal access to education that Title IX is designed to protect.").

the contention of some commenters that all unwelcome conduct must be covered by Title IX even if it does not interfere with education, Title IX is concerned with sex discrimination in an education program or activity, but as discussed above, does not stand as a Federal civility code that requires schools, colleges, and universities to prohibit every instance of unwelcome or undesirable behavior. The Department acknowledges that the 2001 Guidance and 2017 Q&A use the phrase "hostile environment" to describe sexual harassment that is not quid pro quo harassment[757] and that these final regulations depart from those guidance documents by describing sexual harassment as actionable when it effectively denies a person equal access

[757] 2001 Guidance at 5 ("By contrast, sexual harassment can occur that does not explicitly or implicitly condition a decision or benefit on submission to sexual conduct. Harassment of this type is generally referred to as hostile environment harassment."); 2017 Q&A at 1. The withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and withdrawn 2014 Q&A similarly relied on a hostile environment theory of sexual harassment. 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 15; 2014 Q&A at 1.

to education rather than when the sexual harassment creates a hostile environment. While the two concepts may overlap, for reasons discussed above, the denial of equal access to education element is more precisely tailored to serve the purpose of Title IX (which bars discrimination in education programs or activities) than the hostile environment concept, which originated to describe the kind of hostile or abusive workplace environment sexual harassment may create under Title VII.[758] Under these final regulations, where sexual harassment effectively denies a person "equal access" to education, recipients must offer the complainant supportive measures (designed to [758] To the extent that the Supreme Court in Davis cited to Title VII cases as authority for its formulation of the "effectively denied equal access" element for actionable sexual harassment under Title IX, we believe that such citations indicate that the Title IX focus on "effectively denied equal access" element is the educational equivalent of the workplace doctrine of "hostile environment." E.g., Davis, 526 U.S. at 651 ("Rather, a plaintiff must establish sexual harassment of students that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive, and that so undermines and detracts from the victims' educational experience, that the victim-students are effectively denied equal access to an institution's resources and opportunities. Cf. Meritor Sav. Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. at 67."); id. ("Whether gender-oriented conduct rises to the level of actionable 'harassment' thus 'depends on a constellation of surrounding circumstances, expectations, and relationships,' Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 523 U.S. 75, 82, 140 L. Ed. 2d 201, 118 S. Ct. 998 (1998)."). Even though these final regulations do not rely on a "hostile environment" theory of sexual harassment, a recipient may choose to deliver special training to a class, disseminate information, or take other steps that are designed to clearly communicate the message that the school does not tolerate harassment and will be responsive to any student who reports sexual harassment, as described in the 2001 Guidance, so that no person is effectively denied equal access to education. 2001 Guidance at 16.

restore or preserve the complainant's equal educational access)[759] and, where a fair grievance process finds the respondent to be responsible for sexually harassing the complainant, the recipient must effectively implement remedies designed to restore or [759] Section 106.44(a) (requiring that with or without a grievance process, the recipient's response to sexual harassment must include promptly offering supportive measures to the complainant); § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" as individualized services provided without fee or charge to complainants or respondents, designed to restore or preserve equal access to education without unreasonably burdening the other party).

preserve the complainant's equal educational access.[760]

The Department appreciates commenters' pointing out that the NPRM inconsistently used the phrases "equal access" and "access" and has revised the final regulations to ensure that all provisions referencing denial of access, or preservation or restoration of access, [760] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i) (requiring the recipient to provide remedies to a complainant where a respondent is found responsible following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 and stating that remedies may consist of individualized services similar to those that meet the definition in § 106.30 of supportive measures except that remedies (unlike supportive measures) may be punitive or disciplinary against the respondent, and need not avoid burdening the respondent)); § 106.45(b)(7)(iv) (stating that the Title IX Coordinator is responsible for the effective implementation of remedies).

---

include the important modifier "equal." This will ensure that the appropriate interpretation of this element is better understood by students, employees, and recipients: that Title IX is concerned with "equal access," not just total denial of access.

Changes: We have revised several provisions to ensure the word "equal" appears before "access" (e.g., "effectively denies equal access" or

"restore or preserve equal access") to mirror the use of "equal access" in § 106.30 defining "sexual harassment," so that the terminology and interpretation is consistent throughout the final regulations.

Prong (3) Sexual Assault, Dating Violence, Domestic Violence, Stalking

Comments: Some commenters approved of the third prong of the §

106.30 definition's reference to the Clery Act's definition of sexual assault as part of the overall definition of "sexual harassment."

Many commenters supported the reference to "sexual assault" but contended that the third prong of the definition should also reference the other VAWA crimes included in the Clery Act regulations, namely, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking. A few commenters requested clarification as to whether dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking would only count as sexual harassment under § 106.30 if such crimes met the second prong (severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive), and expressed concern that a single instance of an offense such as dating violence or domestic violence might fail to be included because it would not be considered "pervasive." A few commenters asserted that the proposed regulations would leave dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking in an educational civil rights gray area. Many commenters urged the Department to bring the third prong of the § 106.30 definition into line with the Clery Act, as amended by VAWA, by expressly including dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking.

Several commenters argued that dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking are just as serious as sexual harassment and sexual assault.[761] A few commenters recounted working with victims where domestic violence or stalking escalated beyond the point of limiting educational access even tragically ending up in homicides. A few

---

[761] Commenters cited, e.g.: National Association of Student Affairs Administrators in Higher Education (NASPA) & Education Commission of the States, State Legislative Developments on Campus Sexual Violence: Issues in the Context of Safety 7-8 (2015); Wendy Adele Humphrey, "Let's Talk About Sex": Legislating and Educating on the Affirmative Consent Standard, 50 UNIV. OF S.F. L. REV. 35, 49, 58-60, 62-64, 71 (2016); Emily A. Robey-Phillips, Federalism in Campus Sexual Violence: How States Can Protect Their Students When a Trump Administration Will Not, 29 YALE J. OF L. & FEMINISM 373, 393-414 (2018).

commenters noted that dating violence was recently added as a reportable crime under the Clery Act in part because 90 percent of all campus rapes occur via date rapes,[762] and dating violence should be included in the § 106.30 definition.

Some commenters asserted that domestic violence is prevalent among youth, and that the highest rate of dating

---

[762] Commenters cited: Health Research Funding, 39 Date Rape Statistics on College Campuses, https://healthresearchfunding.org/39-date-rape-statistics-college-campuses/.

violence and domestic violence against females occurs between the ages of 16-24,[763] precisely when victims are likely to be in high school and college, needing Title IX protections. Commenters argued that if a school fails to properly respond to a student's domestic violence situation, the student's health and school performance may suffer and even lead to the victim dropping out of

---

[763] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Factbook: Violence by Intimates (1998).

school, and that a significant number of female homicide victims of college age were killed by an intimate partner.[764]

Many commenters asserted that stalking presents a unique risk to the health and safety of college students due to the significant connection between stalking and intimate partner violence[765] insofar as stalking often

---

[764] Commenter cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Factbook: Violence by Intimates (1998); U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Patterns and Trends: Homicide Trends in the United States, 1980-2008 (Nov. 2011); Katie J. M. Baker, Domestic Violence on Campus is the Next Big College Controversy, BUZZFEED NEWS (Jun. 9, 2015).

[765] Commenters cited: Judith McFarlane et al., Stalking and Intimate Partner Femicide, 3 HOMICIDE STUDIES 300 (1999).

occurs in the context of dating violence and sexual violence. Many commenters asserted that stalking is very common on college campuses and within the college population; persons aged 18-24 (the average age of most college students) experience the highest rates of stalking victimization of any age group;[766] and college-aged women are stalked at higher rates than the general population and that one study showed that over 13 percent of college women had experienced stalking in the academic year prior to the study.[767] One commenter cited a study that showed that in ten percent of stalking situations the victim reported that the stalker committed, or attempted, forced sexual contact.[768] At least one commenter cited research showing that sexual assault

---

[766] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Special Report: Stalking Victimization in the United States (2009).

---

[767] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice, Research Report: The Sexual Victimization of College Women (2000).
[768] Commenters cited: Id.

perpetrators often employed classic stalking strategies (e.g., surveillance and information-gathering) to select victims.[769] A few commenters provided examples of the kind of stalking behaviors that commonly victimize college students, including following a victim to and from classes, repeatedly contacting a student despite requests to cease communication, and threats of self-harm if a student does not pay attention to the stalker. Several commenters expressed concern that without express recognition of stalking as a sexual harassment violation, the discrete incidents involved in a typical stalking pattern might not meet the Davis standard and thus would not be reportable under Title IX. One commenter elaborated on an example of typical stalking behavior that would fall through the cracks of effective response under the proposed rules, where the stalking behavior is pervasive but arguably not serious (when each incident is considered separately) and the complainant declines a no-contact order because the locations where the complainant encounters the respondent are places the complainant needs to access to pursue the complainant's own educational activities. This commenter argued that failure to address sex-based stalking may have dire consequences; the commenter stated that several tragic homicides of female students[770] were preceded by this fairly standard stalking-turned-violent pattern.

---

[769] Commenters cited: David Lisak & Paul Miller, Repeat Rape and Multiple Offending Among Undetected Rapists, 17 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2002).

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for including "sexual assault" referenced in the Clery

---

[770] Commenters described three such homicide situations: the 2010 murder of University of Virginia fourth-year student, Yeardley Love, by her boyfriend who was also a fourth-year student; the 2018 murder of University of Utah student Lauren McCluskey, by her ex-boyfriend; the 2018 murder of 16 year old Texas high schooler Shana Fisher – the first victim of the 17 year old shooter who killed ten students, beginning with Shana who had recently rejected him romantically.

Act as an independent category of sexual harassment in § 106.30 and we are persuaded by the many commenters who asserted that the other Clery Act/VAWA sex-based offenses (dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking) also should be included in the same category as sexual assault. Commenters correctly pointed out that without specific inclusion of dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking in the third prong of § 106.30, those offenses would need to meet the Davis standard set forth in the second prong of the § 106.30 definition. While the NPRM assumed that many such instances would meet the elements of severity and pervasiveness (as well as objective offensiveness and denial of equal access), commenters reasonably expressed concerns that these offenses may not always meet the Davis standard.[771] The Department agrees with commenters who urged that because these offenses concern non-expressive, often violent conduct, even single instances should not be subjected to scrutiny under the Davis standard. Dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking are inherently serious sex-based offenses[772] that risk equal

---

[771] As commenters noted, dating violence and domestic violence may fail to meet the Davis standard because although a single instance is severe it may not be pervasive, while a course of conduct constituting stalking could fail to meet the Davis standard because the behaviors, while pervasive, may not independently seem severe.

[772] Stalking may not always be "on the basis of sex" (for example when a student stalks an athlete due to celebrity worship rather than sex), but when stalking is "on the basis of sex" (for example, when the stalker desires to date the victim) stalking constitutes "sexual harassment" under § 106.30. Stalking that does not constitute sexual harassment because it is not "on the basis of sex" may be prohibited and addressed under a recipient's non-Title IX codes of conduct.

educational access, and failing to provide redress for even a single incident does, as commenters assert, present unnecessary risk of allowing sex-based violence to escalate. The Department is persuaded by commenters' arguments and data showing that dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking are prevalent, serious problems affecting students, especially college-age students. The Department believes that a broad rule prohibiting those offenses appropriately falls under Title IX's non-discrimination mandate without raising any First Amendment concerns. The Department therefore revises the final regulations to include dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking as defined in the Clery Act and VAWA.

Changes: We have revised the third prong of the final § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment to add, after sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking as defined in VAWA.

Comments: One commenter objected to the reference to "sexual assault" in the third prong of the § 106.30 definition by asserting that the definition seemed to be just for the purpose of having sexual assault in the proposed regulations without any intent to enforce it. A few

commenters believed that the third prong's reference to "sexual assault" will not prevent sexual assault even though reported numbers of rapes might decline, because certain situations would no longer be considered rape.

A few commenters objected to the reference to the Clery Act definition of "sexual assault," asserting that the definition of "sexual assault" is too narrow because it fails to capture sex- based acts such as administration of a date rape drug, attempted rape, a respondent forcing a complainant to touch the respondent's genitals, the touching of a complainant's non-private body part (e.g., face) with the respondent's genitals, or an unwanted and unconsented-to kiss on the cheek (even if coupled with forcing apart the complainant's legs).

One commenter believed the definition of sexual assault is too narrow because it does not include a vast number of "ambiguous" sexual assaults; the commenter argued that coercive sexual violence often includes a layer of guilt-inducing ambiguity that may arise from explicit or implied threats used by the perpetrator as a means of compelling nominal (but not genuine) consent. One commenter stated that from December of 2017 to December of 2018, 2,887 people in the United States Googled the question "was I raped?" and according to the same data from Google Trends, in the same time span, 2,311 people Googled "rape definition" and over the last five years, 10,781 and 12,129 people have searched for the question and definition respectively. This commenter argued that these numbers reflect a lack of certainty surrounding what constitutes rape and demonstrate the need for clarity and better education rather than a vague reference to "sexual assault." Another commenter stated that sexual assault cases often fit within a certain "gray area" often centered on consent issues, and that most sexual violence situations are not black and white; the commenter opined that Title IX should be available to help complainants whose experience is “a little grayer” because otherwise people will continue to pressure and coerce partners into having sex that is not truly consensual, creating more and more trauma.

At least one commenter asserted that historically, courts have considered conduct that meets any reasonable definition of criminal sexual assault, including rape, as sex-based harm under

Title IX,[773] and thus a separate reference to "sexual assault" in the § 106.30 definition is unnecessary and only serves to blur the distinction between school-based administrative processes and criminal justice standards. Several other commenters, by contrast, pointed to at least one Federal court opinion holding that a rape failed to meet the [773] Commenters cited: Soper v. Hoben, 195 F.3d 845, 855 (6th Cir. 1999) (assertion that victim was raped, sexually abused, and harassed obviously qualifies as severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive sexual harassment).

"severe and pervasive" standard in private litigation under Title IX.[774]

At least one commenter expressed concern that using the Clery Act's definition of sexual assault (which includes "fondling" under the term "sexual assault") would encompass "butt slaps" (as "fondling") yet this misbehavior occurs with such frequency especially in elementary and secondary schools that school districts will be overwhelmed with needing to investigate those incidents under the strictures of the Title IX grievance process. Another commenter expressed concern that including sexual assault (particularly fondling) in the third prong of the § 106.30 definition is too broad, and wondered whether this definition could encompass innocent play by small children, such as "playing doctor." This

---

[774] Commenters cited: Ross v. Corp. of Mercer Univ., 506 F. Supp. 2d 1325, 1358 (M.D. Ga. 2007) (finding that a single instance of rape was not pervasive under the Davis standard).

commenter argued that where the conduct at issue does not bother the participants it cannot create a subjectively hostile environment or interfere with equal access to an education, regardless of lack of consent based on being under the age of majority.[775]

[775] Commenters cited: Newman v. Federal Express, 266 F.3d 401 (6th Cir. 2001) (racial harassment claim fails when victim is not seriously offended); Jadon v. French, 911 P.2d 20, 30-31 (Alaska 1996) (conduct that does not seriously offend the victim does not create a subjectively hostile environment and thus is not sexually harassing). Conduct must be not just "unwelcome," Meritor Sav. Bank v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 67-68 (1986), but also subjectively hostile and annoying to constitute sexual harassment. This commenter argued that "sexual assault" must include both subjective unwelcomeness and objective interference with access to education to be actionable and also cited: Gordon v. England, 612 F. App'x 330 (6th Cir. 2015) ("extreme groping" did not create an objectively hostile environment, by itself, and thus did not violate Title VII); Brooks v. City of San Mateo, 229 F.3d 917 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding misdemeanor sexual assault involving touching of breast did not create objectively hostile environment, by itself, and thus did not violate Title VII).

One commenter argued that because the Clery Act definition of "sexual assault" includes incest and statutory rape, such a definition will encompass incidents that are consensual when Title IX should be focused on discriminatory conduct, which should be restricted to nonconsensual or unwanted conduct; the commenter asserted that where a half-brother and half-sister, or a 13 year old and an 18 year old, engage in consensual sexual activity the Title IX process should not be used to intervene, even if such conduct may constitute criminal offenses that can be addressed through a criminal justice system. Another commenter argued that the inclusion of statutory rape sweeps up sexual conduct by underage students no matter how consensual, welcome, and reciprocated the conduct might be, and asserted that this over-inclusion

threatens to turn Title IX into enforcement of high school and first-year college students through repressive administrative monitoring of youth sexuality in instances that are not severe, not pervasive, and do not impede educational access.

One commenter described a particular institution of higher education's sexual misconduct policy as defining sexual assault broadly to include “any other intentional unwanted bodily contact of a sexual nature,” a standard the commenter argued is ambiguous and overbroad; the commenter argued that the final regulations should clarify that schools cannot apply a definition of “sexual assault” that equates all unwanted touching (such as a kiss on the cheek) with groping or penetration because it is unfair to treat kissing without verbal consent the same as a sex crime and, in the long run, makes it less likely that women will be taken seriously when sex crimes occur. This commenter also asserted that vague, overbroad definitions of sexual assault disproportionately harm students of color.[776]

---

[776] Commenters cited: Ben Trachtenberg, How University Title IX Enforcement and Other Discipline Processes (Probably) Discriminate Against Minority Students, 18 NEV. L. J. 107 (2017); Emily Yoffe, The Question of Race in Campus Sexual-Assault Cases: Is the system biased against men of color?, THE ATLANTIC (September 2017) (noting that male students of color are "vastly overrepresented" in the cases Yoffe has tracked and arguing that as "the definition of sexual assault used by colleges has become broader and blurrier, it certainly seems possible that unconscious biases might tip some women toward viewing a regretted encounter with a man of a different race as an assault. And as the standards for proving assault have been lowered, it seems likely that those same biases, coupled with the lack of resources common among minority students on campus, might systematically disadvantage men of color in adjudication, whether or not the encounter was interracial."); Janet Halley, Trading the Megaphone for the Gavel in Title IX Enforcement, 128 HARV. L. REV. FORUM 103, 106-08 (2015) ("American racial history is laced

Some commenters believed that the final regulations should include sexual assault in the definition but should use a definition of sexual assault different from the proposed rules' reference to "sexual assault" under the Clery Act regulations. One commenter believed that laypersons reading the regulation should not have to refer to yet another with vendetta-like scandals in which black men are accused of sexually assaulting white women" followed by revelations "that the accused men were not wrongdoers after all . . . . morning-after remorse can make sex that seemed like a good idea at the time look really alarming in retrospect; and the general social disadvantage that black men continue to carry in our culture can make it easier for everyone in the adjudicative process to put the blame on them . . . . Case after Harvard case that has come to my attention . . . has involved black male respondents.").

---

Federal regulation in order to know the definition of "sexual assault." Another commenter stated that by including a cross-reference to the Clery Act regulation, this Title IX regulation could have its definition of sexual assault changed due to regulatory changes under the Clery Act, and that sexual assault should be explicitly defined rather than relying on a cross-reference to a different regulation. One

commenter, supportive of the three-prong definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30, suggested that the provision should include a full definition of sexual assault to better clarify prohibited conduct rather than a cross-reference to the Clery Act.

A few other commenters asserted that the Clery Act definition of sexual assault poses problems; they argued that reference to the Clery Act regulations should be replaced by inserting a definition of sexual assault directly into § 106.30. One such commenter argued that the Clery Act definition of sexual assault is biased against men because under the definitions of rape and fondling, a male who performs oral sex on a female victim likely commits "rape" while a female who performs oral sex on a male victim at most commits "fondling," but not the more serious-sounding offense of rape.

One commenter proposed an alternate definition of sexual assault that would define sexual assault by reference to crimes under each State law as classified under the FBI Uniform Crime Reporting Program's ("FBI UCR") National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS). This commenter asserted that this alternative definition of sexual assault would better serve the Department's purpose because it does not require the Department to issue new definitions for Title IX purposes of the degree of family connectedness for incest, the statutory age of consent for statutory rape, consent and incapacity for consent for rape, and other elements in the listed sex offenses. This commenter further asserted that the commenter's alternative definition would not use the definition of rape in the FBI UCR's Summary Reporting System (SRS), because the FBI has announced that it is retiring the SRS on January 1, 2021 and will collect crime data only through NIBRS thereafter.

Another commenter asserted that the reference in § 106.30 to 34 CFR 668.46(a) for a definition of sexual assault fails to provide meaningful guidance on what conduct recipients must include under

Title IX, because the Clery Act regulation relies on the FBI UCR, which is a reporting system designed to aggregate crime data across the Nation, not intended to provide guidance about what conduct is acceptable or unacceptable for enforcement purposes. Under the Clery Act regulation, this commenter points out that "rape" and "fondling" do not define what consent (or lack of consent) means, and

“fondling” does not identify which body parts are considered “private.” This commenter argued that the need for clarity about what constitutes sexual assault is too important to leave recipients to muddle through vague definitions, and proposed that the third prong of § 106.30 use the following alternative definition of sexual assault: the penetration or touching of another’s genitalia, buttocks, anus, breasts, or mouth without consent; a person acts without consent when, in the context of all the circumstances, the person should reasonably be aware of a substantial risk that the other person is not voluntarily and willingly engaging in the conduct at the time of the conduct; sexual assault must effectively deny a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity.

Discussion: The Department emphasizes that including sexual assault as a form of sexual harassment is not an empty reference; the Department will enforce each part of the § 106.30 definition, including requiring recipients to respond to sexual assault, vigorously for the benefit of all persons in a recipient's education program or activity. The Department believes that the Clery Act's reference to sexual assault is appropriately broad and thus does not agree with the commenter's contention that the sexual assault reference excludes acts that should be considered rape or sexual assault.

The Department acknowledges commenters' concerns that not every act related to or potentially involved in a sexual assault would meet the Clery Act definition of sexual assault. With respect to violative acts such as commenters'

examples of administration of a date rape drug, touching a non-private body part with the perpetrator's private body part, and so forth, such acts constitute criminal acts and/or torts under State laws and likely constitute separate offenses under recipients' own codes of conduct. Therefore, such egregious acts can be addressed even if they do not constitute sexual harassment under Title IX. With respect to an attempted rape, we define "sexual assault" in § 106.30 by reference to the Clery Act,[777] which in turn defines sexual assault by reference to the FBI UCR,[778] and the FBI has stated that the offense of rape includes attempts to commit rape.[779]

The Department disputes a commenter's contention that the sexual assault definition in § 106.30 lacks

---

[777] Section 106.30 (defining "sexual harassment" to include "Sexual assault" as "defined in 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v)").

[778] 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v) ("The term 'sexual assault' means an offense classified as a forcible or nonforcible sex offense under the uniform crime reporting system of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.").

[779] U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, UCR Offense Definitions (with respect to rape, "Attempts or assaults to commit rape are also included"), https://ucrdatatool.gov/offenses.cfm.

sufficient precision to capture sexual assault that occurs under what the commenter called "guilt-inducing ambiguity" or "gray areas" often centered around whether the complainant genuinely consented or only consented due to coercion. For reasons explained in the "Consent" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, the Department intentionally leaves recipients flexibility and discretion to craft their own definitions of consent (and related terms often used to describe the absence or negation of consent, such as coercion). The Department believes that a recipient should select a definition of sexual consent that best serves the unique needs, values, and environment of the recipient's own educational community. So long as a recipient is required to respond to sexual assault (including offenses such as rape, statutory rape, and fondling, which depend on lack of the victim's consent), the Department believes that recipients should retain flexibility in this regard. The Department has revised the final regulations to state that it will not require recipients to adopt a particular definition of consent. [780] With respect to the commenter's point regarding a lack of certainty about what constitutes rape, the Department believes that including sexual assault in these Title IX regulations will contribute to greater societal understanding of what sexual assault is and why every person should be protected against it.

---

[780] Section 106.30 (entry for "consent").

Because Federal courts applying the Davis standard have reached different conclusions about whether a single rape has constituted "severe and pervasive"

sexual harassment sufficient to be covered under Title IX, we are including single instances of sexual assault as actionable under the § 106.30 definition. We believe that sexual assault inherently creates the kind of serious, sex-based impediment to equal access to education that Title IX is designed to prohibit, and decline to require "denial of equal access" as a separate element of sexual assault.

The Department understands the concerns of some commenters that including "fondling" under the term sexual assault poses a perceived challenge for recipients, particularly elementary and secondary schools, where, for instance, "butt slaps" may be a common occurrence. The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that under the Clery Act, fondling is a sex offense defined (by way of reference to the FBI UCR) as the touching of a person's private body parts without the consent of the victim for purposes of sexual gratification. This "purpose" requirement separates the sex offense of fondling from the touching described by commenters as "children playing doctor" or inadvertent contact with a person's buttocks due to jostling in a crowded elevator, and so forth. Where the touching of a person's private body part occurs for the purpose of sexual gratification, that offense warrants inclusion as a sexual assault, and if the "butt slaps" described by one commenter as occurring frequently in elementary and secondary schools do constitute fondling, then those elementary and secondary schools must respond to knowledge of those sex offenses for the protection of students. The definition of fondling, properly understood, appropriately guides schools, colleges, and universities to consider fondling as a sex offense under Title IX, while distinguishing touching that does not involve the requisite "purpose of sexual gratification" element, which still may be addressed by a recipient outside a Title IX process. The Department notes that recipients may find useful guidance in State law criminal court decisions that often

recognize the principle that, with respect to juveniles, a sexualized purpose should not be ascribed to a respondent without examining the circumstances of the incident (such as the age and maturity of the parties).[781] The Department declines to create an exception for fondling that occurs where both parties engage in the conduct [781] See, e.g., In re K.C., 226 N.C. App. 452, 457 (N.C. App. 2013) ("On the question of sexual purpose, however, this Court has previously held – in the context of a charge of indecent liberties between children – that such a purpose does not exist without some evidence of the child's maturity, intent, experience, or other factor indicating his purpose in acting[.] . . . Otherwise, sexual ambitions must not be assigned to a child's actions. . . . The element of purpose may not be inferred solely from the act itself. . . . Rather, factors like age disparity, control by the juvenile, the location and secretive nature of the juvenile's actions, and the attitude of the juvenile should be taken into account. . . . The mere act of touching is not enough to show purpose.") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

---

willingly even though they are underage, because of an underage party's inability to give legal consent to sexual activity, and as discussed above the "for the purposes of sexual gratification" element of fondling protects against treating innocuous, non-sexualized touching between children as sexual harassment under Title IX.

For similar reasons, the Department declines to exclude incest and statutory rape from the definition of sexual assault. The Department understands commenters' concerns, but will not override the established circumstances under which consent cannot legally be given (e.g., where a party is under the age of majority) or under which sexual activity is prohibited based on familial connectedness (e.g., incest). The Department notes that where sexual activity is not unwelcome, but still meets

a definition of sexual assault in § 106.30, the final regulations provide flexibility for how such situations may be handled under Title IX. For instance, not every such situation will result in a formal complaint requiring the recipient to investigate and adjudicate the incident;[782] the recipient has the discretion to facilitate an informal

[782] Section 106.30 (defining "formal complaint" to mean a document "filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator" and defining "complainant" to mean "an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment"). Situations where an individual does not view themselves as a "victim" likely will not result in the filing of a formal complaint triggering a § 106.45 grievance process.

resolution after a formal complaint is filed;[783] the final regulations remove the NPRM's previous mandate that a Title IX Coordinator must file a formal complaint upon receipt of multiple reports against the same respondent;[784] the final regulations allow a recipient to dismiss a formal complaint where the complainant informs the Title IX

[783] Section 106.45(b)(9) (permitting a recipient to facilitate informal resolution, with the voluntary written consent of both parties, of any formal complaint except those alleging that an employee sexually harassed a student).
[784] See the "Proposed § 106.44(b)(2) Reports by Multiple Complainants of Conduct by Same Respondent [removed in final regulations]" subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" section of this preamble.

Coordinator in writing that the complainant wishes to withdraw the formal complaint;[785] and the final regulations do not require or prescribe disciplinary sanctions.[786] Thus, the final regulations provide numerous avenues to avoid situations where a recipient is placed in a position of feeling compelled to drag parties through a grievance

---

[785] Section 106.45(b)(3)(ii).

[786] See the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaptation of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, noting that the final regulations intentionally refrain from second guessing recipients' decisions with respect to imposition of disciplinary sanctions following an accurate, reliable determination reached by following a § 106.45 grievance process. This leaves recipients flexibility to decide appropriate sanctions in situations where behavior constituted sexual harassment under § 106.30 yet did not subjectively offend or distress the complainant.

process where no party found the underlying incident unwelcome, offensive, or impeding access to education, and recipients should not feel incentivized by the final regulations to become repressive monitors of youth sexuality.[787]

The Department understands a commenter's concern that some

---

[787] See the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.3 Definitions" section of this preamble, discussing the reasons why these final regulations permit a formal complaint (which triggers a recipient's grievance process) to be filed only by a complainant (i.e., the alleged victim) or by the Title IX Coordinator, and explaining that a Title IX Coordinator's decision to override a complainant's wishes by initiating a grievance process when the complainant does not desire that action will be evaluated by whether the Title IX Coordinator's decision was clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances (that is, under the general deliberate indifference standard described in § 106.44(a)).

recipients have defined sexual misconduct very broadly, including labeling a wide range of physical contact made without verbal consent as "sexual assault." For reasons described above and in the "Consent" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, the Department declines to require recipients to adopt particular definitions of consent, and declines to prohibit recipients from addressing conduct that does not meet the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment under non-Title IX codes of conduct. The Department believes that recipients should retain flexibility to set standards of conduct for their own educational communities that go beyond conduct prohibited under Title IX (or, in the case of defining consent, setting standards for that element of sexual assault). The Department notes that many

commenters submitted information and data showing that conduct "less serious" than that constituting § 106.30 sexual harassment can still have negative impacts on victims, and can escalate into actionable harassment or assault when left unaddressed[788] and therefore recipients should retain discretion to decide how to address

---

[788] E.g., Rachel E. Gartner & Paul R. Sterzing, Gender Microaggressions as a Gateway to Sexual Harassment and Sexual Assault: Expanding the Conceptualization of Youth Sexual Violence, 31 AFFILIA: J. OF WOMEN & SOCIAL WORK 491 (2016); Dorothy Espelage et al., Longitudinal Associations Among Bullying, Homophobic Teasing, and Sexual Violence Perpetration Among Middle School Students, 30 JOURNAL OF INTERPERSONAL VIOLENCE 14 (2014); Eduardo A. Vasquez et al., The sexual objectification of girls and aggression towards them in gang and non-gang affiliated youth, 23 PSYCHOL., CRIME & LAW 5 (2016); National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018).

student and employee misconduct that is not actionable under Title IX. The Department shares commenters' concerns that vague, ambiguously-worded sexual misconduct policies have resulted in some respondents being punished unfairly. The Department is equally concerned that complainants, too, have often been denied opportunity to understand and participate in Title IX grievance processes to vindicate instances of sexual violation. These concerns underlie the § 106.45 grievance process prescribed in the final regulations, for the benefit of each complainant and each respondent, regardless of race or other demographic characteristics. Thus, even if a recipient chooses a definition of "consent" that results in a broad range of conduct prohibited as sexual assault, the recipient's students and employees will be aware of the breadth of conduct encompassed and benefit from robust procedural protections to further each party's respective views and positions with respect to particular allegations.

The Department appreciates commenters' concerns about including sexual assault by reference to the Clery Act regulations at 34 CFR 668.46(a). Postsecondary institutions are already familiar with the Clery Act[789] and the Department's implementing regulations, and although the Clery Act does not apply to elementary and secondary schools, requiring schools, colleges, and universities to reference the same range of sex offenses under both the Clery Act and Title IX will harmonize compliance obligations under both statutes (for postsecondary institutions)

---

[789] The Clery Act applies to institutions of higher education that receive Federal student financial aid under Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended; see discussion under the "Clery Act" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble.

while providing elementary and secondary school recipients with a preexisting Federal reference to sex offenses rather than a new definition created by the Department solely for Title IX purposes. In response to commenters' concerns that reference to the Clery Act regulations leaves these final regulations subject to changes to the Clery Act regulations, the final regulations now reference sexual assault by citing to the Clery Act statute (and as to dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking, the VAWA statute[790]), rather than to the Clery Act regulations. The Clery Act statute references sex offenses as defined in the FBI UCR,[791] a national crime

[790] VAWA at 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(10), (a)(8), and (a)(30), defines dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking, respectively.

[791] The Clery Act, 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v) defines "sexual assault" to mean an "offense classified as a forcible or nonforcible sex offense under the uniform crime reporting system of the Federal Bureau of Investigation." The FBI UCR, in turn, consists of two crime reporting systems: The Summary Reporting System (SRS) and the National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS). U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Criminal Justice Information Services, SRS to NIBRS: The Path to Better UCR Data (Mar. 28, 2017). The current Clery Act regulations, 34 CFR 668.46(a), direct recipients to look to the SRS for a definition of rape and to NIBRS for a definition of fondling, statutory rape, and incest as the offenses falling under "sexual assault." The FBI has announced it will retire the SRS and transition to using only the NIBRS in January 2021. Federal Bureau of Investigation, Criminal Justice Information Services, Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) Program, National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS), https://www.fbi.gov/services/cjis/ucr/nibrs. NIBRS' forcible and nonforcible sex offenses consist of: rape, sodomy, and sexual assault with an object (as well as fondling, statutory rape, and incest, as noted above). Thus, reference to the Clery Act will continue to cover the same range of sex offenses under the FBI UCR regardless of whether or when the FBI phases out the SRS.

reporting program designed to standardize crime statistics across jurisdictions. At the same time, this modification preserves the benefit of harmonizing Clery Act and Title IX obligations that arise from a recipient's awareness of sex offenses.

The Department disagrees that the Clery Act's definition of sexual assault is biased or discriminatory against men. Although under the FBI UCR definitions

it is possible that, for example, oral sex performed on an unconscious woman may be designated as a different offense than oral sex performed on an unconscious man, the difference is not discriminatory or unfairly biased against men, because any such difference results from differentiation between a penetrative versus non-penetrative act, yet under the FBI UCR both offenses fall under the term sexual assault, and further, penetrative acts against both men and women (and touching the genitalia of men, and of women) all fall under FBI UCR sex offenses. While conduct might be classified differently based on whether the victim was male or female, such offenses would fall under the term sexual assault. All the sex offenses designated under the Clery Act as sexual assault represent serious violations of a person's bodily and emotional autonomy, regardless of whether a particular sexual assault is categorized as rape, fondling, or other forcible or non-forcible sex offense under the FBI UCR.

For similar reasons, the Department declines to adopt the alternative definitions of sexual assault proposed by commenters. The Department believes that, with the final regulations' modification to reference the Clery Act and VAWA statutes rather than solely the Clery Act regulations, "sexual assault" under § 106.30 is appropriately broad, capturing all conduct falling under forcible and non-forcible sex offenses determined by reference to the FBI UCR, while facilitating postsecondary institution recipients' understanding of their obligations under both the Clery Act and Title IX and providing an appropriate reference for elementary and secondary schools to protect students from sex offenses under Title IX.

The Department disagrees that the definitions of rape and fondling in the FBI UCR are too narrow. The violative sex acts covered by offenses described in the FBI UCR were designed to cover a broad range of sexual misconduct regardless of how different jurisdictions have defined such offenses under State criminal laws,[792] an approach that lends itself to the purpose of these final regulations, which is to ensure that recipients across all jurisdictions include a variety of sex offenses as discrimination under Title IX.

The Department disagrees that including statutory rape and incest makes the sexual assault category too

---

[792] In explaining one of the two systems used in the FBI UCR, the FBI has stated: "the definitions used in the NIBRS [National Incident-Based Reporting System] must be generic in order not to exclude varying state statutes relating to the same type of crime. Accordingly, the offense definitions in the NIBRS are based on common-law definitions found in Black's Law Dictionary, as well as those used in the Uniform Crime Reporting Handbook and the NCIC Uniform Offense Classifications. Since most state statutes are also based on common-law definitions, even though they may vary as to the specifics, most should fit into the corresponding NIBRS offense classifications." U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Uniform Crime Reporting System, National Incident-Based Reporting System (2011), https://ucr.fbi.gov/nibrs/2011/resources/nibrs-offense-definitions.

broad, and declines to adopt the specific alternative definitions of sexual assault proposed by commenters. The Department believes that, in response to commenters' concerns, the final regulations appropriately capture a broad range of sex offenses referenced in the Clery Act and VAWA (which refer to the FBI UCR without specifying whether to look to the SRS or NIBRS, foreclosing any problem resulting from the FBI's transition from the SRS to the NIBRS system) while leaving recipients the discretion to select particular definitions of consent (and what constitutes a lack of consent) that best reflect each recipient's values and community standards and adopt a broader or narrower definition of, e.g., fondling by specifying which body parts are considered "private" or whether the touching must occur underneath or over a victim's clothing. Regardless of how narrowly or broadly a recipient defines "consent" with respect to the FBI UCR's categories of forcible and nonforcible sex offenses, the Department believes that any such offenses would constitute conduct jeopardizing equal access to education in violation of Title IX without raising constitutional concerns, and that the § 106.45 grievance process gives complainants and respondents opportunity to fairly resolve factual allegations of such conduct.

Changes: The third prong of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment now references "sexual assault" per the Clery Act at 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(A)(v) (instead of referencing the Clery Act regulations at 34 CFR 668.46); and adds reference to VAWA to include "dating violence" as defined in 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(10), "domestic violence" as defined in 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(8), and "stalking" as defined in 34 U.S.C. 12291(a)(30).

Gender-based harassment

Comments: A number of commenters discussed issues related to gender-based harassment, sexual orientation, and gender identity.

Some commenters expressed the general view that LGBTQ individuals need to be protected and were concerned that the proposed rules would make campuses even more unsafe for LGBTQ students and have a negative impact on addressing issues of gender-based discrimination and harassment.

Several commenters stated the LGBTQ community experiences sexual violence at much higher rates.

Some commenters expressed specific concerns about the impact of the proposed rules, including the definition of sexual harassment, on transgender individuals.

A few commenters also stated that transgender students should be treated consistent with their gender identity. Some commenters specifically asked the Department to maintain protections presumably found in the withdrawn Letter from James A. Ferg-Cadima, Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for

Policy, Office for Civil Rights at the Department of Education regarding transgender students' access to facilities such as restrooms dated January 7, 2015, and "Dear Colleague Letter on Transgender Students" jointly issued by the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice and the Office for Civil Rights of the Department of Education, dated May 13, 2016.[793]

---

[793] See U.S. Department of Education & U.S. Department of Justice, Dear Colleague Letter (Feb. 22, 2017) (withdrawing letters), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-201702-title-ix.pdf.

Some commenters expressed concern that the proposed rules promote heterosexuality as the normal or preferred sexual orientation and therefore fail to recognize and capture the identities and experiences of the LGBTQ community and recommended that the Department explicitly state that Title IX protections apply to members of the LGBTQ community.

One commenter believed that all public school districts should adopt and enforce policies stating that harassment for any reason, including on the basis of gender identity, will not be tolerated and that appropriate disciplinary measures will be taken and urged the Department to add language to the proposed rules making clear that such harassment is within the meaning of Title IX.

Some commenters urged the Department to include specific language referring to sexual harassment based on gender identity, including transgender and gender-nonconforming identities or expressions and expressed concern about the lack of such language in the proposed rules. Some of these commenters noted that some courts have interpreted Title IX, Title VII, and similar statutes to prohibit discrimination on the basis of gender identity and sexual orientation because discrimination on either of these bases of discrimination is discrimination on the basis of sex. One commenter acknowledged that contrary case law exists, but asserted Title IX clearly prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex stereotyping which underlies discrimination, harassment, and assaults against LGBTQ people.[794]

On the other hand, one commenter stated that Title IX is about sex and not gender identity and urged the Department to make clear that biology, not gender identity, determines the definition of men and women.

Another commenter asserted that the Department's use of the phrase "on the basis of sex" in defining sexual harassment is limiting. This commenter asserted that the phrase "on the basis of sex" minimizes and confines experiences of gender discrimination and gender-based violence to a binary understanding by aligning it with sex assigned at birth.

---

[794] Commenters cited, e.g.: R.G. & G.R. Harris Funeral Homes Inc. v. Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n, 884 F.3d 560 (6th Cir.), appeal docketed, No. 18-107 (U.S. August 16, 2019); Zarda v. Altitude Express, Inc., 883 F.3d 100 (2d Cir.), appeal docketed, No. 17-1623 (U.S. June 1, 2018).

Another commenter urged the Department to keep transgender males out of female sports categories as it is unfair to women and girls in competitions.

One commenter stated that OCR has long understood that gender-based discrimination, even where discrimination is not sexual in nature, might also fall under Title IX by creating a hostile environment for students. The commenter expressed concern that the term gender only appears once in a footnote in the proposed rules and asked how students' gender presentation, gender identity, and sexual orientation can be considered under the proposed rules and whether the Department made a conscious decision not to include gender and sexual orientation.

Another commenter asked the Department to clarify whether gender-based harassment is still covered under Title IX and whether incidents of sexual exploitation are to be included in these grievance procedures.

Other commenters were generally concerned that the proposed rules would discourage participation of women and gender nonconforming students in academia. One commenter asserted that the single greatest danger to women's health is men. The commenter reminded the Department that Title IX helps protect women (as well as those who have been harassed or assaulted) and asked the Department not to endanger women.

Another commenter recommended that the Department add language stating that sexual harassment is bi-directional (male-to-female and female-to-male).

Discussion: The Department appreciates the concerns of the commenters. Prior to this rulemaking, the Department's regulations did not expressly address sexual harassment. We believe that sexual harassment is an important issue, meriting regulations with the force and effect of law rather than mere guidance documents, which cannot create legally binding obligations.[795]

Title IX, 20 U.S.C. 1681(a), expressly prohibits discrimination "on the basis of sex," which is why the Department

---

[795] Perez v. Mortgage Bankers Ass'n, 525 U.S. 92, 96-97 (2015).

incorporates the phrase "on the basis of sex" in the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30. The word "sex" is undefined in the Title IX statute. The Department did not propose a definition of "sex" in the NPRM and declines to do so in these final regulations.

The focus of these regulations remains prohibited conduct. For example, the first prong of the Department's definition of sexual harassment concerns an employee of the recipient conditioning the provision of an educational aid, benefit, or service on an individual's participation in unwelcome sexual conduct, which is commonly referred to as quid pro quo sexual harassment. Any individual may experience quid pro quo sexual harassment. The second prong of the § 106.30 definition of sexual harassment involves unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex determined by a reasonable person to be so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to the recipient's education program or activity; any individual may experience this form of harassment, as well. The third prong of the sexual harassment definition in these final regulations is sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking on the basis of sex as defined in the Clery Act and VAWA, respectively, and again, any individual may be sexually assaulted or experience dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking on the basis of sex. Thus, any individual – irrespective of sexual orientation or gender identity – may be victimized by the type of conduct defined as sexual harassment to which a recipient must respond under these final regulations.

Title IX and its implementing regulations include provisions that presuppose sex as a binary classification, and provisions in the Department's current regulations, which the Department did not propose to revise in this rulemaking, reflect this presupposition. For example, 20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(2), which concerns educational institutions commencing planned changes in admissions, refers to "an institution which admits only students of one sex to being an institution which admits students of both sexes." Similarly, 20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(6)(B) refers to "men's" and "women's" associations as well as organizations for "boys" and "girls" in the context of organizations "the membership of which has traditionally been limited to persons of one sex." Likewise, 20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(7)(A) refers to "boys'" and

"girls'" conferences. Title IX does not prohibit an educational institution "from maintaining separate living facilities for the different sexes" pursuant to 20 U.S.C. 1686. Additionally, the Department's current Title IX regulations expressly permit sex-specific housing in 34 CFR 106.32 ("[h]ousing provided by a recipient to students of one sex, when compared to that provided to students of the other sex"), separate intimate facilities on the basis of sex in 34 CFR 106.33 (“separate toilet, locker room, and shower facilities on the basis of sex” with references to “one sex” and “the other sex”), separate physical education classes on the basis of sex in 34 CFR 106.34 (“[t]his section does not prohibit separation of students by sex within physical education classes or activities during participation in wrestling, boxing, rugby, ice hockey, football, basketball, and other sports the purpose or major activity of which involves bodily contact"), separate human sexuality classes on the basis of sex in 34 CFR 106.34 ("[c]lasses or portions of classes in elementary and secondary schools that deal primarily with human sexuality may be conducted in separate sessions for boys and girls"), and separate teams on the basis of sex for contact sports in 34 CFR

106.41 (“a recipient may operate or sponsor separate teams for members of each sex where selection for such teams is based upon competitive skill or the activity involved is a contact sport”). In promulgating regulations to implement Title IX, the Department expressly acknowledged physiological differences between the male and female sexes. For example, the Department’s justification for not allowing schools to use “a single standard of measuring skill or progress in physical education classes . . . [if doing so] has an adverse effect on members of one sex"[796] was that "if progress is measured by determining whether an individual can perform twenty-five push-ups, the standard may be virtually out-of-reach for many more women than men because of the difference in strength between average persons of each sex."[797]

[796] 34 CFR 106.43.

The Department declines to take commenters' suggestions to include a definition of the word "sex" in these final regulations because defining sex is not necessary to effectuate these final regulations and has consequences that extend outside the scope of this

[797] U.S. Dep't. of Health, Education, and Welfare, General Administration, Nondiscrimination on the Basis of Sex in Education Programs and Activities Receiving or Benefiting from Federal Financial Assistance, 40 FR 24128, 24132 (June 4, 1975). Through that rulemaking, the Department promulgated § 86.34(d), which is substantially similar to the Department's current regulation 34 CFR 106.43.

rulemaking. These final regulations primarily address a form of sex discrimination – sexual harassment – that does not depend on whether the definition of "sex" involves solely the person's biological characteristics (as at least one commenter urged) or whether a person's "sex" is defined to include a person's gender identity (as other commenters urged). Anyone may experience sexual harassment, irrespective of gender identity or sexual orientation. As explained above, the Department acknowledged physiological differences based on biological sex in promulgating regulations to implement Title IX with respect to physical education. Defining "sex" will have an effect on Title IX regulations that are outside the scope of this rulemaking, such as regulations regarding discrimination (e.g., different treatment) on the basis of sex in athletics. The scope of matters addressed by the final regulations is defined by the subjects presented in the NPRM, and the NPRM did not propose to define sex. The Department declines to address that matter in these final regulations. The Department will continue to look to the Title IX statute and the Department's Title IX implementing regulations with respect to the meaning of the word "sex" for Title IX purposes.

To address a commenter's assertion that Title IX prohibits sex stereotyping that underlies discrimination against LGBTQ individuals, the Department notes that some of the cases the commenter cited are cases under Title VII and are on appeal before the Supreme Court of the United States. The most recent position of the United States in these cases is (1) that the ordinary public meaning of "sex" at the time of Title VII's passage was biological sex and thus the appropriate construction of the word "sex" does not extend to a person's sexual orientation or transgender status, and (2) that discrimination based on transgender status does not constitute sex stereotyping but a transgender plaintiff may use sex stereotyping as evidence to prove a sex discrimination claim if members of one sex (e.g., males) are treated less favorably than members of the other sex (e.g., females).[798] Although the U.S. Attorney General and U.S. Solicitor General interpret the word "sex" solely within the context of Title VII, the current position of the United [798] See Brief of Respondent Equal Employment Opportunity Commission at 16, 22-27, 50-53, R.G. & G.R. Harris Funeral Homes Inc. v. Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n, 884 F.3d 560 (6th Cir.), appeal docketed, No. 18-107 (U.S. August 16, 2019), https://www.supremecourt.gov/DocketPDF/18/18-107/112655/20190816163010995_18-107bsUnitedStates.pdf; accord Amicus Curiae Brief for the United States in Bostock and Zarda, https://www.supremecourt.gov/DocketPDF/17/17-1618/113417/20190823143040818_17-1618bsacUnitedStates.pdf, Bostock v. Clayton County, Ga., 723 F. App'x 964 (11th Cir.), appeal docketed, No. 17-1618 (U.S. June 1, 2018); Zarda v. Altitude Express, Inc., 883 F.3d 100 (2d Cir.), appeal docketed, No. 17-1623 (U.S. June 1, 2018); see also Memorandum from the U.S. Attorney General to the U.S. Attorneys & Heads of Department Components, "Revised Treatment of Transgender Employment Discrimination Claims Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964" (Oct. 4, 2017) https://www.justice.gov/ag/page/file/1006981/download ("Attorney General's Memorandum").

States may be relevant as to the public meaning of the word “sex” in other contexts as well. As explained above, the Department does not define “sex” in these final regulations. These final regulations focus on prohibited conduct, irrespective of a person’s sexual orientation or gender identity. Whether a person has been subjected to the conduct defined in § 106.30 as sexual harassment does not necessarily require reliance on a sex stereotyping theory. Nothing in these final regulations, or the way that sexual harassment is defined in § 106.30, precludes a theory of sex stereotyping from underlying unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex that constitutes sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30.

With respect to sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination in these final regulations, the Department's position in these final regulations remains similar to its position in the 2001 Guidance, which provides:

> Although Title IX does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, sexual harassment directed at gay or lesbian students that is sufficiently serious to limit or deny a student's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's program constitutes sexual harassment prohibited by Title IX under the circumstances described in this guidance. For example, if a male student or a group of male students target a gay student for physical sexual advances, serious enough to deny or limit the victim's ability to participate in or benefit from the school's program, the school would need to respond promptly and effectively, as described in this guidance, just as it would if the victim were heterosexual. On the other hand, if students heckle another student with comments based on the student's sexual orientation (e.g., "gay students are not welcome at this table in the cafeteria"), but their actions do not involve conduct of a sexual nature, their actions would not be sexual harassment covered by Title IX.[799]

…[G]ender-based harassment, which may include acts of verbal, nonverbal, or physical aggression, intimidation, or hostility based on sex or sex-stereotyping, but not involving conduct of a sexual nature, is also a form of sex discrimination to which a school must respond[.] For example, the repeated sabotaging of female graduate students' laboratory experiments by male students in the class could be the basis of a violation of Title IX.

---

[799] 2001 Guidance at 3.

These final regulations provide a definition of sexual harassment that differs in some respects from the definition of sexual harassment in the 2001 Guidance, as explained in more detail in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section, the "Sexual Harassment" subsection in the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section, and throughout this preamble. These final regulations include sexual harassment as unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex that a reasonable person would determine is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it denies a person equal educational access; this includes but is not limited to unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature, and may consist of unwelcome conduct based on sex or sex stereotyping. The Department will not tolerate sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 against any student, including LGBTQ students.

For similar reasons to those discussed above, the Department declines to address discrimination on the basis of gender identity or other issues raised in the Department's 2015 letter regarding transgender students' access to facilities such as restrooms and the 2016 "Dear Colleague Letter on Transgender Students."

These final regulations concern sexual harassment and not the participation of individuals, including transgender individuals, in sports or other competitive activities. We do not believe these final regulations serve to discourage the participation of women in a recipient's education programs and activities, including sports or other competitive activities.

These final regulations address sexual exploitation to the extent that sexual exploitation constitutes sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, and the grievance process in § 106.45

applies to all formal complaints alleging sexual harassment.

Sexual harassment is not limited to being bi-directional (male-to-female and female-to-male). As explained above, these final regulations focus on prohibited conduct, irrespective of the identity of the complainant and respondent. As explained above, any person may experience sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination, irrespective of the identity of the complainant or respondent.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter urged the Department to require that all policies, information, education, training, reporting options, and adjudication processes be accessible and fair and balanced to all students regardless of race, ethnicity, disability, sexual orientation, or other potentially disenfranchising characteristics. One commenter recommended that the Department remove "sex discrimination issues" from the summary section of the preamble because the scope is too narrow and inconsistent with the spirit of Title IX and discrimination in higher education extends beyond sex discrimination. This commenter also stated that the proposed rules refer to recipients' responsibilities related to actionable harassment under Title IX, but the commenter suggested that the term discrimination would be more appropriate because sex- and gender-based harassment is only one form of discrimination that Title IX prohibits. One commenter stated that if the scope of the proposed rules must be limited to sexual harassment, this scope should be clearly stated in the preamble to not give the impression that other forms of discrimination included in Title IX do not require due process.

Discussion: Title IX expressly prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex and not race, disability, or other protected characteristics, and the Department does not have the legal authority to promulgate regulations addressing discrimination on the basis of protected characteristics, other than sex, under

Title IX. The Department enforces other statutes such as Title VI, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, and national origin. The Department's other regulations specifically address discrimination based on these and other protected characteristics.

These final regulations require that all policies, information, education, training, reporting options, and adjudication processes be accessible and fair for all students. For example, any complainant will be offered supportive measures, even if that person does not wish to file a formal complaint under § 106.44(a). Any respondent will receive the due process protections in the § 106.45 grievance process before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions for sexual harassment under § 106.44(a).

Additionally, the recipient's non-discrimination statement, designation of a Title IX Coordinator, policy, grievance procedures, and training materials should be readily accessible to all students pursuant to § 106.8 and § 106.45(b)(10)(i)(D).

For the reasons previously explained, the Department does not define sex in these final regulations, as these final regulations focus on prohibited conduct, namely sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination. As previously explained, the Department's definition of sexual harassment applies for the protection of any person who experiences sexual harassment, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity.

Although these final regulations constitute the Department's first promulgation of regulations that address sexual harassment, these final regulations also make revisions to pre-existing regulations and regulations such as regulations in subpart A and subpart B of Part 106 that generally address sex discrimination but do not specifically address sexual harassment. For example, the Department revises § 106.8, which concerns the designation of a Title IX Coordinator who will address all forms of discrimination on the basis of sex and not just sexual harassment. The Department clarifies in § 106.8(c) that a recipient must adopt and publish grievance procedures that provide for the prompt and equitable resolution of student and employee complaints, alleging any action that would be prohibited by Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations, and also a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 for formal complaints of sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30. Section 106.8(c) thus clarifies that a recipient does not need to apply or use the grievance process in § 106.45 for complaints alleging sex discrimination that does not constitute sexual harassment.

Changes: None.

Supportive Measures

Overall Support and Opposition

Comments: Many commenters supported the definition of "supportive measures" in § 106.30 because the provision states that supportive measures may be offered to complainants and respondents; commenters asserted that supportive measures should be offered on an equal basis to all parties, except to the extent

public safety concerns would require different treatment, stressing that respondents deal with their own strife as a result of going through the Title IX process. These commenters viewed the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures as appropriately requiring measures that do not disproportionately punish, discipline, or unreasonably burden either party. Many commenters appreciated that the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures included a list illustrating the range of services that could be offered to both parties, and several of these commenters specifically expressed strong support for mutual no-contact orders as opposed to one-way no-contact orders.

Many commenters opposed the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures because, while neither party should be presumed to be at fault before an investigation had been completed commenters argued that this provision will cause an overall decrease in the availability of support services and accommodations to victims. Commenters argued that the requirement that supportive measures be "non-disciplinary, non-punitive," "designed [but not required] to restore access," and not unreasonably burdensome to the non-requesting party, significantly limits the universe of supportive measures schools could offer to victims by prohibiting any measure reasonably construed as negative towards a respondent. These commenters believed the supportive measures definition was too respondent-focused and effectively prioritized the education of respondents over complainants. Several commenters identified the clause "designed to effectively restore or preserve" and questioned how OCR would review and determine whether a supportive measure met this requirement. One commenter asserted that supportive measures designed to restore "access," as opposed to equal access, contradicted the proposed definition of "sexual harassment" in § 106.30 as well as the Supreme Court's holding in Davis because restoring some access is an incomplete remedy for a denial of equal access.

Several commenters requested clarification that colleges and universities have flexibility and discretion to approve or disapprove requested supportive measures, including one-way no-contact orders, according to the unique considerations of each situation. Another commenter argued that § 106.30 should be modified to expressly state that schedule and housing adjustments, or removing a respondent from playing on a sports team, do not constitute an unreasonable burden on the respondent when those measures do not separate the respondent from academic pursuits. Commenters argued that § 106.30 should clarify what kind of burdens will be considered "unreasonable." Commenters urged the Department to modify the definition of supportive measures to require that all such measures be proportional to the alleged harm and the least burdensome measures that will protect safety, preserve equal educational access, and deter sexual harassment.

Many commenters suggested that the final regulations should require schools to implement a process through which the parties can seek and administrators can consider appropriate supportive measures, and at least one commenter suggested that a hearing similar to a preliminary injunction hearing under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65 should be used, particularly in cases where one party seeks the other party's removal from certain facilities, programs, or activities. At least one commenter asked the Department to specify that any interim measures must be lifted if the respondent is found not responsible.

Many commenters requested clarification as to what types of supportive measures are allowable in the elementary and secondary school context or requested that the Department expand the supportive measures safe harbor and definition to apply in the elementary and secondary school context. Other commenters asserted that there may be a greater need for supportive measures in cases involving international students, women in career preparatory classes such as construction, manufacturing, and wielding, and lower-income students, for whom dropping out of school could have more drastic and long-lasting consequences.

Many commenters requested that the Department reconsider or clarify the requirement in § 106.30 that the Title IX Coordinator is responsible for effective implementation of supportive measures, arguing that Title IX Coordinators cannot fulfill all the duties assigned to them under the proposed rules (especially if a recipient has only designated one individual as a Title IX Coordinator) and asserting that the responsibility to implement supportive measures could be easily delegated to other offices on campus.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures, and we acknowledge commenters' arguments that the language employed in the proposed definition of the term "supportive measures" is too respondent-focused or lessens the availability of measures to assist victims. The Department disagrees that this provision prioritizes the needs of one party over the other. For example, the § 106.30 definition states that the individualized services can be offered "to the complainant or respondent"[800] free of charge, that the services shall not "unreasonably" burden either party, and may include services to protect the

[800] We emphasize that a "complainant" is any individual who has been alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment, and a "respondent" is any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment, so a person may be a complainant or a respondent regardless of whether a formal complaint has been filed or a grievance process is pending (and irrespective of who reported the alleged sexual harassment – the alleged victim themselves, or a third party). See § 106.30 defining "complainant" and defining "respondent."

safety “of all parties” as well as the recipient’s educational environment, or to deter sexual harassment. The Department disagrees that the requirements for supportive measures to be non-disciplinary, non-punitive, and not unreasonably burdensome to the other party indicate a preference for respondents over complainants or prioritize the education of respondents over that of complainants. These requirements protect complainants and respondents from the other party's request for supportive measures that would unreasonably interfere with either party's educational pursuits. The plain language of the § 106.30 definition does not state that a supportive measure provided to one party cannot impose any burden on the other party; rather, this provision specifies that the supportive measures cannot impose an unreasonable burden on the other party. Thus, the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures permits a wide range of individualized services intended to meet any of the purposes stated in that provision (restoring or preserving equal access to education, protecting safety, deterring sexual harassment).

We do not believe that it would be appropriate to specify, list, or describe

which measures do or might constitute "unreasonable" burdens because that would detract from recipients' flexibility to make those determinations by taking into the account the specific facts and circumstances and unique needs of the parties in individual situations.[801] For similar reasons, we decline to require

[801] The recipient must document the facts or circumstances that render certain supportive measures appropriate or inappropriate. Under § 106.45(b)(10)(ii), a recipient must create and maintain for a period of seven years records of any actions, including any supportive measures, taken in response to a report or formal complaint of sexual harassment and must document the basis for its conclusion that its response was not deliberately indifferent. Specifically, that provision states that if a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document the reasons why such a response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. Thus, if a recipient determines that a particular supportive measure was not appropriate even though requested by a complainant, the recipient must document why the recipient's response to the complainant was not deliberately indifferent.

that supportive measures be "proportional to the harm alleged" and constitute the "least burdensome measures" possible, because we believe that the § 106.30 definition appropriately allows recipients to select and implement supportive measures that meet one or more of the stated purposes (e.g., restoring or preserving equal access; protecting safety; deterring sexual harassment) within the stated parameters (e.g., without being disciplinary or punitive, without unreasonably burdening the other party). The "alleged harm" in a situation alleging conduct constituting sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 is serious harm and the definition of supportive measures already accounts for the seriousness of alleged sexual harassment while effectively ensuring that supportive measures are not unfair to a respondent; even if a supportive measure implemented by a recipient arguably was not the "least burdensome measure" possible, in order to qualify as a supportive measure under § 106.30 the measure cannot punish, discipline, or unreasonably burden the respondent.

To the extent that commenters are advocating for wider latitude for recipients to impose interim suspensions or expulsions of respondents, the Department believes that without a fair, reliable process the recipient cannot know whether it has interim-expelled a person who is actually responsible or not. Where a respondent poses an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of the complainant (or anyone else), § 106.44(c) allows emergency removals of respondents prior to the conclusion of a grievance process (or even where no grievance process is pending), thus protecting the safety of a recipient's community where an immediate threat exist. The Department believes that the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures" in combination with other provisions in the final regulations results in effective options for a recipient to support and protect the safety of a complainant while ensuring that respondents are not prematurely punished.[802]

In response to commenters' concerns that omission of the word "equal" before "access" in the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures creates confusion about whether the purpose of supportive measures is intended to remediate the same denial of "equal access" referenced in the §

---

[802] Section 106.44(c) (governing the emergency removal of a respondent who poses an immediate threat to any person's physical health or safety); § 106.44(d) (permitting the placement of non-student employees on administrative leave during a pending grievance process).

106.30 definition of sexual harassment, we have added the word "equal" before "access" in the definition of supportive measures, and into § 106.45(b)(1)(i) where similar language is used to refer to remedies. The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that whether or not a recipient has implemented a supportive measure "designed to effectively restore or preserve" equal access is a fact-specific inquiry that depends on the particular circumstances surrounding a sexual harassment incident. Section 106.44(a) requires a recipient to offer supportive measures to every complainant irrespective of whether a formal complaint is filed, and if a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document the reasons why such a response was not clearly unreasonable

in light of the known circumstances under § 106.45(b)(10)(ii).[803]

In order to ensure that the definition of supportive measures in § 106.30 is read broadly we have also revised the wording of this provision to more clearly state that supportive measures must be designed to restore or preserve equal access to education without unreasonably burdening the other party,

---

[803] See discussion in the "Section 106.44(a) Deliberate Indifference Standard" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

which may include measures designed to protect the safety of parties or the educational environment, or deter sexual harassment. The Department did not wish for the prior language to be understood restrictively to foreclose, for example, a supportive measure in the form of an extension of an exam deadline which helped preserve a complainant's equal access to education and did not unreasonably burden the respondent but could not necessarily be considered designed to protect safety or deter sexual harassment.

The Department was persuaded by the many commenters who requested that the Department expand provisions that incentivize and encourage supportive measures. As previously noted, we have revised § 106.44(a) to require recipients to offer supportive measures to complainants. As explained in the "Proposed § 106.44(b)(3) Supportive Measures Safe Harbor in Absence of a Formal Complaint [removed in final regulations]" subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble, we have eliminated the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures

altogether and, thus, we do not extend this safe harbor to elementary and secondary schools. As all recipients (including elementary and secondary school recipients) are now required to offer complainants supportive measures as part of their non-deliberately indifference response under § 106.44(a), the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures is unnecessary. The Department agrees that the need to offer supportive measures in the absence of, or during the pendency of, an investigation is equally as important in elementary and secondary schools as in postsecondary institutions. The final regulations revise the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures to use the word "recipient" instead of "institution" to clarify that this definition applies to all recipients, not only to postsecondary institutions.

To preserve discretion for recipients, the Department declines to impose additional suggested changes that would further restrict or prescribe the supportive measures a recipient may or must offer, including requiring supportive measures that "do" restore or preserve equal access rather than supportive measures "designed" to restore or preserve equal access. Requiring supportive measures to be

"designed" for that purpose rather than insisting that such measures actually accomplish that purpose protects recipients against unfair imposition of liability where, despite a recipient's implementation of measures intended to help a party retain equal access to education, underlying trauma from a sexual harassment incident still results in a party's inability to participate in an education program or activity. To the extent that commenters desire for the final regulations to specify that certain populations (such as international students) may have a greater need for supportive measures, the Department declines to revise this provision in that regard because the determination of appropriate supportive measures in a given situation must be based on the facts and circumstances of that situation. Supportive measures must be offered to every complainant as a part of a recipient's response obligations under § 106.44(a).

The Department declines to include an explicit statement that schedule and housing adjustments, or removals from sports teams or extracurricular activities, do not unreasonably burden the respondent as long as the respondent is not separated from the respondent's academic pursuits, because determinations about whether an action "unreasonably burdens" a party are fact-specific. The unreasonableness of a burden on a party must take into account the nature of the educational programs, activities, opportunities, and benefits in which the party is participating, not solely those educational programs that are "academic" in nature. On the other hand, the Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that, contrary to some commenters' concerns, schedule and housing adjustments do not necessarily constitute an "unreasonable" burden on a respondent, and thus the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures continues to require that recipients consider each set of unique circumstances to determine what individualized services will meet the purposes, and conditions, set forth in the definition of supportive measures.[804] Removal from sports teams (and similar exclusions from school-related activities) also require a fact-specific analysis, but whether the burden is "unreasonable" does not depend on whether the respondent still has access to academic programs; whether a supportive measure meets the § 106.30 definition also includes analyzing whether a respondent's access to the array of educational opportunities and benefits offered by the recipient is unreasonably burdened. Changing a class schedule, for example, may more often be deemed an acceptable, reasonable burden than restricting a respondent from participating on a sports team, holding a student government position, participating in an extracurricular activity, and so forth.

[804] The 2001 Guidance at 16 takes a similar approach to the final regulations' approach to supportive measures, by stating that it "may be appropriate for a school to take interim measures during the investigation of a complaint" and for instance, "the school may decide to place the students immediately in separate classes or in different housing arrangements on a campus, pending the results of the school's investigation" or where the alleged harasser is a teacher "allowing the student to transfer to a different class may be appropriate."

The final regulations require a recipient to refrain from imposing disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures, against a respondent, without following the § 106.45 grievance process, and also require the recipient's grievance process to describe the range, or list, the disciplinary sanctions that a recipient might impose following a determination of responsibility, and describe the range of supportive measures available to complainants and respondents.[805] The possible disciplinary sanctions described or listed by the recipient in its own grievance process therefore constitute actions that the recipient itself considers "disciplinary" and thus would not constitute “supportive measures” as defined in § 106.30. If a recipient has listed ineligibility to play on a sports team or hold a student government position, for example, as a possible disciplinary sanction that may be imposed following a determination of responsibility, then the recipient may not take that action against a respondent without first following the § 106.45 grievance process. If, on the other hand, the recipient's grievance process does not describe or list a specific action as a possible disciplinary sanction that the recipient may impose following a determination of responsibility, then whether such an action (for example, ineligibility to play on a sports team or hold a student government position) may be taken as a supportive measure for a complainant is determined by whether that the action is not disciplinary or punitive and does not unreasonably burden the respondent. Certain actions, such as suspension or expulsion from enrollment, or termination from employment, are inherently disciplinary, punitive, and/or unreasonably burdensome and so will not constitute a "supportive measure" whether or not the recipient has described or listed the action in its grievance process pursuant to § 106.45(b)(1)(vi).

[805] Section 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(1)(i); § 106.45(b)(1)(vi); § 106.45(b)(1)(ix).

The Department reiterates that a recipient may remove a respondent from all or part of a recipient's education program or activity in an emergency situation pursuant to § 106.44(c) (with or without a grievance process pending) and may place a non-student employee respondent on administrative leave during a grievance process, pursuant to

§ 106.44(d).[806] Further, a recipient is obligated to conclude a grievance process within a reasonably prompt time frame, thus limiting the duration of time for which supportive measures are serving to maintain a status quo balancing the rights of both parties to equal educational access in an interim period while a grievance process is pending.

---

[806] For further discussion see the "Additional Rules Governing Recipients' Responses to Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

With respect to supportive measures in the elementary and secondary school context, many common actions by school personnel designed to quickly intervene and correct behavior are not punitive or disciplinary and thus would not violate the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures or the provision in § 106.44(a) that prevents a recipient from taking disciplinary actions or other measures that are "not supportive measures" against a respondent without first following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. For example, educational conversations, sending students to the principal's office, or changing student seating or class assignments do not inherently constitute punitive or disciplinary actions and the final regulations therefore do not preclude teachers or school officials from taking such actions to maintain order, protect student safety, and counsel students about inappropriate behavior. By contrast, as discussed above, expulsions and suspensions would constitute disciplinary sanctions (and/or constitute punitive or unreasonably burdensome actions) that could not be imposed without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. The Department emphasizes that these final regulations apply to conduct that constitutes sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, and not to every instance of student misbehavior.

These final regulations do not expressly require a recipient to continue providing supportive measures upon a finding of non-responsibility, and the Department declines to require recipients to lift, remove, or cease supportive measures for complainants or respondents upon a finding of non-responsibility. Recipients retain discretion as to whether to continue supportive measures after a determination of non-responsibility. A determination of non-responsibility does not necessarily mean that the complainant's allegations were false or unfounded but rather could mean that there was not sufficient evidence to find the respondent responsible. A recipient

may choose to continue providing supportive measures to a complainant or a respondent after a determination of non-responsibility. This is not unfair to either party because by definition, "supportive measures" do not punish or unreasonably burden the other party, whether the other party is the complainant or respondent. There may be circumstances where the parties want supportive measures to remain in place or be altered rather than removed following a determination of non-responsibility, and the final regulations leave recipients flexibility to implement or continue supportive measures for one or both parties in such a situation.

The Department also declines to add an additional requirement that schools implement a process by which supportive measures are requested by the parties and granted by recipients, because we wish to leave recipients flexibility to develop processes consistent with each recipient's administrative structure rather than dictate to every recipient how to process requests for supportive measures. Although we do not dictate a particular process, these final regulations specify in § 106.44(a) that the Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. Complainants will know about the possible supportive measures available to them[807] and will have the opportunity to express what they would like in the form of supportive measures, and the Title IX Coordinator will take into account the complainant's wishes in determining which supportive measures to offer. The final regulations do prescribe that a recipient's Title IX Coordinator must remain responsible for coordinating the effective

[807] Section 106.45(b)(1)(ix) requires the recipient's grievance process to describe the range of supportive measures available to complainants and respondents. Additionally, the Title IX Coordinator must contact an individual complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures, under § 106.44(a).

implementation of supportive measures, so that the burden of arranging and enforcing the supportive measures in a given circumstance remains on the recipient, not on any party. We acknowledge commenters' concerns that these final regulations place many responsibilities on a Title IX Coordinator, and a recipient has discretion to designate more than one employee as a Title IX Coordinator if needed in order to fulfill the recipient's Title IX obligations.[808]

With respect for a process to remove a respondent from a recipient's education program or activity, these final regulations provide an emergency removal process in § 106.44(c) if there is an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any students or other individuals arising from the allegations

---

[808] See discussion in the "Section 106.8(a) Designation of Coordinator" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble.

of sexual harassment. A recipient must provide a respondent with notice and an opportunity to challenge the emergency removal decision immediately following the removal. Additionally, the grievance process in § 106.45 provides robust due process protections for both parties, and before imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, against a respondent, a recipient must follow a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

We acknowledge commenters' concerns regarding the provision in the § 106.30 definition supportive measures that the Title IX Coordinator must coordinate the effective implementation of supportive measures. However, we believe it is important that students know they can work with the Title IX

Coordinator to select and implement supportive measures rather than leave the burden on students to work with various other school administrators or offices. The Department recognizes that many supportive measures involve implementation through various offices or departments within a school. When supportive measures are part of a school's Title IX obligations, the Title IX Coordinator must serve as the point of contact for the affected students to ensure that the supportive measures are effectively implemented so that the burden of navigating paperwork or other administrative requirements within the recipient's own system does not fall on the student receiving the supportive measures. The Department recognizes that beyond coordinating and serving as the student's point of contact, the Title IX Coordinator will often rely on other campus offices to actually provide the supportive measures sought, and the Department encourages recipients to consider the variety of ways in which the recipient can best serve the affected student(s) through coordination with other offices while ensuring that the burden of effectively implementing supportive measures remains on the Title IX Coordinator and not on students.

Changes: We have revised the definition for supportive measures in § 106.30 to refer to "recipients" instead of "institutions" which clarifies that the definition of supportive measures is applicable in the context of elementary and secondary schools as well as in the context of postsecondary institutions. We have added "equal" before "access" in the description of supportive measures designed to restore or preserve equal access to the recipient's education program or activity. We have revised the second sentence of this provision to clarify that supportive measures must be designed to restore or preserve equal access and must not unreasonably burden the other party, which may include measures also designed to protect safety or the recipient's educational environment, or deter sexual harassment.

No-Contact Orders

Comments: Several commenters focused on the list of possible supportive measures included in the definition of supportive measures in § 106.30 and viewed the express inclusion of mutual no-contact orders as a general prohibition on one-way no-contact orders, and asked the Department to clarify whether one-way no-contact orders were prohibited. Other commenters assumed one-way no-contact orders were prohibited, and expressed concern that by disallowing one-way no-contact orders, the onus would be placed on the victim to take extreme measures to provide for their own accommodations and prevent victims from getting the support they needed, or would discourage victims from reporting in the first place. Many commenters asserted that a victim would be forced to face or interact with their alleged harasser in class, in dorms, or elsewhere on campus if one-way no-contact orders were prohibited. Other commenters argued that a victim would have to win an administrative proceeding in order to be granted a one-way no-contact order. Many commenters called for the Department to remove the "mutual restrictions on contact" provision from the list entirely because it is not a victim-focused supportive measure. Additionally, some commenters expressed the belief that mutual no-contact orders are not enforceable because it is hard to determine which party has the burden to comply with the no-contact order if both parties are present in the same location. A few commenters believed that mutual no-contact orders would constitute unlawful retaliation against the victim

since such an order would necessarily restrict the victim's own participation in programs or activities as well as the participation of the respondent. Some commenters argued that mutual no-contact orders were contrary to the public policies underlying VAWA and various State laws, and that mutual no-contact orders are analogous to reciprocal protective or restraining orders, which have been invalidated by at least one State Supreme Court.[809]

Other commenters asked the Department to expand the list in the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures to include a greater variety of allowable supportive measures. Some commenters argued that the list of possible supportive measures only included prospective measures (that might preserve access going forward) as opposed to remedial measures (that might restore access that had already been lost), and argued that the Department should explicitly mention measures aimed at restoring equal access, such as opportunities to repeat a class or retake an exam or attaching an addendum to a transcript to explain a low grade.

---

[809] Commenters cited: Bays v. Bays, 779 So.2d 754 (La. 2001).

Discussion: We acknowledge commenters' concerns related to the inclusion of mutual no-contact orders on the non-exhaustive list of possible supportive measures in § 106.30, but the Department declines to exclude this example from the list of supportive measures. The list of possible supportive measures included in the § 106.30 definition is illustrative, not exhaustive. The inclusion of "mutual restrictions on contact between the parties" on the illustrative list of possible supportive measures in § 106.30 does not mean that one-way no-contact orders are never appropriate. A fact-specific inquiry is required into whether a carefully crafted no-contact order restricting the actions of only one party would meet the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures. For example, if a recipient issues a one-way no-contact order to help enforce a restraining order, preliminary injunction, or other order of protection issued by a court, or if a one-way no-contact order does not unreasonably burden the other party, then a one-way no-contact order may be appropriate. The Department also reiterates that sexual harassment allegations presenting a risk to the physical health or safety of a person may justify emergency removal of a respondent in accordance with the § 106.44(c) emergency removal provision, which could include a no-trespass or other no-contact order issued against a respondent.

The inclusion of mutual no-contact orders on an illustrative list does not mean the final regulations require complainants to face their respondents on campus, in classrooms, or in dorms. Rather, the express inclusion of mutual no-contact orders suggests that recipients can offer measures – tempered by the requirements that they are not punitive, disciplinary, or unreasonably burdensome to the other party – to limit the interactions, communications, or contact, between the parties. The final regulations do not require recipients to initiate administrative proceedings (i.e., a grievance process) in order to determine and implement appropriate supportive measures. Contrary to the arguments of commenters, the Department believes that mutual no-contact may constitute reasonable restrictions imposed on both parties, because under certain circumstances such a measure serves the purposes of protecting each party's right to pursue educational opportunities, protecting the safety of all parties, and deterring sexual harassment. The Department believes that "mutual restrictions on contact between the parties" may in many circumstances provide benefits to the complainant, for example, where such a mutual no-contact order serves the interest of protecting safety or deterring sexual harassment by forbidding communication between the parties, which might not require either party to change dorm rooms or even re-arrange

class schedules. Further restrictions, such as avoiding physical proximity between the parties, will require a fact-specific analysis to determine the scope of a no-contact order that may be appropriate under § 106.30; for example, where both parties are athletes and sometimes practice on the same field, consideration must be given to the scope of a no-contact order that deters sexual harassment, without unreasonably burdening the other party, with the goal of restricting contact between the parties without requiring either party to forgo educational activities. It may be unreasonably burdensome to prevent respondents from attending extra-curricular activities that a recipient offers as a result of a one-way no contact order prior to being determined responsible; similarly, it may be unreasonably burdensome to restrict

a complainant from accessing campus locations in order to prevent contact with the respondent. In some circumstances, for example, a complainant might be offered a supportive measure consisting of a mutual no-contact order restricting either party from communicating with the other (which measure likely would not unreasonably burden either party). If, however, the complainant wishes to avoid all physical sightings of a respondent and not only an order prohibiting communications, if appropriate the complainant may receive a supportive measure in the form of an alternate housing assignment (without fee or cost to the complainant). The Department does not view such a supportive measure in such a circumstance as unreasonably burdening the complainant, because

alternate supportive measures also would have prevented sexual harassment (by prohibiting all communication between the parties). Under § 106.44(a), a Title IX Coordinator must consider a complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and if a complainant would like a different housing arrangement as part of a supportive measure, then a Title IX

Coordinator should consider offering such a supportive measure.

The Department does not believe that "mutual restrictions on contact between the parties" could constitute unlawful retaliation by restricting the complainant's own participation in certain programs or activities of the recipient as well as that of the respondent. Such a supportive measure would simply treat both parties equally, and "restrictions on contact" could be limited in scope to prohibiting communications between the parties, which may not affect the complainant's ability to participate in classes or activities. The Department notes that the § 106.30 definition's requirements that supportive measures be non-disciplinary and non-punitive apply equally to protect complainants against a recipient taking action that punishes or sanctions a complainant. In response to commenters' concerns about complainants being unfairly punished in the wake of reporting sexual harassment, the Department added § 106.71 prohibiting retaliation. Actions taken by a recipient under the guise of "supportive measures" that actually have the purpose and effect of penalizing the complainant for the purpose of discouraging the complainant from exercising rights under Title IX would constitute unlawful retaliation.

We also acknowledge the various other suggested modifications to the list of supportive measures offered by commenters, but we decline to expand this list. The Department encourages recipients to broadly consider what measures they can reasonably offer to individual students to ensure continued

equal access to a recipient's education program and activities for a complainant, irrespective of whether a complainant files a formal complaint, and for a respondent, when a formal complaint is filed. The Department has provided a list to illustrate the range of possible supportive measures, but the list of supportive measures is not intended to be exhaustive. Nothing in § 106.30 precludes recipients from considering and providing supportive measures not listed in the definition, including measures designed to retrospectively "restore" or prospectively "preserve" a complainant's equal educational access. We note that the § 106.30 already includes the example of "course-related adjustments" which could encompass several suggested measures identified by commenters, such as opportunities to retake classes or exams, or adjusting an academic transcript.

Changes: None.

Other Language/Terminology Comments

Comments: One commenter expressed concern that the terms "survivor" and "victim" used in the NPRM to describe a person who merely alleges something has happened to them are prejudicial and anti-male. Other commenters asserted that the Department's proposed regulations are biased in favor of males partly due to the use of neutral terms such as “complainant” and “respondent” instead of “survivor” or “perpetrator.” One commenter suggested that, instead of using the term “complainant,” the final regulations should refer to “student survivors” or “those who face harassment.” The commenter further recommended that the final regulations use the term

“perpetrator” instead of “respondent,” saying that the use of the term “respondent” is confusing, and fails to account for perpetrators who are never formally investigated, and therefore are never in a formal respondent role (i.e., because they have not responded to anything).

Discussion: The Department disagrees that the use of the term survivor or victim in the NPRM is biased, anti-male, or pro-male. The term "survivor" was used five times in the preamble to refer generally to individuals who have been victims of sexual harassment. The Department listened to advocates for these individuals, as we listened to other stakeholders. The use of the term survivor or victim in that context takes no position on the veracity of any particular complainant or respondent, or complainants or respondents in general.

The final regulations are intended to be objective and do not use the term "survivor" or "victim" in the regulatory text, instead using the more neutral terms "complainant" and "respondent." The final regulations are intended to be fair, unbiased, and impartial toward both complainants and respondents. When a determination of responsibility is reached against a respondent, the Department's interest is in requiring remedies for the complainant, to further the goal of Title IX by providing remedies to victims of sexual harassment aiming to restore their equal educational access. Although the final regulations do not need to use the word "victim," once a reliable outcome has determined that a complainant was victimized by sexual harassment, the final regulations mandate that remedies be provided to that complainant precisely because after such a determination has been made, that complainant has been fairly, reliably shown to have been the victim of sexual harassment.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter expressed concern that the terms used in the NPRM reveal a clear preference in protecting the interests of a school and effectively limiting a school's liability rather than protecting the equal right for all students to have access to higher education free from discrimination.

Discussion: The Department does not have, nor does the terminology in the final regulations reflect, any preference for protecting the interests of a school or effectively limiting a school's liability rather than protecting the equal right of all students to have access to higher education free from discrimination.

Although the Department is not required to adopt the deliberate indifference standard articulated by the Supreme Court, we are persuaded by the policy rationales relied on by it and believes it is the best policy approach. As the Court reasoned in Davis, a recipient acts with deliberate indifference only when it responds to sexual harassment in a manner that is "clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances."[810] The Department believes this standard holds recipients accountable without depriving them of legitimate and necessary flexibility to make disciplinary decisions and to provide supportive measures that might be necessary in response to sexual harassment. Moreover, the Department believes that teachers and local school leaders with unique knowledge of the school climate and student body are best positioned to make disciplinary decisions; thus, unless the recipient's response to sexual harassment is clearly unreasonable in light of known circumstances, the Department will not second guess such decisions. In addition, the final regulations impose obligations on recipients that go beyond the deliberate indifference standard as set forth in Davis; for example, by requiring that recipients' non-deliberately indifferent response must include offering supportive measures to a complainant under § 106.44(a). Additionally, as explained in more detail in the "Section 106.44(b) Proposed 'Safe Harbors,' generally" subsection in the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" section, these final regulations do not include any of the proposed safe harbors in the NPRM for recipients.

---

[810] Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 648-49 (1999).

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter opposed the use of criminal terms since many of the terms that relate to the findings have legal definitions in criminal law, for which due process protections already exist, and the use of such language suggests that colleges do not want the overall Title IX process to be an educational experience and not a criminal justice proceeding.

Discussion: The Department disagrees with the commenter's contention. The Department has in no way implied that these proceedings are criminal in nature and the final regulations use terms such as "complainant" and "respondent," "decision-maker" and "determination regarding responsibility" to describe features of the grievance process, language intentionally adopted to avoid reference to terms used in civil courts or criminal proceedings (e.g., plaintiff, defendant, prosecutor, judge, verdict). In this way, the final regulations acknowledge that the resolution of allegations of Title IX sexual harassment in an education program or activity serves a different purpose and occurs in a different context from a civil or criminal court. As explained in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the § 106.45 grievance process is rooted in principles of due process to create a process fair to all parties and likely to result in reliable outcomes, and while the Department believes that the grievance process is consistent with constitutional due process, the § 106.45 grievance process is independent from constitutional due process because it is designed to effectuate the purposes of Title IX as a civil rights statute. The Department understands the concerns expressed by some commenters that colleges want the overall Title IX process to be an educational experience and that the outcome is administrative and believes the final regulations prescribe a consistent grievance process appropriate for administratively resolving allegations of sexual harassment in an education program or activity.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter suggested using the word "discrimination" instead of "harassment" in places where the NPRM describes actionable behavior because harassment does not have to occur for there to be discrimination.

Discussion: The Department declines to adopt the word "discrimination" instead of “harassment” in these final regulations. The Department’s Title IX regulations already address sex discrimination, and these final regulations intend to address sexual harassment as a particular form of sex discrimination under Title IX. Complaints of sex discrimination that do not constitute sexual harassment may be made to a recipient for handling under the prompt and equitable grievance procedures that recipients must adopt under § 106.8(c). When the sex discrimination complained of constitutes sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, these final regulations govern how recipients must respond to that form of sex discrimination.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter expressed concern that the NPRM used the term

“guilt,” which equates school conduct processes to the court system and seems contrary to the NPRM’s goals of distinguishing between school conduct processes and the judicial system. The commenter argued that instead, the final regulations should use the terms “found responsible” and “not responsible,” and should only draw comparisons with civil, rather than criminal, case law.

Discussion: The Department disagrees with the concern that the NPRM inappropriately used the term "guilt." The word "guilt" appears only in two instances in the NPRM, and neither of those occurrences is in the text of the proposed regulations. In the first instance, the NPRM notes that "Secretary DeVos stated that in endeavoring to find a 'better way forward' that works for all students,

'non-negotiable principles' include the right of every survivor to be taken seriously and the right of every person accused to know that guilt is not predetermined."[811] Second, the NPRM states that "[a] fundamental notion of a fair proceeding is that a legal system does not prejudge a person's guilt or liability."[812] In both contexts, the NPRM was using the term guilt generally to refer to culpability for an offense. The Department also declines to revise the final regulations to use the terms "found responsible" and "not responsible" because it has already utilized similar language; for example, § 106.45(b)(1)(vi) uses "determination of responsibility" in the context of finding a respondent responsible and § 106.45(b)(7) employs the term "determination regarding responsibility" in the context of a determination that could either find the respondent responsible or non-responsible. The NPRM uses the same or similar terms.[813]

---

[811] 83 FR 61464.
[812] 83 FR 61473.

Changes: None.

Comments: Several commenters suggested that the term "equitable" should be used instead of "equal" because the two terms have different meanings, and Title IX focuses on educational equity. Without citing a specific provision, one commenter argued that "equal" would assume that if a translator were provided for one party, a translator must be provided for the other party.

---

[813] See, e.g., 83 FR 61466, 61470.

Discussion: The Department understands commenters' concerns that "equal" and "equitable" have different implications, and the final regulations use both terms with such a distinction in mind. Where parties are given "equal" opportunity, for example, both parties must be treated the same. By contrast, where parties must be treated "equitably," the final regulations explain what equitable means for a complainant and for a respondent. The Department disagrees that the use of "equal" in these final regulations is inappropriate. The equal opportunity for both parties to receive a disability accommodation does not mean that both parties must receive a disability accommodation or that they must receive the same disability accommodation. Similarly, both parties may not need a translator, and a recipient need not provide a translator for a party who does not need one, even if it provides a translator for the party who needs one.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter suggested using the term "education program or activity" instead of "schools" to be more consistent with statute and case law. The commenter asserted that use of the word "schools" may limit the ability to investigate issues that arise during sporting activities, afterschool programs, on field trips, etc.

Discussion: Although the Department declines to remove reference to “schools,” the Department provides a definition for “elementary and secondary schools” as well as “postsecondary institutions” in § 106.30. The Department believes that it is important to distinguish between these types of recipients as the type of hearing that a recipient must provide under § 106.45(b)(6) may be different if the recipient is an elementary or secondary school as opposed to a postsecondary institution.

To address the commenter's concerns, the Department notes that § 106.2(h) provides a definition of "program or activity" as all of the operations of elementary and secondary schools and postsecondary institutions. Additionally, the Department has revised § 106.44(a) to specify that for purposes of §§ 106.30, 106.44, and 106.45, an education program or activity includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs. This definition aligns with the Supreme Court's opinion in Davis[814] and clarifies when sporting activities, afterschool programs, or field trips constitute part of the recipient's

[814] Davis, 526 U.S. at 645.

education program or activity. The Department also revised § 106.44(a) to state that for purposes of §§ 106.30, 106.44, and 106.45, an "education program or activity" also includes any building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution. The revisions to § 106.44(a) to help better define "education program or activity" are explained more fully in the "Section 106.44(a) 'education program or activity'" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section.

Changes: The Department has revised § 106.44(a) to specify that an education program or activity includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs, and also includes any building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution.

Comments: One commenter expressed concern that the NPRM's use of the term "students" is too narrow in light of the language of Title IX and current Title IX regulations, as well as the Supreme Court's repeated determinations that Title IX encompasses all individuals participating in education programs and activities. Another commenter suggested that the term "student" in the NPRM should be replaced with "person" consistent with statute and case law and because the term "student" may be restrictive because it does not encompass employees, volunteers, parents, and community members. One commenter expressed concern that the definition of "student" as a person who has gained admission is problematic because institutions of higher education, particularly those who do not have open enrollment, typically consider an applicant a student once they have submitted a deposit, indicating their acceptance of an admission offer and commitment to attend.

Discussion: The Department disagrees with the commenters who opposed the use of the term "students." Title IX

provides that a recipient of Federal funding may not discriminate on the basis of sex in the education program or activity that it operates and extends protections to any "person." The final regulations similarly use "person" or "individual" to ensure that the Title IX non-discrimination mandate applies to anyone in a recipient's education program or activity. For example, § 106.30 defines sexual harassment as conduct that deprives "a person" of equal access; § 106.30 defines a "complainant" as an "individual" who is alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment. Where the final regulations use the phrase "students and employees" or "students," such terms are used not to narrow the application of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate but to require particular actions by the recipient reasonably intended to benefit

students, employees, or both; for example, § 106.8(a) requires recipients to notify "students and employees" of contact information for the Title IX Coordinator. Where the final regulations intend to include "applicants for admission" in addition to "students" the phrase "applicants for admission" is used; for example, § 106.8(b)(2)(ii) precludes recipients from using publications that state that the recipient treats applicants for admission (or employment), students, or employees differently on the basis of sex (unless permitted under Title IX). Both Title IX and existing Title IX regulations use the term "student" ubiquitously.[815] The existing Title IX regulations, in 34 CFR 106.2(r), define "student" as "a person who has gained admission." "Admission", as defined in34 CFR

[815] E.g., 20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(2); 34 CFR 106.36.

106.2(q), "means selection for part-time, full-time, special, associate, transfer, exchange, or any other enrollment, membership, or matriculation in or at an education program or activity operated by a recipient." The Department disagrees with the commenter's concern that the definition of "student" as a person who has gained admission is problematic. The Department does not believe the term "student" should be changed to reflect other persons who are not enrolled in the recipient's education program or activity. The term "student" as defined in 34 CFR 106.2(r) aligns with the definition of "formal complaint" in §106.30 that provides at the time of filing a formal complaint, a complainant must be participating in or attempting to participate in the education program or activity of the recipient with which the formal complaint is filed.[816] A student who has applied for admission and has been admitted is attempting to participate in the education program or activity of the recipient.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter expressed concern that equating "trauma-informed" and "impartial" is a false equivalency that threatens to undermine

[816] See the "Formal Complaint" subsection in the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble.

the quality and efficacy of the Title IX process. The commenter argued that "trauma-informed" refers to a body of research, practice, and theory that teaches professionals who interact with victims to recognize that all individuals process trauma differently, to understand different responses to trauma, and to recognize ways in which we can avoid further traumatization of involved parties through sensitive questioning, mindfulness-based practices, and avoiding potentially triggering situations such as unnecessarily repetitive questioning. Further, equating these two terms is dismissive of decades of research and best practices concerning gender and sexual-based violence and harassment prevention and response.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that the final regulations equate

"trauma-informed" and "impartial" in a manner that undermines the quality and efficacy of the Title IX process. It appears that the commenter prefers the Department to adopt a trauma-informed approach as a best practice. The Department understands from personal anecdotes and research studies that sexual violence is a traumatic experience for survivors. The Department is aware that the

neurobiology of trauma and the impact of trauma on a survivor's neurobiological functioning is a developing field of study with application to the way in which investigators of sexual violence offenses interact with victims in criminal justice systems and campus sexual misconduct proceedings.[817] The final

[817] E.g., Jeffrey J. Nolan, Fair, Equitable Trauma-Informed Investigation Training (Holland & Knight updated July 19, 2019) (white paper summarizing trauma-informed approaches to sexual misconduct investigations, identifying scientific and media support and opposition to such approaches, and cautioning institutions to apply trauma-informed approaches carefully to ensure impartial investigations).

regulations require impartiality on the part of Title IX personnel (i.e., Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolutions)[818] to reinforce the truth-seeking purpose of a grievance process. The Department wishes to emphasize that treating all parties with dignity, respect, and sensitivity without bias, prejudice, or stereotypes infecting interactions with parties fosters impartiality and truth-seeking. While the final regulations do not use the term "trauma-informed," nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from applying trauma-informed techniques, practices, or approaches so long as such practices are consistent with the requirements of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) and other requirements in § 106.45.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter requested clarification of the numerous provisions of the proposed regulations that refer to specific time frames, such as ten "days." The commenter suggested that the Department clarify whether these are "calendar" days or "working" days.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the commenter's request for clarification as to how to calculate "days" with respect to various time frames

referenced in the proposed regulations and appreciates the opportunity to clarify that because the Department does not require a specific method for calculating "days," recipients retain the flexibility to adopt the method that works best for the recipient's operations; for example, a recipient could use calendar days, school days, or business days, or a method the recipient already uses in other aspects of its operations.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter asserted that it is unclear whether § 106.6(d) intended to cover recipients that are not government actors. The commenter suggested adding "whether or not that recipient is a government actor" after "recipient."

Discussion: As explained in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department recognizes that some recipients are State actors with responsibilities to provide due process of law and other rights to students and employees under the U.S. Constitution, while other recipients are private institutions that do not have constitutional obligations to their students and employees. The final regulations apply to all recipients covered by Title IX because fair, reliable procedures that best promote the purposes of Title IX are as important in public schools, colleges, and universities as in private ones. The grievance process prescribed in the final regulations is important for effective enforcement of Title IX and is thus consistent with, but independent of, constitutional due process. Where enforcement of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate is likely to present potential intersections with a public recipient's obligation to respect the constitutional rights of students and employees, the final regulations caution recipients that nothing in these final regulations requires a recipient to restrict constitutional rights.[819] Similarly, the Department, as an agency of the

---

[819] E.g., § 106.6(d); § 106.44(a) (stating that the Department may not deem a recipient to have satisfied the recipient's duty to not be deliberately indifferent based on the recipient's restriction of rights protected under the U.S. Constitution, including the First Amendment, Fifth Amendment, and Fourteenth Amendment).

Federal government, cannot require private recipients to restrict constitutional rights. The Department will not require private recipients to abide by restrictions in the U.S. Constitution that do not apply to them. The Department, as a Federal agency, however, must interpret and enforce Title IX in a manner that does not require or cause any recipient, whether public or private, to restrict or otherwise abridge any person's constitutional rights.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter encouraged the Department to explicitly state that Title IX and the Title IX regulations do not apply to schools that do not receive Federal financial assistance to help protect their autonomy and Constitutional rights, which would promote diversity in education by protecting the autonomy and freedom of private and religious schools to thrive according to their stated mission and purpose. The commenter stated that their schools are committed to providing safe and equal learning opportunities for each student that they serve and noted that such language has been included in reauthorizations of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) and that the Every Student Succeeds Act, the most recent reauthorization passed in 2015, contains Section 8506 which specifically states, "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect any private school that does not receive funds or services under this Act" [20 U.S.C. 7886(a)]."

Discussion: The Department does not believe it is necessary to further explain in the final regulations that Title IX applies only to recipients of Federal financial assistance; the text of Title IX, 20 U.S.C. 1681, clearly states that the Title IX non-discrimination mandate applies to education programs or activities that receive Federal financial assistance, and expressly exempts educational institutions controlled by religious organizations from compliance with Title IX to the extent that compliance with Title IX is inconsistent with the religious tenets of the religious organization even if the educational institution does receive Federal financial assistance.[820] Existing Title IX regulations already sufficiently mirror that Title IX statutory language by defining "recipient"[821] and affirming the Title IX exemption for educational institutions controlled by religious organizations.[822]

Changes: None.

---

[820] 20 U.S.C. 1681(a); 20 U.S.C. 1681(a)(3).
[821] 34 CFR 106.2(i) (defining "recipient").
[822] 34 CFR 106.12(a).

Comments: One commenter stated that the proposed regulations were not easy to understand because the "Summary" section of the NPRM contained too little information. The commenter asserted that although the proposed regulations were intended to protect young people, young people would not be able to understand them. Another commenter opposed the NPRM because, the commenter asserted, the details were perplexing, vague, and did not tell in sufficient detail, how the proposed rules would be implemented in terms of the behavior, conditions, and situations involved. Another commenter expressed concern that the "sloppy and biased language" in the NPRM needed to be corrected, pointing specifically to the summary comments at 83 FR 61462 and elsewhere in the NPRM.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges the concern from the commenter that the proposed regulations are not easy enough to understand. However, the purpose of the NPRM is to provide a basic overview of the Department's proposed actions and reasons for the proposals. The Department believes that the NPRM accomplished this purpose by providing not only a summary section but also a background section and specific discussions of each proposed provision.

The Department acknowledges the concern of the commenter that opposed the NPRM because the commenter believed the language was too vague and does not provide sufficient detail as to how the proposed rules would be implemented in specific situations. The Department believes that both the NPRM, and now these final regulations, strike an appropriate balance between containing sufficient details as to a recipient's legal obligations without improperly purporting to specify outcomes for all scenarios and situations many of which will turn on particular facts and circumstances. The Department wishes to emphasize that when determining how to comply with these final regulations, recipients have flexibility to employ age-appropriate methods, exercise common sense and good judgment, and take into account the needs of the parties involved.

The Department disagrees that any of the language in the proposed rules or final regulations is biased, and notes that the Department's choice of language throughout the text of the final regulations is neutral, impartial, and unbiased with respect to complainants and respondents.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter expressed concern that the final regulations should not emphasize the view that schools are in a unique position to make disciplinary decisions based on school climate because all decisions, including disciplinary decisions, should be made congruent with the intent and spirit of the proposed rules. Stating that schools are in a unique position regarding decision making invites many forms of prejudice and renders decisions less reliable.

Discussion: The Department disagrees with the position that the final regulations should not emphasize the view that schools are in a unique position to make disciplinary decisions based on school climate. The Department disagrees with the commenter's conclusory assertion that by acknowledging schools are in a unique position to make such decisions that the Department invites prejudice that renders decisions less reliable. As the Supreme Court reasoned in Davis, Title IX must be interpreted in a manner that leaves flexibility in schools' disciplinary decisions and that does not place courts in the position of second guessing the disciplinary decisions made by school administrators.[823] As a matter of policy, the Department believes that these same principles should govern administrative enforcement of Title IX.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter suggested including a full list of stakeholders who were interviewed and involved in the process of developing the NPRM to establish credibility (with aliases provided to protect the privacy of individual participants), as well as the meeting minutes included as an appendix.

---

[823] Davis, 626 U.S. at 648.

Discussion: The Department does not believe it is necessary to publish a full list of stakeholders who were interviewed and involved in the process of developing the NPRM to establish credibility or publish meeting minutes

included as an appendix. The Department noted in the NPRM that it conducted listening sessions and discussions with stakeholders expressing a variety of positions for and against the status quo, including advocates for survivors of sexual violence; advocates for accused students; organizations representing schools and colleges; scholars and experts in law, psychology, and neuroscience; and numerous individuals who have experienced school-level Title IX proceedings as a complainant or respondent; school and college administrators; child and sex abuse prosecutors.[824] The Department believes this level of detail is sufficient to support the Department's contention that the Department conducted wide outreach in developing the NPRM.

---

[824] 83 FR 61463-64.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter suggested including an index of terms that define legal terminology, including "respondeat superior, "reasonableness standard," "deliberate indifference standard," "constructive notice," and so forth because the use of legal terminology throughout these regulations without accompanying layperson's commentary or clear definition of the terminology applied throughout the proposed revisions confuse and divert attention from the actual meaning of the proposed rules.

Discussion: The Department does not believe it is necessary to include an index of terms that define legal terminology. The Department has defined key terms as necessary in § 106.30, and § 106.2 also provides relevant definitions. The remainder of the language used in the final regulations should be interpreted both in the context of the final regulations and in accordance with its ordinary public meaning.

The Department agrees that the term "respondeat superior" is a legal term of art that may be confusing in light of the final regulations' frequent use of the word "respondent" which looks very similar to the word "respondeat" as used in the phrase "respondeat superior" in the § 106.30 definition of "actual knowledge." To address this concern, the Department has revised the definition of "actual knowledge" in § 106.30 to use the term "vicarious liability" instead of "respondeat superior." Although "vicarious liability" is a legal term, "vicarious liability" more readily conveys the concept of being liable for the actions or omissions of another, without causing unnecessary confusion with the word "respondent."

Changes: Partly in response to commenters' concerns that the phrase "respondeat superior" was not recognizable as a legal term or was too easily confused with use of the word "respondent" throughout the final regulations, we have revised the definition of "actual knowledge" in §

106.30 by replacing term "respondeat superior" with "vicarious liability."

Comments: One commenter suggested including support and context for the Department's contention in the NPRM that the proposed rules will give sexual harassment complainants greater confidence to report and expect their school to respond in a meaningful way by separating a recipient's obligation to respond to a report of sexual harassment from the recipient's obligation to investigate formal complaints of sexual harassment; the commenter argued that the NPRM thus implies that either complainants do not currently have a clear understanding of their Title IX rights and a school's obligation to respond or that complainants are under the misconception that all complaints are considered formal complaints under the current Title IX guidance and regulations.

Discussion: The Department's past guidance required recipients to always investigate any report of sexual harassment, even when the complainant only wanted supportive measures and did not want an investigation, which necessarily results in some intrusion into the complainant's privacy.[825] This guidance combined a recipient's obligation to respond to a report of sexual harassment with the recipient's obligation to investigate formal complaints of sexual harassment. This guidance also did not distinguish between an investigation which resulted in the imposition of disciplinary sanctions and an inquiry into a report of sexual harassment.[826] The Department's

[825] 2001 Guidance at 13, 15, 18; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4.

[826] 2001 Guidance at 13, 15, 18.

past guidance did not specifically provide both parties the opportunity to know about an investigation and participate in such an investigation, when the investigation may lead to the imposition of disciplinary sanctions against the respondent and the provision of remedies. Through §§ 106.44 and 106.45, these final regulations clarify when a recipient has the affirmative obligation to conduct an investigation that may lead to the imposition of disciplinary sanctions, requires the recipient to notify both parties of such an investigation, and requires the recipient to provide both parties the opportunity to participate in the process. Irrespective of whether a recipient conducts an investigation under § 106.45, a recipient may inquire about a report of sexual harassment and must offer supportive measures in response to such a report under § 106.44(a). If a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document the reasons why such a response as not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances under § 106.45(b)(10)(ii).

Under the Department's past guidance, some students did not know that reporting sexual harassment always

would lead to an investigation, even when the student did not want the recipient to investigate. A rigid requirement such as an investigation in every circumstance may chill reporting of sexual harassment, which is in part why these final regulations separate the recipient's obligation to respond to a report of sexual harassment from the obligation to investigate a formal complaint of sexual harassment. Under these final regulations, a student may receive supportive measures irrespective of whether the student files a formal complaint, which results in an investigation. In this manner, these final regulations encourage students to report sexual harassment while allowing them to exercise some control over their report. If students would like supportive measures but do not wish to initiate an investigation under § 106.45, they may make a report of sexual harassment. If students would like supportive measures and also would like the recipient to initiate an investigation under § 106.45, they may file a formal complaint.

The Department disagrees with the premise that separating a recipient's obligation to respond to each known report of sexual harassment from the recipient's obligation to investigate formal complaints of sexual harassment implies that all complainants suffer misconceptions; rather, the Department believes that distinguishing between a recipient's obligation to respond to a report, on the one hand, and a recipient's obligation to investigate a formal complaint on the other hands, provides clarity that benefits complainants, respondents, and recipients.

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter suggested adding prevention and community educational programming as a possible option schools can utilize as one of the remedies provided following a formal complaint, as well as adding a requirement of educational outreach and prevention programming elsewhere within the final regulations.

Discussion: The Department declines to list prevention and community educational programming as a possible option schools can utilize as a remedy after the conclusion of a grievance process, or to add a requirement of educational outreach and prevention programming elsewhere within the final regulations. The Department notes that nothing in the final regulations prevents recipients from undertaking such efforts. With respect to remedies, the final regulations require a recipient to provide remedies to a complainant where a respondent has been found responsible, and notes that such remedies may include the type of individualized services non-exhaustively listed in the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures." Whether or not the commenter's understanding of prevention and community education programming would be part of an appropriate remedy for a complainant, designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal access to education, is a fact-specific matter to be considered by the recipient. With respect to a general requirement that recipients provide prevention and community education programming, the final regulations are focused on governing a recipient's response to sexual harassment incidents, leaving additional education and prevention efforts within a recipient's discretion.

Changes: None.

Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally

Section 106.44(a) "actual knowledge"

The Recipient's Self-Interest

Comments: Many commenters expressed concerns about the actual knowledge requirement in § 106.44(a), citing examples of instances in which schools sought to avoid addressing sexual harassment and assault, including high-profile sexual abuse scandals at universities where some university employees failed to report abuse that was reported to them. One commenter asserted that schools discourage sexual harassment and assault reports because the number of reported instances of sexual violence at an institution is publicly available (which harms or is perceived to harm the recipient's reputation), and alleged perpetrators are often prominent members of college communities, including star athletes, fraternity members, leading actors, and promising filmmakers. Commenters argued that, by using an actual knowledge requirement that fails to make employees mandatory reporters, schools will continue to ignore cases of sexual violence and will investigate fewer harassment complaints, resulting in less justice and fewer services for victims of sexual harassment.

Discussion: The Department incorporates here its discussion under the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble. As discussed in that section, and in the "Adoption and

Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, we believe that the final regulations appropriately hold recipients liable for responding to every allegation of sexual harassment of which the recipient is aware, ensure that elementary and secondary school students may report to any school employee, and respect the autonomy of complainants at postsecondary institutions to choose whether, and when, the complainant desires to report sexual harassment. No recipient may yield to institutional self-interest by ignoring known allegations of sexual harassment without violating the recipient's obligation to promptly respond as set forth in § 106.44(a).

Changes: None.

Burdening the Complainant

Comments: Numerous commenters argued that § 106.44(a) will have the effect of shifting the burden of each report onto the complainant, who, in addition to dealing with the harm to their mental health from harassment or assault, must also bear the responsibility of locating and reporting to the correct administrator. Several commenters also voiced concern that §

106.44(a) makes it more difficult for victims to know how or to whom to report harassment. Other commenters argued that complainants would be at a loss in instances where the school has not educated students and staff as to who the Title IX Coordinator is, where that person can be found, and what that person's responsibilities are. Several commenters asked what a complainant should do if a complainant has had a negative experience previously with the Title IX Coordinator, because the complainant would have no one else to whom to turn in order to report or file a formal complaint.

Many commenters asserted that § 106.44(a) would chill reports of sexual harassment and assault. Several commenters stated that 59.3 percent of survivors in one study confided in informal support sources while across several studies, fewer than one-third of victims reported to formal sources.[827] One commenter asserted that research has consistently reflected that survivors of campus sexual assault are more likely to disclose to someone with whom they have an existing relationship rather than a campus administrator. Commenters argued that fewer reports would reach the Title IX Coordinator, since the Title

---

[827] Commenters cited: Charlotte Pierce-Baker, Surviving the silence: Black women's stories of rape (W.W. Norton 1998); Patricia A. Washington, Disclosure Patterns of Black Female Sexual Assault Survivors, 7 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 11 (2001).

IX Coordinator lacks a preexisting personal relationship with survivors. Several commenters asserted that most school personnel do not know who the Title IX Coordinator is, and that these employees will therefore be unable to help complainants find the Title IX Coordinator.

Discussion: The Department incorporates here its discussion under the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble. As discussed in that section, and in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, we believe that the definition of actual knowledge in these final regulations has been revised to appropriately trigger a recipient's response obligations by notice to any elementary and secondary school employee, to any recipient's Title IX Coordinator, and to any official with authority to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf. The Department believes that respecting a complainant's autonomy is an important, desirable goal and that allowing complainants to discuss or disclose a sexual harassment experience with employees of postsecondary institutions without such confidential conversations automatically triggering the involvement of the recipient's Title IX office will give complainants in postsecondary institutions greater control and autonomy over the reporting process. The final regulations place the burden on recipients to ensure that all students and employees (as well as parents of elementary and secondary school students, and others) are notified of contact information for the Title IX Coordinator, so that when a complainant chooses to report, the complainant may easily locate the Title IX Coordinator's office location, telephone number, and e-mail address, and report using any of those methods, or any other means resulting in the Title IX Coordinator receiving the person's verbal or written report. Nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient, including a postsecondary institution, from instructing any or all of its employees to report sexual harassment disclosures and reports to the Title IX Coordinator, if the recipient believes that such a universal mandatory reporting system best serves the recipient's student and employee population. However, universal mandatory reporting systems have led to the unintended consequence of reducing options for complainants at postsecondary institutions to discuss sexual harassment experiences confidentially with trusted employees,[828] and the final regulations therefore do not impose a universal mandatory reporting system in the postsecondary institution context.

Changes: None.

---

[828] E.g., Carmel Deamicis, Which Matters More: Reporting Assault or Respecting a Victim's Wishes?, THE ATLANTIC (May 20, 2013); Allie Grasgreen, Mandatory Reporting Perils, INSIDE HIGHER ED (Aug. 30, 2013).

Elementary and Secondary Schools

Comments: Many commenters stated that the actual knowledge requirement is inappropriate for elementary and secondary school students because, from a young child's perspective, there is no distinction between a teacher, teacher's aide, bus driver, cafeteria worker, school resource officer, or maintenance staff person; to a young child, they are all grown-ups. Commenters asserted that this is particularly true for adults such as bus drivers and school resource officers, who can take corrective measures (kicking a student off the bus, for example) but not necessarily "on behalf of" the school. Several commenters stated that often a peer seeking help for a friend brings an issue of sexual harassment or assault to the attention of teachers or other school personnel, and commenters asserted that these allegations should be formally addressed by the school. Numerous commenters asserted that all school employees, not just teachers, should be responsible employees. By ensuring that a student can confide in counselors, aides, and coaches, commenters believed that students would be more likely to speak up and receive benefits to which they are entitled under Title IX. Commenters asserted that the proposed rules would conflict with other mandatory reporting requirements; for example, State laws requiring all school staff to notify law enforcement or child welfare agencies of child abuse. Another commenter stated that, by limiting the definition of complainant to only "the victim," the proposed regulations would not allow for parents to file complaints on behalf of their children, and would not contemplate a witness to sexual harassment making a complaint. One commenter asserted that the actual knowledge requirement may be in tension with the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA); the commenter asserted that under ESSA, a school district with probable cause to believe a teacher engaged in sexual misconduct is prohibited from helping that teacher from getting a new job yet, the commenter argued, under the proposed rules the school district would not need to take any action to address the teacher's sexual misconduct absent a formal complaint.

Discussion: The Department incorporates here its discussion under the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble. As discussed in that section, and in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, we believe that the final regulations appropriately hold recipients liable for responding to every allegation of sexual harassment of which the recipient is aware, ensure that elementary and secondary school students may report to any school employee, and ensure that every recipient's educational community understands that any person may report sexual harassment (whether they are the victim, or a witness, or any other third party), triggering the recipient's obligation to promptly respond. As discussed in the "Complainant" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, we have revised the definition of "complainant" to remove the inference that the alleged victim themselves must be the same person who reports the sexual harassment. Upon notice that any person has allegedly been victimized by conduct that could constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, a recipient must respond, including by promptly offering supporting measures to the alleged victim (i.e., the complainant).

The final regulations do not contravene or alter any Federal, State, or local requirements regarding other mandatory reporting obligations that school employees have. Those obligations are distinct from the obligations in these final regulations.

The Department acknowledges that the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (ESEA), as amended by the Every Student

Succeeds Act (ESSA), may require a recipient subject to ESEA to take certain steps with respect to an employee who has been accused of sexual misconduct when a recipient has probable cause to believe the employee engaged in sexual misconduct.[829] We do not believe that the actual knowledge requirement in these final regulations is in tension with ESSA. The final regulations define actual

[829] E.g., https://www2.ed.gov/policy/elsec/leg/essa/section8546dearcolleagueletter.pdf.

knowledge to include notice of allegations of sexual harassment; a recipient cannot wait to respond to sexual harassment allegations until the recipient has probable cause that the sexual harassment occurred. Under revised § 106.44(a) the recipient's prompt response to allegations of sexual harassment must include offering the complainant supportive measures irrespective of whether the complainant files, or the Title IX Coordinator signs, a formal complaint. A recipient's obligations under ESSA may factor into a Title IX Coordinator's decision to sign a formal complaint initiating a grievance process against an employee-respondent, even when the complainant (i.e., the alleged victim) does not wish to file a formal complaint, if, for example, the recipient wishes to investigate allegations in order to determine whether the recipient has probable cause of employee sexual misconduct that affect the recipient's ESSA obligations.

Changes: None.

Confusion for Employees

Comments: Numerous commenters expressed concern that resident assistants or resident advisors, professors, and coaches may not know how to respond to complainants appropriately if the proposed rules allow postsecondary institution employees to have discretion over whether to report sexual harassment to the Title IX Coordinator. Several commenters asked the Department to specify that all schools should be responsible for educating all employees about a variety of procedures for handling sexual harassment and violence. Another commenter suggested that deans, directors, department heads, or any supervisory employees should be held individually liable for having actual knowledge of a report of sexual misconduct. One commenter asserted that a greater number of employees should be required to inform students of their right to file a formal complaint and to obtain supportive measures. One commenter stated that schools following the proposed rules might be sued for inadequate reporting policies, since a recipient's failure to tell its employees to respond appropriately to disclosures arguably amounts to an intentional decision not to respond to third-party discrimination.

Discussion: The Department incorporates here its discussion under the "Actual Knowledge" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble. As discussed in that

section, and in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department agrees with commenters' concerns that a wider pool of trusted adults in elementary and secondary schools should trigger a recipient's obligations, and, thus, the final regulations expand the definition of actual knowledge to include notice to any employee of an elementary and secondary school. However, for reasons discussed in the aforementioned sections of this preamble, the Department disagrees that the pool of postsecondary institution employees to whom notice charges the recipient with actual knowledge needs to be expanded beyond the Title IX Coordinator and officials with authority to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf.

The Department disagrees that these final regulations increase liability for recipients with respect to inadequate reporting policies. These final regulations require recipients to respond to sexual harassment, or allegations of sexual harassment, when the recipient has actual knowledge, defined in part to include notice to an official with authority to institute corrective measures on behalf of the recipient. This requirement, and definition, are also used by Federal courts in applying the Gebser/Davis framework in private Title IX lawsuits.[830] These final regulations go beyond the Gebser/Davis framework by requiring recipients to have in place clear, accessible reporting options, and requiring recipients to notify its educational community of those reporting options. The recipient's educational community must be notified about how to report sexual harassment in person, by mail, telephone, or e-mail, and the final regulations specify that any person may report sexual harassment (whether the person reporting is the alleged victim themselves or any third party).

---

[830] E.g., Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 290 (1998).

Changes: None.

Intersection Between Actual Knowledge and Deliberate Indifference

Comments: One commenter asked, if a recipient has actual knowledge that a student or employee has been subjected to unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex, but the recipient does not know whether the misconduct effectively denied the victim equal access to the recipient's education program or activity, whether the recipient must respond under §§ 106.44(a) and 106.44(b)(2), to at least seek out the missing information and if not, whether the respondent has an obligation to inform the complainant of the nature of the missing and needed additional information regarding denial of equal access.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges the commenter's question about how much detail is needed in order for the recipient to have actual knowledge triggering the recipient's obligation to provide a non-deliberately indifferent response, and whether a recipient with partial information about a sexual harassment allegation has a responsibility to notify the complainant that additional information is needed to further evaluate or respond to the allegation. In response, the Department notes that the definition of "complainant" under § 106.30 is an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment; thus, the recipient need not have received notice of facts that definitively indicate whether a reasonable person would determine that the complainant's equal access has been effectively denied in order for the recipient to be required to respond promptly in a non-deliberately indifferent manner under § 106.44(a). The definition of "actual knowledge," in § 106.30, also reflects this concept as actual knowledge means notice of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment.

These final regulations, and § 106.44(a) in particular, incorporate principles similar to the principles in the Department's 2001 Guidance with respect to a recipient's response to a student's or parent's report of sexual harassment or sexual harassment allegations, or a recipient's response to direct observation by a responsible employee of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment. The Department's 2001 Guidance states:

> If a student or the parent of an elementary or secondary student provides information or complains about sexual harassment of the student, the school should initially discuss what actions the student or parent is seeking in response to the harassment. The school should explain the avenues for informal and formal action, including a description of the grievance procedure that is available for sexual harassment complaints and an explanation of how the procedure works. lf a responsible school employee has directly observed sexual harassment of a student, the school should contact the student who was harassed (or the parent, depending upon the age of the student), explain that the school is responsible for taking steps to correct the harassment, and provide the same information described in the previous sentence.[831]

Like the 2001 Guidance, these final regulations in § 106.6(g) recognize that a parent or guardian may have the legal right to act on behalf of a "complainant," "respondent," "party," or other individual. Section 106.44(a) also requires that the Title IX Coordinator promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain the process for filing a formal complaint. Thus, if a parent or guardian has a legal right to act on behalf of a student, the parent or guardian has the right to act on behalf of a Title IX complainant, including with respect to discussing supportive measures, or deciding to file a formal complaint.

[831] 2001 Guidance at 15.

Changes: None.

Modeling Reporting on the Military System

Comments: Commenters argued that the reporting system used in the U.S. military to address sexual assault should be modified for use in Title IX

reporting systems in order to best serve civil rights purposes. Commenters described the military reporting system as providing sexual assault victims with a two-track reporting system, under which a victim can choose a "restricted" or "unrestricted" report. Commenters described the military system's "restricted" report option as allowing the victim to report confidentially, for the purpose of receiving services, and no investigation is commenced unless the victim chooses an “unrestricted” reporting path whereby the victim’s identity is not confidential and charges are initiated against the alleged perpetrator. Commenters asserted that giving victims these options for reporting helps address the well-known and well-researched fact that sexual assault is underreported throughout society, including in military and school environments, and that many survivors of sexual violence exercise the "victim's veto" whereby no investigation takes place, and no services are given to a victim, because the victim chooses not to report their experience in any official manner. Commenters asserted that the withdrawn 2014 Q&A essentially created this two-track model,[832] which best serves the needs of complainants, and argued that it best fits the purpose of civil rights protections, especially as compared to the traditional law enforcement model, under which a victim's only option is to report to police, and then police officers and prosecutors have sole discretion whether to investigate and whether to prosecute, and the victim has little or no control over those decisions, leading

[832] Commenters cited: 2014 Q&A at 21, 22, 24.

many victims to exercise the "victim's veto" and never report at all.[833]

Commenters described the approach of the withdrawn 2014 Q&A as giving survivors two choices of how to report, so survivors essentially would make the decision whether to initiate an investigation. Commenters asserted that

---

[833] Commenters cited, e.g.: Tamara F. Lawson, A Shift Towards Gender Equality in Prosecutions: Realizing Legitimate Enforcement of Crimes Committed Against Women in Municipal and International Criminal Law, 33 S. ILL. UNIV. L. J. 181, 188-90 (2008) (in instances of sexual violence, police and prosecutors decide to advance very few cases through the criminal system); Kimberly A. Lonsway & Joanne Archambault, The "Justice Gap" for Sexual Assault Cases: Future Directions for Research and Reform, 18 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 145, 147 (2012) (finding that only five to 20 percent of victims will report a sexual assault to law enforcement); Douglas Evan Beloof, The Third Model of Criminal Process: The Victim Participation Model, 1999 UTAH L. REV. 289, 306 (1999) (arguing that the "victim's veto" occurs when the victim does not even report the wrongdoing); Kimberly A. Lonsway & Joanne Archambault, The "Justice Gap" for Sexual Assault Cases: Future Directions for Research and Reform, 18 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 145, 159 (2012) (explaining that factors such as "poor evidence gathering by police (especially victim interviews), intimidating defense tactics, incompetent prosecutors, and inappropriate decision making by jurors" result in low sexual assault conviction rates). Commenters asserted this leads to more victims deciding not to report at all.

the withdrawn 2014 Q&A ensured that if a survivor made an official report to a responsible employee or to the Title IX Coordinator the school must investigate unless the survivor explicitly requested that there be no investigation and the Title IX Coordinator granted that request after weighing multiple factors. On the other hand, commenters asserted, under that guidance a survivor could choose a "confidential path" and access services and accommodations for healing, without initiating an investigation unless or until the survivor changed their mind and officially reported to a responsible employee or to the Title IX Coordinator (which, commenters stated, is the equivalent in the military system as turning a restricted report into an unrestricted report, which is commonplace). Commenters urged the Department to reinstate the withdrawn

2014 Q&A, rather than keep the provisions in the proposed rules, regarding how complainants must report and what happens after a complainant reports.

Discussion: The Department is aware of the two-track reporting system used in the U.S. military,[834] and agrees that

---

[834] E.g., U.S. Dep't. of Defense, Sexual Assault Prevention and Response, "Reporting Options," https://sapr.mil/reporting-options ("Sexual assault is the most underreported crime in our society and in the Military. While the Department of Defense [DoD] prefers that sexual assault incidents are reported to the command to activate both victims' services and law enforcement actions, it recognizes that some victims desire only healthcare and advocacy services and do not want command or law enforcement involvement. The Department believes its first priority is for victims to be treated with dignity and respect and to receive the medical treatment, mental health counseling, and the advocacy services that they deserve. Under DoD's Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) Policy, Service members . . . have two reporting options - Restricted Reporting and Unrestricted Reporting. Under Unrestricted Reporting, both the command and law enforcement are notified. With Restricted (Confidential) Reporting, the adult sexual assault victim can access healthcare, advocacy services, and legal services without the notification to command or law enforcement.").

giving victims control over whether to report for purposes of receiving supportive services only, or also for the purpose of launching an official investigation into the alleged sexual assault, is beneficial to sexual assault victims. These final regulations share similarities with the military's two-track reporting system; the Department desires to respect the autonomy of each alleged victim to report for the purpose of receiving supportive measures, and to decide whether or not to also request an investigation into the allegations of sexual harassment. As commenters observed, the withdrawn 2014 Q&A's approach to what happens when an alleged victim reports sexual harassment also shares similarities with the two-track reporting system used in the military. These final regulations, too, are similar in some ways to the approach taken in the withdrawn 2014 Q&A. However, the Department believes that the additional precision, and obligatory nature, of these final regulations results in an approach superior to simply reinstating prior guidance.

Under the final regulations, any person may report[835] that any individual has allegedly been victimized by

---

[835] Section 106.8(a) ("any person" may report sexual harassment regardless of whether the person reporting is the alleged victim themselves, or any third party).

conduct that could constitute sexual harassment,[836] and the recipient must respond promptly, including by offering supportive measures to the complainant (i.e., the alleged victim) and telling the complainant about the option of also filing a formal complaint that starts an investigation.[837] The only persons who can initiate an investigation are the complainant themselves, or the Title IX

---

[836] Section 106.30 (defining "complainant" to mean an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment).
[837] Section 106.44(a).

Coordinator.[838] Thus, if a complainant wants a report to remain confidential (in the sense of the complainant's identity not being disclosed to the alleged perpetrator, and not launching an investigation), the complainant may receive supportive measures without an investigation being conducted – unless the Title IX Coordinator, after having considered the complainant's wishes, [838] Section 106.30 (defining "formal complaint" as a document filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator).

decides that it would be clearly unreasonable for the school not to investigate the complainant's allegations. On the other hand, if the complainant chooses to file a formal complaint, the school must initiate a grievance process and investigate the complainant's allegations.[839] These final regulations preserve the benefits of allowing third party reporting while still

[839] Section 106.44(b)(1).

giving the complainant as much control as reasonably possible over whether the school investigates, because under the final regulations a third party can report – and trigger the Title IX Coordinator's obligation to reach out to the complainant and offer supportive measures – but the third party cannot trigger an investigation.[840] Further, the final regulations allow a complainant to [840] Cf. § 106.6(g) (If a parent or guardian has a legal right to act on a complainant's behalf, the parent or guardian may file a formal complaint on behalf of the complainant).

initially report for the purpose of receiving supportive measures, and to later decide to file a formal complaint.

Changes: None.

Section 106.44(a) "education program or activity"

General Support and Opposition for "Education Program or Activity" as a Jurisdictional Condition

Comments: Several commenters expressed support for the NPRM's approach to the "education program or activity" condition, stating that it is consistent with the Title IX statute and case law. Commenters asserted that the Department has appropriately recognized that whether misconduct occurs on campus or off campus is not dispositive, and that courts have similarly applied a multi-factor test to deciding whether conduct occurred in an education program or activity. One commenter cited Federal cases suggesting that sexually hostile conduct itself, and not just its consequences, must occur on campus or at a school-sponsored or supervised event for Title IX to apply.[841] One commenter expressed support for the NPRM's approach to education program or activity because it is consistent with the Department's past practice. The commenter cited Departmental determination letters involving [841] Commenters cited: Doe v. Brown Univ., 896 F.3d 127, 132 fn. 6 (1st Cir. 2018); Yeasin v. Durham, 719 F. App'x 844 (10th Cir. 2018); Roe v. St. Louis Univ., 746 F.3d 874 (8th Cir. 2014); Rost ex rel. K.C. v. Steamboat Springs RE-2 Sch. Dist., 511 F.3d 1114, 1121 fn.1 (10th Cir. 2008); Ostrander v. Duggan, 341 F.3d 745 (8th Cir. 2003); Farmer v. Kan. State Univ., No. 16-CV-2256, 2017 WL 980460, at *8 (D. Kan. Mar. 14, 2017), aff'd by Farmer v. Kan. State Univ., 918 F.3d 1094 (10th Cir. 2019); Stephanie Ebert, THE BOSTON GLOBE (Dec. 8, 2018) (Harvard student suing Harvard University in Federal court for investigating the student for rape allegation by non-student far from campus).

institutions of higher education in 2004 and 2008 that stated recipients do not have a Title IX duty to address alleged misconduct that occurs off campus and that does not involve the recipient's programs or activities. A few commenters expressed support for the NPRM's approach to education program or activity, asserting that it imposes reasonable limits on recipient responsibility. One commenter asserted that schools are not the sex police and that expecting schools to have jurisdiction over activity in off-campus apartments, at a parent's house, a local bar, or nearby hotel, is unrealistic. One commenter expressed support for the NPRM's approach to including "education program or activity" as a condition triggering a recipient's response obligations, but urged the Department to go further and explicitly exclude from Title IX allegations made by or against someone who has no relationship with the recipient, and allegations involving students but occurring in a time or place totally unrelated to school activities such as during summer vacation hundreds of miles away from campus.

Other commenters asserted that the NPRM's approach to education program or activity was unclear. Commenters stated that the NPRM's preamble mentioned several factors, such as recipient ownership of the premises, endorsement, oversight, supervision, and disciplinary power, but argued that this multi-factor test may be confusing and make it difficult for students and schools to understand their Title IX rights and obligations. One commenter argued that the practical application of the Department's approach to misconduct that has both on-campus and off-campus elements would be challenging; for example, the commenter stated, if a sexual misconduct complaint involved a series of actions occurring on campus and off campus then the recipient may have to sift through evidence to identify and ignore events not "in" a program or activity.

Many commenters expressed concern that the NPRM's approach to the education program or activity condition would increase danger to students and others. Commenters cited studies and scholarly articles suggesting that sexual assault can cause lasting psychological damage to victims, including increasing suicide rates and substantially impacting victims' academic career, retention, graduation, and grade point average, regardless of whether the sexual assault occurred off campus or on campus.[842] Commenters argued that not addressing off-campus misconduct may chill reporting, make it harder for the community to know the nature of threats facing them, and even discourage young women from attending college. Commenters expressed concern that the [842] See data cited by commenters in the "Impact Data" subsection of the "General Support and Opposition" section of this preamble.

NPRM would cause victims to leave school, asserting that over one-third of sexual harassment or assault victims drop out of school.[843] Commenters argued that because a significant number of sexual assaults occur off campus,[844] not requiring schools to respond to those assaults will only lead

---

[843] Commenters cited: Cecilia Mengo & Beverly M. Black, Violence Victimization on a College Campus: Impact on GPA and School Dropout, 18 JOURNAL OF COLL. STUDENT RETENTION: RESEARCH, THEORY & PRACTICE 2, 234, 244 (2015).

[844] Commenters cited: EduRisk by United Educators, Confronting Campus Sexual Assault: An Examination of Higher Education Claims at 6 (2015) ("In 41 percent of claims, the victim and perpetrator attended the same off-campus party before going back to campus, where the sexual assault occurred. These off-campus parties included institution-recognized sorority and fraternity houses, athletic team houses, and students' off-campus residences."); U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Rape and Sexual Assault Victimization Among College-Age Females, 1995-2013 at 6 (2014) (95 percent of sexual assaults of female students ages 18-24 occur outside of school).

to more college students dropping out. Several commenters emphasized that the reality is that off-campus life is often an essential part of the educational experience, such as off-campus travel for conferences and networking events, and that off-campus living for students is quite common.[845] Commenters argued that the Department should not give a free pass to perpetrators whose abusive conduct occurs off campus. Commenters expressed concern that repeat offenders could systematically target victims, knowing they will get away with it.

[845] Commenters cited: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011); Rochelle Sharp, How Much Does Living Off Campus Cost? Who Knows?, THE NEW YORK TIMES (Aug. 5, 2016) (87 percent of college students and even more elementary and secondary school students reside off campus).

Commenters raised concerns about off-campus Greek life as hotbeds of sexual misconduct not covered by the NPRM, arguing that students are more likely to experience sexual assault if in a fraternity or sorority, and that men in fraternities are more likely than other male students to be perpetrators of sexual misconduct.[846] Commenters expressed concern that recipients might interpret the NPRM as preventing them from addressing sexual misconduct in fraternities, sororities, and social clubs the recipient does not recognize,[847] or

---

[846] Commenters cited: Jacqueline Chevalier Minow & Christopher J. Einolf, Sorority Participation and Sexual Assault Risk, 15 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 7 (2009); Jennifer Fleck, Sexual assault more prevalent in fraternities and sororities, study finds, UWIRE.COM (Oct. 16, 2014); Claude A. Mellins et al., Sexual Assault Incidents Among College Undergraduates: Prevalence and Factors Associated with Risk, 13 PLOS ONE 1 (2017).

[847] Commenters cited: Jacquelyn D. Weirsma-Mosely et al., An Empirical Investigation of Campus Demographics and Reported Rapes, 65 JOURNAL OF AM. COLL. HEALTH 4 (2017); Cortney A. Franklin, Sorority Affiliation and Sexual Assault Victimization, 22 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 8 (2016).

perversely encourage recipients not to recognize Greek letter associations, but that the Department should encourage such relationships because they often entail mandatory insurance, risk management standards, and training requirements to reduce incidents of sexual misconduct.

Commenters asserted that the NPRM especially increases risks to community college and vocational school students because such students generally live off campus, to students of color and other already marginalized students who may not be able to afford to live on campus, to elementary and secondary school students with disabilities who may be separated from their peers and removed to off-site services, and to LGBTQ students because it may be harder for them to find adequate outside support services. One commenter argued that the Department's exclusion of off-campus assaults will hinder Federal background check processes, potentially harming our national security and exposing co-workers to danger. Another commenter stated that the corporate world does not exclude out-of-office misconduct from company codes of conduct, and so the Department should not set young people up to fail by not showing them early in life that misconduct is unacceptable and will lead to consequences.

Commenters argued that Federal courts have been supportive of universities applying student codes of conduct to misconduct occurring off campus and outside the school's programs or activities.[848] Commenters argued that courts have recognized that an assailant's mere presence on campus

---

[848] Commenters cited: Slaughter v. Brigham Young Univ., 514 F.2d 622 (10th Cir. 1975); Due v. Fla. Agric. & Mech. Univ. (N.D. Fla. 1963); Hill v. Bd. of Trustees of Mich. State Univ., 182 F. Supp. 2d 621 (W.D. Mich. 2001); Gomes v. Univ. of Me. Sys., 304 F.Supp. 2d 117 (D. Me. 2004).

creates a hostile environment for sexual harassment victims, exposing recipients to Title IX liability under a deliberate indifference standard if the recipient fails to redress the hostile environment even where the underlying sexual harassment or assault occurred off campus and outside the recipient's education program or activity. Commenters asserted that the proposed rules would leave recipients vulnerable to private Title IX lawsuits because recipients would not need to address the continuing effects of sexual assault that occurred outside the recipient's program or activity under the Department's regulations yet a Federal court may hold otherwise.[849]

Commenters argued that Federal courts

---

[849] Commenters cited: Lapka v. Chertoff, 517 F.3d 974 (7th Cir. 2008); 477 F.3d 1282, 1298 (11th Cir. 2007); Doe v. East Haven Bd. of Educ., 200 F. App'x 46 (2d Cir. 2006); Butters v. James Madison Univ., 145 F. Supp. 3d 610 (W.D. Va. 2015), dismissed on summary judgment in Butters v. James Madison Univ., 208 F. Supp. 3d 745 (W.D. Va. 2016); Williams v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. Sys. of Ga., Doe ex rel. Doe v. Derby Bd. of Educ., 451 F. Supp. 2d 438 (D. Conn. 2006); Crandell v. New York Coll. of Osteopathic Med., 87 F. Supp. 2d 304, 316 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); Kinsman v. Fla. State Univ. Bd. of Trustees, No. 4:15-CV-235, 2015 WL 11110848 (N.D. Fla. Aug. 12, 2015); McGinnis v. Muncie Cmty. Sch. Corp., 1:11-CV-1125, 2013 WL 2456067 (S.D. Ind. June 5, 2013); C.S. v. S. Columbia Sch. Dist., No. 4:1-CV-1013, WL 2371413 (M.D. Pa. May 21, 2013); Kelly v. Yale Univ., No. 3:01-CV-1591, 2003 WL 1563424 (D. Conn. Mar. 26, 2003).

have determined that regardless of where a sexual assault occurred, where both parties are in the same education program or activity a recipient should be held liable under a deliberate indifference standard based on the recipient's response to the alleged incident, even if the incident happened under circumstances outside the recipient's control.[850] Commenters

[850] Commenters cited: Spencer v. Univ. of N.M. Bd. of Regents, No. 15-CV-141, 2016 WL 10592223 (D. N.M. Jan. 11, 2016).

argued that courts have allowed Title IX private causes of action for sexual misconduct to proceed even where some or all of alleged misconduct occurred in a location outside the recipient's control so long as there was "some nexus between the out-of-school conduct and the school"[851] and that the proposed rules should take the same approach. Commenters argued that the [851] Commenters cited: Weckhorst v. Kan. State Univ., 241 F. Supp. 3d 1154, 1168-69 (D. Kan. 2017); Rost ex rel. KC v. Steamboat Springs RE -2 School Dist., 511 F.3d 1114, 1121 fn.1 (10th Cir. 2008).

Supreme Court's Gebser decision involved sexual activity between a teacher and student where the sexual activity did not take place on school grounds, yet the Supreme Court did not consider that sexual harassment to be outside the purview of Title IX.[852]

Commenters argued that the 2001 Guidance and 2017 Q&A require recipients to address sexual harassment

---

[852] Commenters cited: Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 278 (1998).

that occurs off campus where the underlying sexual harassment or assault causes the complainant to experience a hostile environment on campus, and urged the Department to ensure that the final regulations impose similar obligations for recipients to address the continuing effects of sexual harassment that occurs off campus.

Another commenter contended that the NPRM conflicts with recent

Department actions under the Trump Administration, such as cutting off partial funding to the Chicago Public School system for failing to address two reports of off-campus sexual assault.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the general support for our approach to including the concept of a recipient's "education program or activity" in these final regulations. The "education program or activity" language in the

Title IX statute[853] provides context for the scope of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, which ensures that Federal funds are not used to support discriminatory practices in education programs or activities.[854]

In Davis, the Supreme Court framed the question in that case as whether a recipient of Federal financial assistance

---

[853] 20 U.S.C. 1681(a).

[854] Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979) (the objectives of Title IX are two-fold: first, to "avoid the use of Federal resources to support discriminatory practices" and second, to "provide individual citizens effective protection against those practices").

may be liable for damages under Title IX, for failure to respond to peer-on-peer sexual harassment in the recipient's program or activity.[855] The Supreme Court in Davis continued to reference the statutory "program or activity" language throughout its decision[856] and refuted dissenting justices' arguments that the majority's approach permitted

---

[855] Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 639 (1999).
[856] Id. at 652 ("Moreover, the provision that the discrimination occur 'under any education program or activity' suggests that the behavior be serious enough to have the systemic effect of denying the victim equal access to an educational program or activity").

too much liability against recipients in part by reasoning: "Moreover, because the harassment must occur 'under' 'the operations of' a funding recipient, see 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a); § 1687 (defining 'program or activity'), the harassment must take place in a context subject to the school district's control. . . . These factors combine to limit a recipient's damages liability to circumstances wherein the recipient exercises substantial control over both the harasser and the context in which the known harassment occurs."[857]

The Department's regulatory authority must emanate from Federal law.[858] Congress, in enacting Title IX, has conferred on the Department the authority to regulate under Federal law. The appropriate place to start is the statutory text of Title IX, for "[u]nless

---

[857] Id. at 645.
[858] See Stark v. Wickard, 321 U.S. 288, 309 (1944).

otherwise defined, statutory terms are generally interpreted in accordance with their ordinary meaning."[859] Title IX's text, 20 U.S.C. 1681(a) (emphasis added), states: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal

---

[859] BP Am. Prod. Co. v. Burton, 549 U.S. 84, 91 (2006) (citing Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 42 (1979)).

financial assistance[.]" The Department's authority to regulate sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination pursuant to Title IX is clear; the Supreme Court has held that sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination, and has confirmed that Congress has directed the Department, as a Federal agency that disburses funding to education programs or activities, to establish requirements to effectuate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.[860] The Department's authority to regulate sexual harassment depends on whether sexual harassment occurs in "any education program or activity" because the Department's regulatory authority is co-extensive with the scope of the Title IX statute. Title IX does not authorize the Department to regulate sex discrimination occurring anywhere but only to regulate sex discrimination in education programs or activities.[861] Congress, in the Title IX statute, provided definitions of "program or activity" that are reflected in the Department's current Title IX regulations.[862]

---

[860] Gebser v. Lago Vista Ind. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 280-81 (1998) (quoting 20 U.S.C. 1682).

The Supreme Court has applied the "program or activity" language in the

---

[861] See the "Section 106.44(a) 'against a person in the U.S.'" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section this preamble, for discussion of the other jurisdictional limitation on the scope of Title IX – that the statute protects any person "in the United States."
[862] 20 U.S.C. 1687; 34 CFR 106.2(h).

Title IX statute in the context of judicial enforcement of Title IX. The Department does not believe that the Supreme Court's application of "program or activity" in the context of sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination is an unreasonable interpretation of the Title IX statute, because the Supreme Court applied the language of the statute including the definitions of "program or activity"

provided in the statute. The Department thus concludes that we should align these final regulations with the Supreme Court's approach to "education program or activity" in the context of Title IX sexual harassment.[863] By contrast, as explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to [863] The Supreme Court's analysis of the "program or activity" statutory language was in the context of judicial enforcement, but the Department does not believe a different analysis is necessary or advisable for administrative enforcement, where the Department – like the Supreme Court – is constrained to interpret and apply the text of the statute including the definitions of "program or activity" provided in the statute. Consistent with this position, and as discussed throughout this preamble, we have revised § 106.44(a) to clarify that "education program or activity" for purposes of these sexual harassment regulations includes circumstances wherein the recipient exercises substantial control over both the harasser and the context of the harassment – the same conclusion reached by the Davis Court when it applied the "program or activity" statutory language to the context of a school's response to sexual harassment. Davis, 526 U.S. at 645.

Address Sexual Harassment," the three parts of the Gebser/Davis framework (i.e., definition of sexual harassment, actual knowledge, deliberate indifference) do not appear in the text of the Title IX statute, and the Department believes that it may promulgate regulatory requirements that differ in significant ways from the Gebser/Davis framework, to best effectuate the purposes of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate in the context of administrative enforcement, and we have done so in these final regulations.

The Department acknowledges the concerns of many commenters who argued that with respect to sexual harassment, whether the alleged conduct occurred in the recipient's education program or activity might have been understood too narrowly under the NPRM (e.g., to exclude all off- campus conduct) or at least created potential confusion for complainants and recipients. In response to commenters' concerns, the Department believes that providing additional clarification as to the scope of a recipient's education program or activity for purposes of Title IX sexual harassment is necessary, and, therefore, adds to § 106.44(a) in the final regulations language similar to language used by the Court in Davis: For purposes of § 106.30, § 106.44, and § 106.45, the phrase "education program or activity" includes "locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs" and also includes "any building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution." The Title IX statute[864] and existing Title IX regulations,[865] already contain detailed definitions of "program or activity" that, among other aspects of such definitions, include "all of the operations of" a postsecondary institution or local education agency. The Department will interpret "program or activity" in these

---

[864] 20 U.S.C. 1687.

[865] 34 CFR 106.2(h); 34 CFR 106.2(i) (defining "recipient"); 34 CFR 106.31(a) (referring to "any academic, extracurricular, research, occupational training, or other education program or activity operated by a recipient which receives Federal financial assistance").

final regulations in accordance with the Title IX statutory (20 U.S.C. 1687) and regulatory definitions (34 CFR 106.2(h)), guided by the Supreme Court's language applied specifically for use in sexual harassment situations under Title IX regarding circumstances over which a recipient has control and (for postsecondary institutions) buildings owned or controlled by student organizations if the student organization

is officially recognized by the postsecondary institution. [866]

While "all of the operations of" a recipient (per existing statutory and regulatory provisions), and the additional "substantial control" language in these final regulations, clearly include all incidents of sexual harassment occurring on a recipient's

---

[866] Section 106.44(a) (adding "For purposes of this section, § 106.30, and § 106.45, 'education program or activity' includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs, and also includes any building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution.").

campus, the statutory and regulatory definitions of program or activity along with the revised language in § 106.44(a) clarify that a recipient's Title IX obligations extend to sexual harassment incidents that occur off campus if any of three conditions are met: if the off-campus incident occurs as part of the recipient's "operations" pursuant to 20 U.S.C. 1687 and 34 CFR 106.2(h); if the recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and the context of alleged sexual harassment that occurred off campus pursuant to § 106.44(a); or if a sexual harassment incident occurs at an off-campus building owned or controlled by a student organization officially recognized by a postsecondary institution pursuant to §106.44(a).

The NPRM cited to Federal court opinions that have considered whether sexual harassment occurred in a recipient's education program or activity by examining factors such as whether the recipient funded, promoted, or sponsored the event or circumstance where the alleged harassment occurred. While it may be helpful or useful for recipients to consider factors applied by Federal courts to determine the scope of a recipient's program or activity, no single factor is determinative to conclude whether a recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurred, or whether an incident occurred as part of "all of the operations of" a school, college, or university.

The revised language in § 106.44(a) also specifically addresses commenters' concerns about recognized student organizations that own and control buildings such as some fraternities and sororities operating from off-campus

locations where sexual harassment and assault may occur with frequency. The revised language further addresses commenters' questions regarding whether postsecondary institutions' Title IX obligations are triggered when sexual harassment occurs in an off-campus location not owned by the postsecondary institution but that is in use by a student organization that the institution chooses to officially recognize such as a fraternity or sorority. The revisions to § 106.44(a) clarify that where a postsecondary institution has officially recognized a student organization, the recipient's Title IX obligations apply to sexual harassment that occurs in buildings owned or controlled by such a student organization, irrespective of whether the building is on campus or off campus, and irrespective of whether the recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and the context of the harassment outside the fact of officially recognizing the fraternity or sorority that owns or controls the building. The Department makes this revision to promulgate a bright line rule that decisively responds to commenters and provides clarity with respect to recipient-recognized student organizations that own or control off- campus buildings. Official recognition of a student organization, alone, does not conclusively determine whether all the events and actions of the students in the organization become a part of a recipient's education program or activity; however, the Department believes that a reasonable, bright line rule is that official recognition of a student organization brings buildings owned or controlled by the organization under the auspices of the postsecondary institution recipient and thus within the scope of the recipient's Title IX obligations. As part of the process for official recognition, a postsecondary institution may require a student organization that owns or controls a building to agree to abide by the recipient's Title IX policy and procedures under these final regulations, including as to any misconduct that occurs in the building owned or controlled by a student organization. Accordingly, postsecondary institutions may not ignore sexual harassment that occurs in buildings owned or controlled by recognized student organizations. The Department acknowledges that even though postsecondary institutions may not always control what occurs in an off campus building owned or controlled by a recognized student organization, such student organizations and the events in their buildings often become an integral part of campus life. The Department also acknowledges that a postsecondary institution may be limited in its ability to gather evidence during an investigation if the incident occurs off campus on private property that a student organization (but not the institution) owns or controls. A postsecondary institution, however, may still investigate a formal complaint arising from sexual harassment occurring in a building owned or controlled by a recognized student organization (whether the building is on campus or off campus), for instance by interviewing students who were allegedly involved in the incident and who are a part of the officially recognized student organization. Thus, under the final regulations (e.g., § 106.44(b)(1)) a postsecondary institution must investigate formal complaints alleging sexual harassment that occurred in a fraternity or sorority building (located on campus, or off campus) owned by the fraternity or sorority, if the postsecondary institution has officially recognized that Greek life organization. Further, under § 106.44(a) the recipient must offer supportive measures to a complainant alleged to be the victim of sexual harassment occurring at a building owned or controlled by an officially recognized student organization. Where a postsecondary institution has officially recognized a student organization, and sexual harassment occurs in an off campus location not owned or controlled by the student organization yet involving members of the officially recognized student organization, the recipient's Title IX obligations will depend on whether the recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and the context of the harassment, or whether the circumstances may otherwise be determined to have been part of the "operations of" the recipient.

We note that the revision in § 106.44(a) referencing a "building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution" is not the same as, and should not be confused with, the Clery Act's use of the term "noncampus building or property," even though that phrase is defined under the Clery Act in part by reference to student organizations officially recognized by an institution.[867] For example, "education

[867] See 20 U.S.C. 1092(f)(6)(iii) (defining "noncampus building or property" in part as "any building or property owned or controlled by a student organization recognized by the institution"). The Clery Act regulations, 34 CFR 668.46(a), include "noncampus building or property" as part of an institution's Clery geography and define "noncampus building or property" as "[a]ny building or property owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by the institution; or [a]ny building or property owned or controlled by an institution that is used in direct support of, or in relation to, the institution's educational purposes, is frequently used by students, and is not within the same reasonably contiguous geographic area of the institution.").

program or activity" in these final regulations includes buildings within the confines of the campus on land owned by the institution that the institution may rent to a recognized student organization.[868] As discussed in the "Clery Act" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble, the Clery Act and Title IX serve distinct purposes, and Clery Act geography is not co-extensive with the scope of a recipient's education program or activity under Title IX.

---

[868] But see U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office of Postsecondary Education, The Handbook for Campus Safety and Security Reporting, 2-18 to 2-19 (2016), https://www2.ed.gov/admins/lead/safety/handbook.pdf.

With respect to commenters who suggested that the final regulations should not apply to sexual misconduct by or against an individual with no relationship to the recipient, the Department believes that the framework adopted in the final regulations appropriately effectuates the broad non- discrimination mandate of Title IX (which protects any "person" from discrimination in an education program or activity) while also ensuring that recipients are responsible for addressing sexual harassment occurring in an educational institution's "operations," or when the recipient has control over the situation, or where a postsecondary institution has recognized a student organization thereby lending the recipient's implicit extension of responsibility over circumstances involving sexual harassment that occurs in buildings owned or controlled by such a student organization. Like the "no person" language in the Title IX statute, the final regulations place no restriction on the identity of a complainant (§ 106.30 defines complainant to mean "an individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment"), obligating a recipient to respond to such a complainant regardless of the complainant's relationship to the recipient. Similarly, reflecting that the Title IX statute does not limit commission of prohibited discrimination only to certain individuals affiliated with a recipient, the final regulations define a respondent to mean "an individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment" without restricting a respondent to being a person enrolled or employed by the recipient or who has any other affiliation or connection with the recipient.

However, the final regulations do require that in order to file a formal complaint, the complainant must be "participating in or attempting to participate in" the recipient's education program or activity at the time the formal complaint is filed.[869] This prevents recipients from being legally obligated to investigate allegations made by complainants who have no relationship with the recipient, yet still protects those complainants by requiring the recipient to respond promptly in a non-deliberately indifferent manner. For similar reasons, the final regulations

---

[869] A complainant may be "attempting to participate" in the recipient's education program or activity, for example, where the complainant has applied for admission, or where the complainant has withdrawn but indicates a desire to re-enroll if the recipient appropriately responds to sexual harassment allegations.

provide in § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) that a recipient may in its discretion dismiss a formal complaint if the respondent is no longer enrolled or employed by the recipient, recognizing that a recipient's general obligation to provide a complainant with a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response might not include completing a grievance process in a situation where the recipient lacks any disciplinary authority over the respondent.

In response to commenters' concerns that practical application of the "education program or activity" condition might be challenging in situations that, for example, involve some conduct occurring in the recipient's education program or activity and some conduct occurring outside the recipient's education program or activity, the Department reiterates that "off campus" does not automatically mean that the incident occurred outside the recipient's education program or activity. The Department agrees that recipients are obliged to think through the scope of each recipient's own education program or activity in light of the statutory and regulatory definitions of "program or activity" (20 U.S.C. 1687 and 34 CFR 106.2(h)) and the statement in § 106.44(a) that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs as well as buildings owned or controlled by student organizations officially recognized by a postsecondary institution.

To ensure that recipients adequately consider the resulting coverage of Title IX to each recipient's particular circumstances, the final regulations require that every Title IX Coordinator, investigator, decision-maker, and person who facilitates an informal resolution process, must be trained on (among other things) "the scope of the recipient's education program or activity."[870] We have also revised § 106.45(b)(10)(i)(D) so that materials used to train Title IX personnel must be posted on a recipient's website. These revisions ensure that a recipient's students and employees, and the public, understand the scope of the recipient's education program or activity for purposes of Title IX. Under Title IX, recipients must operate education programs or activities free from sex discrimination, and the Department will enforce these final regulations vigorously with respect to a recipient's obligation to respond to sexual harassment that occurs in the recipient's education program or activity.

[870] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

In situations involving some allegations of conduct that occurred in an education program or activity, and

some allegations of conduct that did not, the recipient must investigate the allegations of conduct that occurred in the recipient's education program or activity, and nothing in the final regulations precludes the recipient from choosing to also address allegations of conduct outside the recipient's education program or activity.[871] For example, if a student is sexually assaulted outside of an education program or activity but subsequently suffers Title IX sexual harassment in an education program or activity, then these final regulations apply to the latter act of sexual harassment, and the recipient may choose to address the prior assault through its own code of conduct. Nothing in the final regulations prohibits a recipient from resolving allegations of conduct outside the recipient's education program or activity by applying the same grievance process required under § 106.45 for formal complaints of Title IX sexual harassment, even though such a process would not be required under Title IX or these final regulations. Thus, a recipient is not required by these final regulations to inefficiently extricate conduct occurring outside an education program or activity from conduct occurring in an education program or activity arising from the same facts or circumstances in order to meet the recipient's obligations with respect to the latter.

[871] Section 106.45(b)(3) (revised in the final regulations to expressly state that although a recipient must dismiss allegations about conduct that did not occur in the recipient's education program or activity, such a mandatory dismissal is "for purposes of sexual harassment under title IX or this part; such a dismissal does not preclude action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct.").

The Department appreciates the various concerns raised by many commenters regarding the extent to which students reside or spend time off campus and how the application of the

“education program or activity” condition may affect students who experience sexual harassment and sexual assault in off-campus situations, including community college students, vocational school students, and students who belong to marginalized demographic groups. The Department reiterates that the final regulations do not impose a geographic test or draw a distinction between on-campus

misconduct and off-campus misconduct. As discussed above, whether conduct occurs in a recipient's education program or activity does not necessarily depend on the geographic location of the incident. Instead, "education program or activity" relies on statutory and regulatory definitions of "program or activity,"[872] on the statement adapted from the Supreme

[872] E.g., 20 U.S.C. 1687; 34 CFR 106.2(h).

Court's language in Davis added to § 106.44(a) that education program or activity includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and over the context in which the sexual harassment occurred, and includes on-campus and off-campus buildings owned or controlled by a student organization officially recognized by a postsecondary institution. If a sexual assault occurs against a student outside of an education program or activity, and the student later experiences Title IX sexual harassment in an education program or activity, then a recipient with actual knowledge of such sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity must respond pursuant to § 106.44(a).

The final regulations' approach reduces confusion for recipients and students as to the scope of Title IX's protective coverage and recognizes the Department's administrative role in enforcing this important civil rights law according to the statute's plain terms. Furthermore, as noted previously, nothing in the final regulations prevents recipients from initiating a student conduct proceeding or offering supportive measures to students affected by sexual harassment that occurs outside the recipient's education program or activity. Title IX is not the exclusive remedy for sexual misconduct or traumatic events that affect students. As to misconduct that falls outside the ambit of Title IX, nothing in the final regulations precludes recipients from vigorously addressing misconduct (sexual or otherwise) that occurs

outside the scope of Title IX or from offering supportive measures to students and individuals impacted by misconduct or trauma even when Title IX and its implementing regulations do not require such actions.[873] The Department emphasizes that sexual misconduct is unacceptable regardless of the circumstances in which it occurs, and [873] As discussed in the "Directed Question 5: Individuals with Disabilities" subsection of the "Directed Questions" section of this preamble, nothing in these final regulations affects a recipient's obligations to comply with all applicable disability laws, such as the ADA. Thus, for example, if a recipient's student (or employee) has a disability caused or exacerbated by, or arising from, sexual harassment, a recipient must comply with applicable disability laws (including with respect to providing reasonable accommodations) irrespective of whether the sexual harassment that caused or exacerbated the individual's disability constitutes Title IX sexual harassment to which the recipient must respond under these final regulations.

recognizing jurisdictional limitations on the purview of a statute does not equate to condoning any form of sexual misconduct.

The Department believes a commenter's concern regarding the negative effect of the final regulations on the Federal background check process and our national security to be speculative. The final regulations would not categorically exclude off-campus assaults. As discussed previously, the final regulations applies to off-campus sexual harassment that occurs under "the operations of" the recipient, or where the recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and the context in which the sexual harassment occurred, or in a building owned or controlled by a student organization officially recognized by a postsecondary institution. This

commenter appears to have made a series of assumptions that may not be true, including that a significant number of off-campus assaults not covered by the final regulations would involve perpetrators subjected to a Federal background check in the future, and that a significant number of background checks would fail to uncover relevant information about sexual misconduct solely because the perpetrator's misconduct was not covered under Title IX. Again, the Department emphasizes that nothing in the final regulations prevents recipients from addressing sexual misconduct that occurs outside their education programs or activities, nor do the final regulations discourage or prevent a victim from reporting sexual misconduct to law enforcement or from filing a civil lawsuit; therefore, numerous avenues exist through which misconduct not covered under Title IX would be revealed during a Federal background check of the perpetrator.

With respect to a commenter's assertion that the final regulations may perversely incentivize recipients to not recognize fraternities and sororities, the Department believes this conclusion would require assuming that recipients will make decisions affecting the quality of life of their students based solely on whether or not recipient recognition of a student organization such as a fraternity or sorority would result in sexual harassment that occurs at locations affiliated with that organization falling under Title IX's scope. The Department does not make such an assumption, believing instead that recipients take many factors into account in deciding whether, and under what conditions, a recipient wishes to officially recognize a student organization. Whether or not these final regulations alter postsecondary institutions' decisions about recognizing Greek life organizations, the Department has determined that the scope of Title IX extends to the entirety of a recipient's education program and activity, and with respect to postsecondary institutions, the Department is persuaded by commenters' contentions that when a postsecondary institution chooses to officially recognize a student organization, the recipient has implied to its students and employees that locations owned by such a student organization are under the imprimatur of the recipient, whether or not the recipient otherwise exercises substantial control over such a location.

The Department believes there is a fundamental distinction between Title IX, and workplace policies that may exist in the corporate world. Title IX has clear jurisdictional application to education programs or activities, and the Department does not have authority to extend Title IX's application. By contrast, corporations may have more flexibility in crafting their own rules and policies to reflect their values and the needs of their employees and customers. Further, Title VII does not necessarily deem actionable all sexual harassment committed by employees regardless of the location or context of the harassment.[874] These final regulations tether sexual harassment to a recipient's education program or activity in a similar manner to the way courts tether sexual harassment to a workplace under an employer's

[874] See, e.g., Lapka v. Chertoff, 517 F.3d 974, 982-83 (7th Cir. 2008).

control.[875] Regardless of any differences between analyses under Title VII and Title IX, we emphasize that recipients retain discretion under the final regulations to address sexual misconduct that falls outside the recipient's education program or activity through their own disciplinary system

---

[875] The Department adds to § 106.44(a) the statement that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs. This helps clarify that even if a situation arises off campus, it may still be part of the recipient's education program or activity if the recipient exercised substantial control over the context and the alleged harasser. While such situations may be fact specific, recipients must consider whether, for example, a sexual harassment incident between two students that occurs in an off-campus apartment (i.e., not a dorm room provided by the recipient) is a situation over which the recipient exercised substantial control; if so, the recipient must respond when it has actual knowledge of sexual harassment or allegations of sexual harassment that occurred there. At the same time, the Title IX statute and existing regulations broadly define a recipient's "program or activity" to include (as to schools) "all of the operations" of the school, such that situations that arise on campus are already part of a school's education program or activity. 20 U.S.C. 1687.

and by offering supportive measures to complainants reporting such misconduct.

The Department acknowledges commenters' citations to Federal court opinions for the proposition that a recipient may be deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment that occurred outside the recipient's control where the complainant has to interact with the respondent in the recipient's education program or activity, or where the effects of the underlying sexual assault create a hostile environment in the complainant's workplace or educational environment. However, with the changes to the final regulations made in response to commenters' concerns, the Department believes that we have clarified that sexual harassment incidents occurring off campus may fall under Title IX. The statutory and regulatory definitions of

"program or activity" and the statements regarding "substantial control" and "buildings owned or controlled by" student organizations officially recognized by postsecondary institutions in § 106.44(a) do not state or imply that off-campus incidents necessarily fall outside a recipient's education program or activity. Moreover, complainants can request supportive measures or an investigation into

allegations of conduct that do not meet Title IX jurisdictional conditions, under a recipient's own code of conduct.[876]

Some of the situations in Federal cases cited to by commenters may have reached similar outcomes under the final regulations. For example, in Doe v. East Haven Board of Education,[877] the [876] The Department also notes that § 106.45(b)(8) in the final regulations permits complainants and respondents equally to appeal a recipient's determination that allegations were subject to mandatory dismissal under § 106.45(b)(3)(i).

---

[877] 200 F. App'x 46, 48 (2d Cir. 2006); Lapka v. Chertoff, 517 F.3d 974, 982-83 (7th Cir. 2008) (the Seventh Circuit reasoned that the plaintiff sufficiently alleged workplace harassment even though the alleged rape occurred while the plaintiff and assailant were socializing after hours in a private hotel room, because the bar was part of the training facility where the plaintiff and assailant were required to attend work-related training sessions and thus were on "official duty" while at that facility, including the bar located in the facility, "so the event could be said to have grown out of the workplace environment" and the plaintiff and assailant were trainees expected to eat and drink at the facility and "return to dormitories and hotel rooms provided by" the employer such that "[e]mployees in these

Second Circuit held that the plaintiff sufficiently alleged sexual harassment to which the school was deliberately indifferent where the harassment consisted of on-campus taunts and name-calling directed at the plaintiff after she had reported being raped off campus by two high-school boys. The final regulations would similarly analyze situations can be expected to band together for society and socialize as a matter of course" justifying the Court's conclusion that the plaintiff had alleged sexual harassment (rape) that arose in the context of a workplace environment and to which the employer had an obligation to respond). Although Lapka was a case under Title VII, the final regulations would similarly analyze whether sexual harassment occurred in the school's program or activity by inquiring whether the school exercised substantial control over the context of the harassment and the alleged harasser.

---

whether sexual harassment (i.e., unwelcome conduct on the basis of sex so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively deprives a complainant of equal access to education) in the recipient's program or activity triggered a recipient's response obligations regardless of whether such sexual harassment stemmed from the complainant's allegations of having suffered sexual assault (e.g., rape)

outside the recipient's program or activity. Further, whether or not the off-campus rape in that case was in, or outside, the school's education program or activity, would depend on the factual circumstances, because as explained above, not all off-campus sexual harassment is excluded from Title IX coverage.

Contrary to commenters' assertions, the Supreme Court in Gebser did not dispense with the program or activity limitation or declare that where the harassment occurred did not matter. The facts at issue in the Gebser case involved teacher-on-student harassment that consisted of both in-class sexual comments directed at the plaintiff as well as a sexual relationship that began when the respondent-teacher visited the plaintiff's home ostensibly to give her a book.[878] The Supreme Court in Gebser emphasized that a school district needs to be aware of discrimination (in the form of sexual harassment) "in its programs" and emphasized that a teacher's sexual abuse of a student "undermines the basic purposes of the educational system"[879] thereby implicitly

---

[878] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 277-78.

[879] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 286 ("As a general matter, it does not appear that Congress contemplated unlimited recovery in damages against a funding recipient where the recipient is unaware of discrimination in its programs.") (emphasis added); id. at 289 (reasoning that a school's liability in a private lawsuit should give the school opportunity to know of the violation and correct it voluntarily similarly to the way the Title IX statute directs administrative agencies to give a school that opportunity to voluntarily correct violations, and the Court stated "Presumably, a central purpose of requiring notice of the violation 'to the appropriate person' and an opportunity for voluntary compliance before administrative enforcement proceedings can commence is to avoid diverting education funding from beneficial uses where a recipient was unaware of discrimination in its programs and is willing to institute prompt corrective measures.") (emphasis added); id. at 290 ("we hold that a damages remedy will not lie under Title IX unless an

recognizing that a teacher's sexual harassment of a student is likely to constitute sexual harassment "in the program" of the school even if the harassment occurs off campus. Nothing in the final regulations contradicts this premise or conclusion; § 106.44(a) clarifies that a recipient's education program or activity includes official who at a minimum has authority to address the alleged discrimination and to institute corrective measures on the recipient's behalf has actual knowledge of discrimination in the recipient's programs and fails adequately to respond.") (emphasis added); id. at 292 ("No one questions that a student suffers extraordinary harm when subjected to sexual harassment and abuse by a teacher, and that the teacher's conduct is reprehensible and undermines the basic purposes of the educational system.") (emphasis added).

---

circumstances over which a recipient has substantial control over the context of the harassment and the respondent, and a teacher employed by a recipient who visits a student's home ostensibly to give the student a book but in reality to instigate sexual activity with the student could constitute sexual harassment "in the program" of the recipient such that a recipient with actual knowledge of that harassment would be obligated under the final regulations to respond. Similarly, the Supreme Court in Davis viewed the perpetrator's status as a teacher in Gebser as relevant to concluding that the sexual harassment was happening "under" the recipient's education program or activity.[880] We reiterate that the final regulations do not distinguish

---

[880] Davis, 526 U.S. at 652-53 ("Moreover, the provision that the discrimination occur 'under any education program or activity' suggests that the behavior be serious enough to have the systemic effect of denying the victim equal access to an educational program or activity. . . . The fact that it was a teacher who engaged in harassment in Franklin and Gebser is relevant. The relationship between the harasser and the victim necessarily affects the extent to which the misconduct can be said to breach Title IX's guarantee of equal access to educational benefits and to have a systemic effect on a program or activity.").

between sexual harassment occurring "on campus" versus "off campus" but rather state that Title IX covers sexual harassment that occurs in a recipient's education program or activity. The final regulations follow the Gebser/Davis approach to Title IX's statutory reference to discrimination in an education program or activity; sexual harassment by a teacher as opposed to harassment by a fellow student may, as indicated in

Gebser and Davis, affect whether the sexual harassment occurred "under any education program or activity."[881] This is a matter that recipients must consider when training Title IX personnel on the "scope of the recipient's education program or activity" pursuant to § 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

Both the 2001 Guidance and 2017 Q&A recognize the statutory language of

---

[881] Id. at 652.

"education program or activity" as a limitation on sexual harassment to which a recipient must respond. For example, the 2001 Guidance notes that "Title IX applies to all public and private educational institutions that receive Federal funds" and states that the "education program or activity of a school includes all of the school's operations" which means "that Title IX protects students in connection with all of the academic, educational, extra-curricular, athletic, and other programs of the school, whether they take place in the facilities of the school, on a school bus, at a class or training program sponsored by the school at another location, or elsewhere."[882] Similarly, the 2017 Q&A expressly acknowledges that a recipient's obligation to respond to [882] 2001 Guidance at 2-3 (internal quotation marks omitted) (citing to 20 U.S.C. 1687, codification of the amendment to Title IX regarding scope of jurisdiction, enacted by the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1987, and to 65 FR 68049 (November 13, 2000), the Department's amendment of the Title IX regulations to incorporate the statutory definition of "program or activity.").

sexual harassment is confined to harassment that occurs in the recipient's education program or activity, citing statutory and regulatory definitions of "recipient," "operations," and "program or activity."[883] The final regulations similarly rely on preexisting statutory and regulatory definitions of a recipient's "program or activity" and add a statement that "education program or

[883] 2017 Q&A at 1, fn. 3.

activity" includes circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control. The withdrawn 2011 Dear Colleague Letter departed from the Department's longstanding acknowledgement that a recipient's response obligations are conditioned on sexual harassment that occurs in the recipient's education program or activity;[884] these final regulations return to the Department's approach in the 2001 Guidance, which mirrors the Supreme Court's approach to "education program or activity" as a jurisdictional condition that promotes a recipient's obligation under Title IX to provide education programs or activities

---

[884] 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4 ("Schools may have an obligation to respond to student-on-student sexual harassment that initially occurred off school grounds, outside a school's education program or activity. If a student files a complaint with the school, regardless of where the conduct occurred, the school must process the complaint in accordance with its established procedures. Because students often experience the continuing effects of off-campus sexual harassment in the educational setting, schools should consider the effects of the off-campus conduct when evaluating whether there is a hostile environment on campus. For example, if a student alleges that he or she was sexually assaulted by another student off school grounds, and that upon returning to school he or she was taunted and harassed by other students who are the alleged perpetrator's friends, the school should take the earlier sexual assault into account in determining whether there is a sexually hostile environment. The school also should take steps to protect a student who was assaulted off campus from further sexual harassment or retaliation from the perpetrator and his or her associates.") (emphasis added); see also the withdrawn 2014 Q&A at 29-30.

free from sex discrimination. Like the 2001 Guidance, the final regulations approach the "education program or activity" condition as extending to circumstances over which recipients have substantial control, and not only to incidents that occur "on campus." We reiterate that nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from offering supportive measures to a complainant who reports sexual harassment that occurred outside the recipient's education program or activity, and any sexual harassment that does occur in an education program or activity must be responded to even if it relates to, or happens subsequent to, sexual harassment that occurred outside the education program or activity.

Although the 2001 Guidance and 2017 Q&A frame actionable sexual harassment as harassment that creates a "hostile environment,"[885] the final regulations utilize the more precise interpretation of Title IX's scope articulated by the Supreme Court in Davis: that a recipient must respond to sexual harassment that is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal

---

[885] 2001 Guidance at 3; 2017 Q&A at 1. Although footnote 3 of the 2017 Q&A states that "[s]chools are responsible for redressing a hostile environment that occurs on campus even if it relates to off-campus activities," this statement was intended to convey that a recipient may not ignore sexual harassment that occurs in its program or activity just because the parties involved may also have experienced an incident of sexual harassment outside its program or activity. See also Doe v. East Haven Bd. of Educ., 200 F. App'x 46, 48 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that plaintiff sufficiently alleged sexual harassment to which the school was deliberately indifferent where the harassment consisted of on-campus, sexualized taunts and name-calling directed at the plaintiff after she had reported being raped by two high-school boys outside the school's program or activity).

access to education.[886] The use of the phrase "hostile environment" in the 2001 Guidance and 2017 Q&A does not mean that those guidance documents ignored the "education program or activity" limitation referenced in the Title IX statute; whether framed as a "hostile environment" (as in Department guidance) or as "effective denial of a person's equal access" to education (as in these final regulations), sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination actionable under Title IX when it occurs in an education program or activity.

[886] See also the "Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble for further discussion of the "effective denial of equal access" element in the final regulations' definition of sexual harassment and the relationship between that element and the concept of hostile environment.

Because the final regulations do not exclude "off campus" sexual harassment from coverage under Title IX and instead take the approach utilized in the 2001 Guidance and applied by the Supreme Court in Davis, under which off campus sexual harassment may be in the scope of a recipient's education program or activity, the Department disagrees that these final regulations conflict with the Department's recent enforcement action with respect to holding Chicago Public Schools accountable for failure to appropriately respond to certain off-campus sexual assaults.

Changes: Section 106.44(a) is revised to state that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs, and also includes any building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution. Section

106.45(b)(1)(iii) is revised to include training for Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolutions on "the scope of the recipient's education program or activity." Section 106.45(b)(3)(i) is revised to expressly provide that a mandatory dismissal of allegations in a formal complaint about conduct not occurring in the recipient's education program or activity is "for purposes of title IX or [34 CFR part 106]; such a dismissal does not preclude action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct." Section 106.45(b)(10)(i)(D) is revised to require recipients to post materials used to train Title IX personnel on the recipient's website, or if the recipient does not have a website, to make such materials available for inspection and review by members of the public.

Online Sexual Harassment

Comments: One commenter cited case law for the proposition that Title IX does not cover online or digital conduct.[887] Other commenters cited cases holding that recipients may be liable under Title IX for failing to adequately address

[887] Commenters cited, e.g.: Yeasin v. Durham, 719 F. App'x 844 (10th Cir. 2018); Gordon v. Traverse City Area Pub. Sch., 686 F. App'x 315, 324 (6th Cir. 2017).

online harassment.[888] A few commenters argued that the NPRM's approach to education program or activity is inconsistent with the Department's past practice and guidance documents, such as guidance issued in 2010 which acknowledged that cell phone and internet communications may constitute actionable harassment. Many [888] Commenters cited: Feminist Majority Found. v. Hurley, 911 F.3d 674 (4th Cir. 2018); S.J.W. v. Lee's Summit R-7 Sch. Dist., 696 F.3d 771, 777 (8th Cir. 2012); Layshock v. Hermitage Sch. Dist., 650 F.3d 205, 220-221 (3d Cir. 2011); Kowalski v. Berkeley Cnty. Sch., 652 F.3d 565, 573 (4th Cir. 2011); Sypniewski v. Warren Hill Reg'l Bd. of Educ., 307 F.3d 243, 257 (3d Cir. 2002).

commenters were concerned the NPRM would exclude online sexual harassment due to the education program or activity condition in § 106.44(a), and cited studies showing the prevalence and effects of online harassment and cyber-bullying on victims.[889] Commenters argued that it was unclear to what extent the NPRM would cover online harassment and suggested that the

[889] Commenters cited, e.g.: American Association of University Women, Crossing the Line: Sexual Harassment at School (2011).

Department more broadly define "program or activity" to include student interactions that are enabled by recipients, such as online harassment between students using internet access provided by the recipient. Commenters argued that the final regulations should explicitly address cyber-bullying and electronic speech. Some commenters suggested that excluding online misconduct may conflict with State law;

for example, commenters stated that New Jersey law includes harassment occurring online.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' concerns about whether Title IX applies to sexual harassment that occurs electronically or online. We emphasize that the education program or activity jurisdictional condition is a fact-specific inquiry applying existing statutory and regulatory definitions of

“program or activity” to the situation; however, for recipients who are postsecondary institutions or elementary and secondary schools as those terms are used in the final regulations, the statutory and regulatory definitions of “program or activity” encompass “all of the operations of” such recipients, and such “operations” may certainly include computer and internet networks, digital platforms, and computer hardware or software owned or operated by, or used in the operations of, the recipient.[890] Furthermore, the final regulations revise § 106.44(a) to specify that an education program or activity includes circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurred, such that the factual

[890] 20 U.S.C. 1687; 34 CFR 106.2(h).

circumstances of online harassment must be analyzed to determine if it occurred in an education program or activity. For example, a student using a personal device to perpetrate online sexual harassment during class time may constitute a circumstance over which the recipient exercises substantial control.

Contrary to the claims made by some commenters, the approach to

"education program or activity" contained in the final regulations, and in particular its potential application to online harassment, would not necessarily conflict with the Department's previous 2010 Dear Colleague Letter addressing bullying and harassment. The Department's 2010 guidance made a passing reference that harassing conduct may include "use of cell phones or the internet," and the

Department's position has not changed in this regard.[891] These final regulations apply to sexual harassment perpetrated through use of cell phones or the internet if sexual harassment occurred in the recipient's education program or activity. As explained in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble,

---

[891] U.S. Dep't. of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Dear Colleague Letter: Harassment and Bullying at 2 (Oct. 26, 2010), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-201010.pdf.

these final regulations adopt and adapt the Gebser/Davis framework of actual knowledge and deliberate indifference, in contrast to the rubric in the 2010 Dear Colleague Letter on bullying and harassment; however, these final regulations appropriately address electronic, digital, or online sexual harassment by not making sexually harassing conduct contingent on the method by which the conduct is perpetrated. Additionally, even if a recipient is not required to address certain misconduct under these final regulations, these final regulations expressly allow a recipient to address such misconduct under its own code of conduct.[892] Accordingly, there may not be any conflict between these final regulations with respect to State laws that explicitly cover online harassment.

---

[892] E.g., § 106.45(b)(3)(i).

Changes: None.

Consistency with Title IX Statutory Text

Comments: Some commenters opposed the NPRM's approach to "education program or activity" by arguing that it conflicts with Title IX's statutory text. Commenters contended that the NPRM is an unambiguously incorrect interpretation of Title IX under the deference doctrine articulated by the Supreme Court in Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc.,[893] and will thus be given no judicial deference. One such commenter asserted that the Title IX statute has three distinctive protective categories, such that no person on the basis of sex can be: (1) excluded from participation in; (2) denied the benefits of; or (3) subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity. The commenter argued that the first clause includes off-campus conduct, such as male students on a public street blocking female students from accessing campus. This commenter argued that the third clause prohibits discrimination "under," and not "in" or "within," a recipient's education program or activity and is violated whenever women or girls are subjected to more adverse conditions than males. This commenter asserted that the Title IX statutory text does not depend on where the underlying conduct occurs, but rather focuses on the subsequent hostile educational environment that such misconduct can cause.

[893] 467 U.S. 837 (1984).

Another commenter argued that requiring recipients to treat off-campus sexual misconduct differently from on-campus sexual misconduct can itself violate Title IX.

Discussion: The Department acknowledges the analysis offered by at least one commenter that the Title IX statute, by its own text, has three distinct protective categories and the commenter's argument that the "subjected to discrimination" prong is violated whenever females are subjected to more adverse conditions than males.

As explained below, the Department elects to adopt the analysis applied by the Supreme Court rather than the analysis provided by the commenter.

In Davis, the Supreme Court acknowledged that Title IX protects students from "discrimination" and from being "excluded from participation in" or "denied the benefits of" any education program or activity receiving

Federal financial assistance.[894] The Davis Court characterized sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination under Title IX,[895] and reasoned that whether a recipient is liable for sexual harassment thus turns on whether the recipient can be said to have "subjected" students to sex discrimination in the form of sexual

---

[894] Davis, 526 U.S. at 650.

[895] Id. ("Having previously determined that 'sexual harassment' is 'discrimination' in the school context under Title IX, we are constrained to conclude that student-on-student sexual harassment, if sufficiently severe, can likewise rise to the level of discrimination actionable under the statute.").

harassment.[896] The Davis Court further reasoned, "Moreover, because the harassment must occur 'under' 'the operations of' a funding recipient, see 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a); § 1687 (defining 'program or activity'), the harassment must take place in a context subject to the school district's control. . . . These factors combine to limit a recipient's

[896] Id. ("The statute's plain language confirms the scope of prohibited conduct based on the recipient's degree of control over the harasser and the environment in which the harassment occurs. If a funding recipient does not engage in harassment directly, it may not be liable for damages unless its deliberate indifference 'subjects' its students to harassment. That is, the deliberate indifference must, at a minimum, 'cause [students] to undergo' harassment or 'make them liable or vulnerable' to it.") (internal citations to dictionary references omitted).

damages liability to circumstances wherein the recipient exercises substantial control over both the harasser and the context in which the known harassment occurs."[897]

Adopting the Supreme Court's analysis of the appropriate application of the Title IX statute's "program or activity" language in the context of sexual harassment, the final regulations

---

[897] Id. at 644-45.

treat sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination under Title IX and hold recipients accountable for responding to sexual harassment that took place in a context under the recipient's control. In interpreting "education program or activity" in the final regulations, the Department will look to the definitions of "program or activity" provided by Title

IX[898] and existing Title IX regulations,[899] and has revised § 106.44(a) of the final regulations to clarify that "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the harassment occurs, as well as on-campus and off-campus

---

[898] 20 U.S.C. 1687 (defining "program or activity").
[899] 34 CFR 106.2(h) (defining "program or activity"); 34 CFR 106.2(i) (defining "recipient"); 34 CFR 106.31(a) (referring to "any academic, extracurricular, research, occupational training, or other education program or activity operated by a recipient which receives Federal financial assistance").

buildings owned or controlled by student organizations officially recognized by postsecondary institutions. The Department notes that the commenter's hypothetical, concerning male students on a public street blocking female students from accessing campus, would require a fact-specific analysis but could constitute sexual harassment in the recipient's education program or activity if such an incident occurred in a location, event, or circumstance over which the recipient exercised substantial control.

Contrary to the claims made by some commenters, and as discussed above, the final regulations would not necessarily require recipients to treat off-campus misconduct differently from on-campus misconduct. Title IX does not create, nor did Congress intend for it to create, open-ended liability for recipients in addressing sexual harassment. Rather, the statute imposed an important jurisdictional limitation through its reference to education programs or activities. Recipients are responsible under Title IX for addressing sex discrimination, including sexual harassment, in their "education program or activity," but a recipient's education program or activity may extend to locations, events, and circumstances "off campus."

Changes: We have revised § 106.44(a) to state that for purposes of §§ 106.30, 106.44, and 106.45, "education program or activity" includes locations, events, or circumstances over which the respondent had substantial control over both the respondent and the context in which the sexual harassment occurred, and also includes buildings owned or controlled by student organizations that are officially recognized by a postsecondary institution.

Constitutional Equal Protection

Comments: One commenter contended that the NPRM's approach to "education program or activity" may violate the Fourteenth Amendment because experiencing off-campus or online sexual victimization detrimentally affects student-survivors' education, and the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees these students equal protection, yet, the commenter argued, the NPRM would leave these students outside Title IX's reach and deprived of equal protection.

Discussion: We disagree with the contention that the application in the final regulations of "education program or activity" as a jurisdictional condition may violate the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The

Department reiterates that the "education program or activity" limitation in the final regulations does not create or apply a geographic test, does not draw a line between "off campus" and "on campus," and does not create a distinction between sexual harassment occurring in person versus online. Moreover, under these final regulations, any individual alleged to be a victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment is a "complainant"[900] to whom the recipient must respond in a prompt, non-deliberately indifferent manner; in that manner, all students are treated equally without distinction under the final regulations based on, for example, where a student resides or spends time. The distinction of which some commenters are critical, then, is not a distinction drawn among groups or

[900] Section 106.30 (defining a "complainant" as any individual who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment).

types of students, but rather is a distinction drawn (for reasons explained previously) between incidents that are, or are not, under the control of the recipient. The Department further notes that even if commenters correctly characterize the distinction as being made between some students (who suffer harassment in an education program or activity) and other students (who suffer harassment outside an education program or activity), the applicable level of scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause to any differential treatment under such circumstances would be the rational basis test.[901] A heightened level of scrutiny would apply where a suspect or quasi-suspect classification is involved, such as race or sex.[902] But, as here,

---

[901] See F.C.C. v. Beach Commc'ns, Inc., 508 U.S. 307, 313 (1993).
[902] See Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200, 227 (1995) (applying strict scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause to assess classifications based on race); Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 197 (1976) (applying intermediate scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause to assess classifications based on sex).

where no such suspect or quasi-suspect classification is involved, the final regulations may treat students differently due to the circumstances in which the misconduct occurred, and the rational basis test applies. Under the rational basis test, a law or governmental action is valid under the Equal Protection Clause so long as it is rationally related to a legitimate government interest.[903] With Title IX, Congress made a rational determination that recipients should be held liable for misconduct over which they had some level of control. The statute's reference to "education program or activity" reflects this important limitation. To expose recipients to liability for misconduct wholly unrelated to [903] See Beach Commc'ns, Inc., 508 U.S. at 313 (holding that in areas of social and economic policy, statutory classification that neither proceeds along suspect lines nor infringes fundamental constitutional rights must be upheld against equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide rational basis for classification).

---

circumstances over which they have control would contravene congressional intent and lead to potentially unlimited exposure to loss of Federal funds. The Department believes that the use of "education program or activity" in § 106.44(a) appropriately reflects both statutory text and congressional intent, and furthers the legitimate government interest of ensuring liability is not open- ended and has reasonable jurisdictional limitations.

Changes: None.

Institutional Autonomy and Litigation Risk

Comments: A number of commenters stated that the Department's approach to "education program or activity" would undermine recipient autonomy and expose recipients to litigation risk. Commenters argued that recipients should have the right to determine the standards of behavior to which their students must adhere, both on campus and off campus, and that the NPRM would infringe on institutional academic prerogatives and independence. Commenters expressed concern that the NPRM would make recipients vulnerable to litigation from students seeking damages for off-campus assaults, including because recipients could be accused of arbitrarily deciding which cases to investigate and which cases to declare outside their jurisdiction.

Discussion: We acknowledge the importance of recipient discretion and flexibility to determine the recipient's own standards of conduct. However, Congress created a clear mandate in Title IX and vested the Department with the authority to administratively enforce Title IX to effectuate the statute's twin purposes: to "avoid the use of Federal resources to support discriminatory practices" and to "provide individual citizens effective protection against those practices."[904] Importantly, nothing in the final regulations prohibits recipients from using their own disciplinary processes to address misconduct occurring outside their education program or activity.[905] Indeed, this flexibility for recipients to address sexual misconduct that falls outside the scope of Title IX, including sexual misconduct that is outside the recipient's education program or activity, permits recipients to reduce the litigation risk perceived by some commenters. As discussed above, and [905] In response to many commenters' concerns that § 106.45(b)(3) was understood to prevent recipients from addressing misconduct that occurred outside an education program or activity, the Department has revised § 106.45(b)(3)(i) in the final regulations to expressly state that mandatory dismissal due to the alleged conduct occurring outside an education program or activity is only a dismissal for purposes of Title IX and does not preclude the recipient from addressing the conduct through other codes of conduct.

[904] Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979).

contrary to the claims made by many commenters, the final regulations do not distinguish between on-campus misconduct and off-campus misconduct. Off-campus sexual harassment is not categorically excluded from Title IX coverage. Recipients' decisions to investigate formal complaints regarding allegations of sexual harassment cannot be arbitrary under the final regulations;

rather, a recipient must investigate a formal complaint where the alleged sexual harassment (meeting the definition in § 106.30) occurred in the recipient's education program or activity, against a person in the United States.

Changes: None.

Requests for Clarification

Comments: Commenters raised questions regarding the Department's approach to the "education program or activity" condition. Commenters requested clarity as to events that begin off campus but have effects on campus, such as interaction among students, faculty, and staff outside formal professional or academic activities. These commenters were concerned that, in such circumstances, it may be challenging for an institution to clearly and consistently identify what conduct has occurred strictly within its education program and which conduct is beyond its educational program. One commenter sought clarification as to what, if any, are the Department's expectations for a recipient's conduct processes that address off-campus sexual misconduct. This commenter asserted that Title IX prohibits discrimination "under" an education program or activity, but that § 106.44(a)

and proposed § 106.44(b)(4) referred to sexual harassment "in" an education program or activity, while proposed § 106.45(b)(3) referred to sexual harassment "within" a program or activity. The commenter inquired as to whether "in" differs from "within" in those proposed sections, and whether those terms mean something different than "under" used in the Title IX statute, and if so what are the differences in meaning. The commenter asserted that Title IX prohibits "discrimination" under an education program or activity and that § 106.44(a) and proposed § 106.44(b)(2) refer to "sexual harassment" in an education program or activity, and asked if recipients would be required to respond where sexual harassment occurred outside an education program or activity but resulted in discrimination under the education program or activity. This commenter stated that under Title IX an individual may not be "excluded" from a federally-assisted program or activity on the basis of sex, and asked whether recipients must address sexual harassment that did not occur "in" its education program or activity but nevertheless effectively excluded the victim from equal access to it.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the questions raised by commenters regarding the application of "education program or activity" in § 106.44(a) of the final regulations. The final regulations do not impose requirements on a recipient's code of conduct processes addressing misconduct occurring outside the recipient's education program or activity, and do not govern the recipient's decisions to address or not address such misconduct. The Department's regulatory authority is limited to the scope of Title IX: ensuring that recipients of Federal funding operate education programs or activities free from sex discrimination. For the final regulations to apply, sexual harassment (a form of sex discrimination) must occur in the recipient's education program or activity. As explained previously,

nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from offering supportive measures to a complainant who reports sexual harassment that occurred outside the recipient's education program or activity, and any sexual harassment or sex discrimination that does occur in an education program or activity must be responded to even if it relates to, or happens subsequent to, sexual harassment that occurred outside the education program or activity.

Whether sexual harassment occurs in a recipient's education program or activity is a fact-specific inquiry. The key questions are whether the recipient exercised substantial control over the respondent and the context in which the incident occurred. There is no bright-line geographic test, and off-campus sexual misconduct is not categorically

excluded from Title IX protection under the final regulations.[906] Recognizing that recipients need to carefully consider this matter, the Department revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to require training for Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolution processes

[906] See the "Clery Act" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble for discussion regarding the distinctive purposes of Clery Act geography versus Title IX coverage of education programs or activities; see also revised § 106.44(a) including in an "education program or activity" any building owned or controlled by a student organization that is officially recognized by a postsecondary institution.

on “the scope of the recipient’s education program or activity.”

In response to a commenter’s question regarding the NPRM’s use of the terms “in,” “within,” and “under” an education program or activity, and whether those terms are intended to have different meanings, the Department has replaced “within” with “in” throughout the final regulations, thus making all provisions consistent with the reference to "in" contained in § 106.44(a). We also wish to clarify that the final regulations' use of the term "in" is meant to be interchangeable with the Title IX statute's use of "under"; the Department gives the same meaning to these prepositions, and notes that the Supreme Court in Davis referenced harassment "under" the operations of (i.e., the program or activity of) a recipient and harassment that occurred

"in" a context subject to the recipient's control seemingly interchangeably.[907]

Changes: The final regulations consistently use "in" an education program or activity rather than "within."

[907] Davis, 526 U.S. at 645 ("Moreover, because the harassment must occur under the operations of' a funding recipient . . . the harassment must take place in a context subject to the school district's control") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted; emphasis added).

Section 106.44(a) "against a person in the U.S."

Impact on Study Abroad Participants

Comments: Several commenters asserted that the NPRM would endanger students studying abroad, because the final regulations apply only to sexual harassment that occurs against a person in the United States. Commenters argued that when recipients offer students study abroad opportunities, recipients should still have responsibility to ensure student safety and well-being. Commenters acknowledged that Congress may not have contemplated studying abroad or recipients having satellite campuses across the globe when drafting Title IX in the 1970s. However, commenters argued that international experiences are increasingly common and critical components of education today, particularly in higher education, and that some schools require students in certain academic programs to study abroad. Commenters noted that even the Federal government, on the U.S. State Department website, encourages students to have international exposure to compete in a globalized society. Commenters argued that it would be absurd for the Federal government to encourage international exposure for students and not protect them in the process because studying abroad is necessary for some majors and to prepare for certain careers. Commenters cited studies suggesting study abroad increases the risk for sexual misconduct against female students and showing how students had to alter their career paths in the aftermath of sexual misconduct experienced abroad.[908] One commenter stated that harassment abroad, such as by institution-employed chaperones, can derail victims' ability to complete their education at their home institution in the United States. This commenter stated that for the Department to interpret Title IX as providing no recourse for such students is impossible to imagine. Commenters

---

[908] Commenters cited, e.g.: Matthew Kimble, et al., Study Abroad Increases Risk for Sexual Assault in Female Undergraduates: A Preliminary Report, 5 PSYCHOL. TRAUMA: THEORY, RESEARCH, PRACTICE, & POL'Y 5 (2013).

asserted that the NPRM tells bad actors they can get away with sexual misconduct in foreign programs. Commenters asserted that study abroad students are already uniquely vulnerable and less likely to report to foreign local authorities because, for example, they may be unfamiliar with the foreign legal system, they share housing with the perpetrators, and there may be language barriers, fear of retaliation or social isolation, and fewer available support services. Commenters further argued that because crime occurring overseas cannot be prosecuted in the U.S, filing a Title IX report with the recipient might be the survivor's only option. Commenters contended that the NPRM may have the effect of discouraging students from studying abroad and learning about foreign cultures and languages which would run contrary to the fundamental purpose of education to foster curiosity and discovery.

Discussion: We acknowledge the concerns raised by many commenters that the final regulations would not extend Title IX protections to incidents of sexual misconduct occurring against persons outside the United States, and the impact that this jurisdictional limitation might have on the safety of students participating in study abroad programs. However, by its plain text, the Title IX statute does not have extraterritorial application. Indeed, Title IX states that "[n]o person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance[.]"[909] The [909] 20 U.S.C. 1681(a) (emphasis added).

Department believes a plain meaning interpretation of a statute is most consistent with fundamental rule of law principles, ensures predictability, and gives effect to the intent of Congress. Courts have recognized a canon of statutory construction that "Congress ordinarily intends its statutes to have domestic, not extraterritorial, application."[910] This canon rests on

---

[910] Small v. United States, 544 U.S. 385, 388-89 (2005).

presumptions that Congress is mainly concerned with domestic conditions and seeks to avoid unintended conflicts between our laws and the laws of other nations.[911] If Congress intended Title IX to have extraterritorial application, then it could have made that intention explicit in the text when it was passed in 1972, and Congress could amend Title IX to apply to a recipient's education

---

[911] Smith v. United States, 507 U.S. 197, 204 (1993).

programs or activities located outside the United States if Congress so chooses. The Federal government's encouragement of international experiences, such as study abroad, is not determinative of Title IX's intended scope. The U.S. Supreme Court most recently acknowledged the presumption against extraterritoriality in Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum[912] and Morrison

[912] 133 S. Ct. 1659 (2013).

v. National Australian Bank.[913] In Morrison, the Court reiterated the "longstanding principle of American law that legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States."[914] The Court concluded that "[w]hen a statute gives no clear indication of

---

[913] 561 U.S. 247 (2010).
[914] Id. at 255.

extraterritorial application, it has none."[915]

Very few Federal cases have addressed whether Title IX applies extraterritorially to allegations of sex discrimination occurring abroad, and Federal district courts have reached different results in these cases.[916] To date, no Federal circuit has addressed this issue. Commenters noted that the court in King v. Board of Control of Eastern Michigan University[917] applied Title IX to a claim of sexual harassment occurring overseas during a study abroad program; the Federal district court reasoned that study abroad programs are educational operations of the recipient that "are explicitly covered by Title IX and which necessarily require students to leave U.S. territory in order to pursue their education." The court emphasized that Title IX's scope extends to "any education program or activity" of a recipient, which presumably would include the recipient's study abroad programs. While the Department agrees that a recipient's study abroad programs may constitute education programs or activities of the recipient, the Department agrees with the rationale applied by a Federal district court in

---

[915] Id.

[916] See Robert J. Aalberts et al., Studying is Dangerous? Possible Federal Remedies for Study Abroad Liability, 41 JOURNAL OF COLL. & UNIV. L. 189, 210-13 (2015).

[917] 221 F. Supp. 2d 783 (E.D. Mich. 2002).

Phillips v. St. George's University[918] that regardless of whether a study abroad program is part of a recipient's education program or activity, Title IX does not have extraterritorial application. The court in Phillips noted that nothing in the Title IX statute's plain language indicates that Congress intended it to apply outside the U.S. and that the plain meaning of "person in the

---

[918] No. 07-CV-1555, 2007 WL 3407728 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 15, 2007).

United States" suggests that Title IX only applies to persons located in the United States, even when that person is participating in a recipient's education program or activity outside the United States.

Both Phillips and King were decided before the Supreme Court's Morrison and Kiobel opinions, and the Department doubts that the rationale applied by the court in King would survive analysis under those Supreme Court decisions, which emphasized the importance of the presumption against extraterritoriality of statutes passed by Congress. We find the Phillips Court's reasoning to be well-founded, especially in light of the later-decided Supreme Court cases regarding extraterritoriality, and we believe the jurisdictional limitation on extraterritoriality contained in the final regulations is wholly consistent with the text of the Title IX statute and with the presumption against extraterritoriality recognized numerous times by the Supreme Court. We further note that the Supreme Court acknowledges that where Congress intends for its statutes to apply outside the United States, Congress knows how to codify that intent.[919] When Congress has codified such intent in other Federal [919] E.g., Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n v. Arabian Am. Oil Co. (Aramco), 499 U.S. 244, 258 (1991) ("Congress's awareness of the need to make a clear statement that a statute applies overseas is amply demonstrated by the numerous occasions on which it has expressly legislated the extraterritorial application of a statute.").

---

civil rights laws, Congress has addressed issues that arise with extraterritorial application such as potential conflicts with foreign laws and procedures.[920] Based on the presumption against extraterritoriality reinforced by Supreme Court decisions and the plain language in the Title IX statute limiting protections to persons "in the United States," the Department

---

[920] E.g., Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-459, § 802, 98 Stat. 1767, 1792 (codified at 29 U.S.C. 623, 630 (amending the Age Discrimination Employment Act of 1967 to apply outside the United States)); 29 U.S.C. 623(f) (addressing potential conflicts of laws issues).

believes that the Department does not have authority to declare that the presumption against extraterritoriality has been overcome, absent further congressional or Supreme Court direction on this issue.

As a practical matter, we also note that schools may face difficulties interviewing witnesses and gathering evidence in foreign locations where sexual misconduct may have occurred.

Recipients may not be in the best position to effectively investigate alleged sexual misconduct in other countries. Such practical considerations weigh in favor of the Department looking to Congress to expressly state whether Congress intends for Title IX to apply in foreign locations.

We emphasize that nothing in these final regulations prevents recipients from initiating a student conduct proceeding or offering supportive measures to address sexual misconduct against a person outside the United States. We have revised § 106.45(b)(3) to explicitly state that even if a recipient must dismiss a formal complaint for Title IX purposes because the alleged sexual harassment did not occur against a person in the U.S., such a dismissal is only for purposes of Title IX, and nothing precludes the recipient from addressing the alleged misconduct through the recipient's own code of conduct. Contrary to claims made by some commenters, it is not true that the final regulations leave students studying abroad with no recourse in the event of sexual harassment or sexual assault. Recipients remain free to adopt disciplinary systems to address sexual misconduct committed outside the United States, to protect their students from such harm, and to offer supportive measures such as mental health counseling or academic adjustments for students impacted by misconduct committed abroad. As such, we believe the final regulations will not discourage students from participating in study abroad programs that may enrich their educational experience.

Changes: None.

Consistency with Federal Law and Departmental Practice

Comments: Some commenters asserted that excluding extraterritorial application of Title IX would conflict with other Federal laws and past practice of the Department. One commenter stated that the NPRM is inconsistent with the Department's own interpretation of the VAWA amendments to the Clery Act, and argued that carving out conduct occurring abroad conflicts with Clery Act language regarding geographical jurisdiction. This commenter argued that if a postsecondary institution has a separate campus abroad or owns or controls a building or property abroad that is used for educational purposes and used by students, the postsecondary institution must disclose the Clery Act crimes that occur there. The commenter suggested it would be illogical to require recipients to make such disclosures and yet not address the same underlying misconduct and that this puts recipients in a precarious position. Other commenters argued that the Department should interpret Title IX as protecting persons enrolled in education programs or activities the recipient conducts or sponsors abroad, as this interpretation would be consistent with application of other

Federal civil rights laws, such as Title VI, and that the proposed rules' approach conflicts with the Department's past approach of requiring recipients to address sexual misconduct that could limit participation in education programs or activities overseas.

Discussion: We disagree with the commenters who contended that excluding application of Title IX to sexual misconduct committed outside the United States raises untenable conflict with the past practice of the Department and other Federal laws. With respect to past practice of the Department, OCR has never explicitly addressed in any of its guidance whether Title IX has extraterritorial application. For example, though the withdrawn 2014 Q&A stated that "[u]nder Title IX, a school must process all complaints of sexual violence, regardless of where the conduct occurred, to determine whether the conduct occurred in the context of an education program or activity,"[921] it included an illustrative list of covered "[o]ff-campus education programs and activities" such as activities occurring at fraternity or sorority houses and school-sponsored field trips; none of these examples involved an education program or activity outside the United States.[922] However, to the extent that application of the "person in the United States" language in the final regulations departs from past Department guidance or practice, the Department believes that the jurisdictional limitation on extraterritoriality contained in the final regulations is reasonable and wholly consistent with the plain text of the Title

---

[921] See 2014 Q&A at 29.

---

[922] Id.

IX statute and with the presumption against extraterritoriality recognized numerous times by the U.S. Supreme Court.

With respect to other Federal law, we acknowledge that certain misconduct committed overseas is reportable under the Clery Act where, for example, the misconduct occurs in a foreign location that a U.S. institution owns and controls. However, the two laws (Title IX and the Clery Act) do not have the same scope or purpose,[923] even though the two laws often intersect for postsecondary institution recipients who are also subject to the Clery Act. The Department does not perceive a conflict between a recipient's obligation to comply with reporting obligations under the Clery Act and response obligations under Title IX. As discussed above, both the text of the Title IX statute and case law on the topic of extraterritoriality make it clear that Title IX does not apply to sex discrimination against a person outside the United States.

[923] See "Background" subsection in "Clery Act" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble.

With respect to Title VI, this statute, like Title IX, expressly limits its application to domestic discrimination with its opening words "No person in the United States . . ." and commenters provided no example of a Federal court or Department application of Title VI to conduct occurring outside the United States. Nonetheless, the final regulations are focused on administrative enforcement of Title IX, and for reasons discussed previously, the Department does not believe that the statutory text or judicial interpretations of Title IX overcome the presumption against extraterritoriality that applies to statutes passed by Congress.

Changes: None.

Constitutional Equal Protection

Comments: One commenter asserted that excluding extraterritorial application of Title IX may raise Constitutional issues under the Fourteenth Amendment Equal Protection Clause. This commenter argued that experiencing sexual victimization in study abroad programs detrimentally affects the student-survivor's education, and the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees these students equal protection, yet the NPRM would leave these students outside the scope of Title IX protection and deprive them of equal protection.

Discussion: We disagree with the contention that excluding extraterritorial application of Title IX may violate the Fourteenth Amendment Equal Protection Clause. As an initial matter, the applicable level of scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause to any differential treatment of students under the § 106.44(a) "against a person in the United States" limitation would be the rational basis test. A heightened level of scrutiny would apply where a suspect or quasi-suspect classification is involved, such as race or sex. But, as here, where no such suspect or quasi-suspect classification is involved and the final regulations may treat students differently due to the geographic location of misconduct occurring outside the United States, the rational basis test applies. Under the rational basis test, a law or governmental action is valid under the Equal Protection Clause so long as it is rationally related to a legitimate government interest.[924]

[924] F.C.C. v. Beach Commc'ns, Inc., 508 U.S. 307, 313 (1993) (holding that in areas of social and economic policy, statutory classification that neither proceeds along suspect lines nor infringes fundamental constitutional rights must be upheld against equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide rational basis for classification).

With respect to Title IX, Congress made a rational determination that recipients should only be held liable for misconduct that occurs within the United States. The statute's explicit reference to "[n]o person in the United States" in 20 U.S.C. 1681(a) reflects this jurisdictional limitation. To hold recipient responsible for misconduct that took place outside the country could be unrealistically demanding and lead to open-ended liability, and if Congress intended that result, then Congress could have expressly stated its intent for Title IX to apply overseas when enacting Title IX, and can amend Title IX to so state. The Department believes that the reference to "against a person in the United States," in § 106.44(a), appropriately reflects both the plain meaning of the statutory text and congressional intent that Title IX is focused on eradicating sex discrimination in domestic education programs or activities. The Department reiterates that recipients remain free under the final regulations to use their own disciplinary codes to address sexual harassment committed abroad and to extend supportive measures to students affected by sexual misconduct outside the United States.

Changes: None.

Impact on International or Foreign Exchange Students in the U.S.

Comments: A few commenters asserted the proposed rules' limitation with respect to persons "in the United States" may be detrimental to survivors who are international students whose visa status depends on academic performance. One commenter expressed concern that § 106.44(a) would exclude foreign exchange students in the U.S.

from Title IX coverage, arguing that the Department should not treat foreign exchange students as undeserving of the same protection as students born in the United States.

Discussion: The jurisdictional limitation that sexual harassment occurred against "a person in the United States" is not a limitation that protects only U.S. citizens; international students or foreign students studying in the United States are entitled to the same protections under Title IX as any other individuals. Title IX states that "[n]o person in the United States" shall be subject to discrimination based on sex. It is well-settled that the word "person" in this context includes citizens and non-citizens alike. Title IX protects every individual in the U.S. against discrimination on the basis of sex in education programs or activities receiving Federal financial assistance, regardless of citizenship or legal residency.

Changes: None.

Section 106.44(a) Deliberate Indifference Standard

Comments: Many commenters were supportive of the deliberate indifference standard and several argued that it is a sufficient standard to hold institutions accountable for failing to address allegations of sexual misconduct in an appropriate manner. Many commenters favored the deliberate indifference standard because it affords institutions greater discretion to handle Title IX cases in a manner that is most consistent with the institution's educational mission and level of resources.

In contrast, other commenters advocated for the Department to return to the "reasonableness" standard because it affords recipients less discretion in their handling of Title IX complaints. These commenters argued that the reasonableness standard strikes the necessary balance between forcing schools to make certain policy changes, such as adopting due process protections in their grievance procedures, and granting deference. Other commenters argued that because the deliberate indifference standard is couched in terms of a safe harbor and coupled with "highly prescriptive mechanism[s]" under § 106.44 and § 106.45 it actually provides recipients with very little to no discretion in practice.

Many commenters expressed the general concern that lowering the "reasonableness" standard to the "deliberate indifference" standard allows schools to investigate fewer allegations, punish fewer bad actors, and would shield schools from administrative accountability even in cases where schools mishandle complaints, fail to provide effective support, and wrongly determine against the weight of the evidence that the accused was not responsible for the misconduct. One commenter compared the deliberate indifference standard in the proposed rules to the application of the deliberate indifference standard in the prison context under the Eighth Amendment,[925] arguing that if finalized the deliberate indifference standard would apply more stringently in the Title IX context and provide greater institutional protection to schools because it would be difficult to imagine any scenario where an institution could be found deliberately indifferent.

[925] Commenter cited: Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825 (1994).

Some commenters argued that the deliberate indifference standard is only appropriate in actions for private remedies rather than public remedies, and asserted that the 2001 Guidance acknowledged this difference. Some commenters contended that the deliberate indifference standard is wholly inappropriate in the context of administrative enforcement, arguing that because the Department only demands equitable remedies of schools, in the form of policy changes, schools do not require the additional protection afforded by the deliberate indifference standard that applies in private lawsuits for money damages against schools. Other commenters noted that the deliberate indifference standard has not been adopted in the context of any of the other civil rights statutes OCR is charged with enforcing.

Various commenters indicated that more clarity is needed with respect to what the deliberate indifference standard requires of recipients in the absence of a formal complaint of sexual harassment. Some commenters requested that the Department include a definition for deliberate indifference. Many commenters critiqued the language used to convey the standard, expressing the concern that a school's response could be indifferent or unreasonable and not be in violation of Title IX so long as they were not deliberately indifferent or clearly unreasonable. Some commenters expressed the concern that the word "deliberate" implies an intentionality element, asserting that intent is difficult to prove. Other commenters believed the standard was too vaguely worded, provided too much deference to the institutions, and would always be interpreted in favor of the schools. Some commenters argued that the deliberate indifference standard would effectively deny the complainant any meaningful process because an institution could dismiss a complaint after determining that the alleged conduct does not fall within its interpretation of the sexual harassment definition.

Some suggested the Department revise the proposed rules to impose a different standard on schools in circumstances where the schools are responding to allegations against someone in a position of authority, pointing to the misconduct of Larry Nassar at Michigan State University.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the commenters' support of the deliberate indifference standard and agrees that the deliberate indifference standard affords recipients an appropriate amount of discretion to address sexual misconduct in our Nation's schools while holding recipients accountable if their response is clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. The Department,

however, also recognizes that too much discretion can result in unintended confusion and uncertainty for both complainants who deserve a meaningful response and careful consideration of their reports, and for respondents who should be punished only after they are determined to be responsible through a fair process. Since the implementing regulations were first issued in 1975, the Department has observed, and many stakeholders, including complainants and respondents, have informed the Department through public comment, that complainants and respondents have experienced various pitfalls and implementation problems from a lack of clarity with respect to recipients' obligations under Title IX. As stated in the proposed regulations, the lack of clear regulatory standards has contributed to processes that have not been fair to the parties involved, have lacked appropriate procedural protections, and have undermined confidence in the reliability of the outcomes of investigations of sexual harassment complaints. For the reasons stated in the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department will maintain the deliberate indifference standard in the final regulations, with revisions to § 106.44(a) that specify certain actions a recipient must take in order to not be deliberately indifferent.

In response to commenters' concerns that the deliberate indifference standard leaves recipients too much leeway to decide on an appropriate response, the Department revises § 106.44(a) to include specific actions that a recipient must take as part of its non- deliberately indifferent response.

Section 106.44(a) requires that a recipient's response treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering supportive measures as defined in § 106.30 to a complainant, and by following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, against a respondent.[926] As commenters have stated, many complainants would like supportive measures and do not necessarily wish to pursue a formal complaint and grievance process, although they should be informed of the process for filing a formal complaint. The Department wishes to respect the autonomy and wishes of a complainant

[926] For discussion of what is intended by refraining from imposing disciplinary sanctions and other actions that are "not supportive measures" against a respondent, see the "Supportive Measures" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble. We use the same language to describe refraining from punishing a respondent with following the § 106.45 grievance process, in § 106.45(b)(1)(i).

throughout these final regulations, and recipients should also respect a complainant's wishes to the degree possible. Respondents also should not be punished for allegations of sexual harassment until after a grievance process that complies with § 106.45, as such a grievance process provides notice of the allegations to both complainants and respondents as well as a meaningful opportunity for both complainants and respondents to be heard. Additionally, the Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. A recipient should engage in a meaningful dialogue with the complainant to determine which supportive measures may restore or preserve equal access to the recipient's education program or activity without unreasonably burdening the other party, including measures designed to protect the safety of all parties or the recipient's educational environment, or deter

sexual harassment. A recipient must offer each complainant supportive measures, and a recipient will have sufficiently fulfilled its obligation to offer supportive measures as long as the offer is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, and so long as the Title IX Coordinator has contacted the complainant to engage in the interactive process also described in revised § 106.44(a). The Department acknowledges that there may be specific instances in which it is impossible or impractical to provide supportive measures. For example, the recipient may have received an anonymous report or a report from a third party and cannot reasonably determine the identity of the complainant to promptly contact the complainant. Similarly, if a complainant refuses the supportive measures that a recipient offers (and the supportive measures offered are not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances) and instead insists that the recipient take punitive action against the respondent without a formal complaint and grievance process under § 106.45, the Department will not deem the recipient's response to be clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. If a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document the reasons why such a response is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, pursuant to revised § 106.45(b)(10)(ii). Offering supportive measures to every complainant and documenting why not providing supportive measures is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances are some of the actions required under these final regulations but not expressly required under case law describing the deliberate indifference standard. These actions are required as part of the Department's administrative enforcement of the deliberate indifference standard.

Although we acknowledge the concerns of commenters urging the Department to abandon the deliberate indifference standard and return to the reasonableness standard, the Department disagrees for various reasons. As more fully explained in the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual Harassment" section, the Department departs from its prior guidance that set forth a standard more like reasonableness, or even strict liability, instead of deliberate indifference. The Department's past guidance and enforcement practices have taken the position that a recipient's response to sexual harassment should be judged under a standard that expected the recipient's response to effectively stop harassment and prevent its recurrence.[927] This approach did not provide recipients adequate flexibility to make decisions affecting their students. For example, the Department's guidance

[927] 2001 Guidance at iv, vi.

required recipients to always investigate any report of sexual harassment, even when the complainant only wanted supportive measures and did not want an investigation.[928] Such a rigid requirement to investigate every report of sexual harassment in every circumstance intrudes into complainants' privacy without concern for complainants' autonomy and wishes

---

[928] 2001 Guidance at 13, 15, 18; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4.

and, thus, may chill reporting of sexual harassment. Additionally, the Department's past guidance did not distinguish between an investigation that leads to the imposition of discipline and an inquiry to learn more about a report of sexual harassment.[929] Deliberate indifference provides appropriate flexibility for recipients while holding recipients accountable for meaningful responses to sexual harassment that prioritize complainants' wishes.[930]

---

[929] 2001 Guidance at 13, 15, 18; 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 4.

The Department disagrees that these final regulations are highly or overly prescriptive such that recipients have no discretion. Recipients retain discretion to determine which supportive measures to offer and must document why providing supportive measures is not

---

[930] The final regulations specify that a recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response must include investigating and adjudicating sexual harassment allegations, when a formal complaint is filed by a complainant or signed by the recipient's Title IX Coordinator. § 106.44(b)(1); § 106.30 (defining "formal complaint"); § 106.45(b)(3)(i).

clearly unreasonably in light of the known circumstances, if the recipient does not provide any supportive measures. The Department will not second guess the supportive measures that a recipient offers as long as these supportive measures are not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. Similarly, the Department believes that the grievance process prescribed by § 106.45 creates a standardized framework for resolving formal complaints of sexual harassment under Title IX while leaving recipients discretion to adopt rules and practices not required under § 106.45.[931] The Department notes that these final regulations do not include the safe harbor provisions proposed in the

[931] The revised introductory sentence in § 106.45(b) provides that any provisions, rules, or practices other than those required by this section that a recipient adopts as part of its grievance process for handling formal complaints of sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, must apply equally to both parties. The final regulations grant flexibility to recipients in other respects; see the discussion in the "Other Language/Terminology Comments" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble (noting that recipients may decide whether to calculate time frames using calendar days, school days, or other method); § 106.45(b)(6)(i) (allowing, but not requiring, live hearings to be held virtually through use of technology); § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) (removing the requirement that evidence gathered in the investigation be provided to the parties using a file-sharing platform); §§ 106.45(b)(1)(vii), 106.45(b)(7)(i) (giving recipients a choice between using the preponderance of the evidence standard or the clear and convincing evidence standard).

NPRM, and the Department explains its decision for not including these safe harbors in the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" section of this preamble.

Contrary to some commenters' concerns, the deliberate indifference standard does not relieve recipients of their obligation to respond to every known allegation of sexual harassment. The deliberate indifference standard would also not allow recipients to investigate fewer allegations of sexual harassment or punish fewer respondents after a finding of responsibility. Rather, under these final regulations, recipients are specifically required to investigate allegations in a formal complaint (and must explain to each complainant the option of filing a formal complaint), and must provide a complainant with remedies any time a respondent is found responsible for sexual harassment pursuant to § 106.45(b)(1)(i). Even where a formal investigation is not required (because neither the complainant nor the Title IX Coordinator has filed or signed a formal complaint, or because a complainant is not participating in or attempting to participate in the recipient's education program or activity at the time of filing), the deliberate indifference standard requires that a recipient's response is not clearly unreasonable in light of known circumstances. Contrary to commenters' arguments, this standard requires more than for a recipient to respond in some minimal or ineffective way because minimal and ineffective responses would inevitably qualify as "clearly unreasonable" and because as revised, § 106.44(a) imposes specific, mandatory obligations on a recipient with respect to a recipient's response to each complainant. Given that the deliberate indifference standard involves an analysis of whether a response was clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, there are many different factual circumstances under which a recipient's response may be deemed deliberately indifferent.

Section 106.44(a) requires a recipient to respond promptly where the recipient has actual knowledge of sexual harassment; a recipient may have actual knowledge of sexual harassment even where no person has reported or filed a formal complaint about the sexual harassment. For example, employees in an elementary or secondary school may observe sexualized insults scrawled on school hallways, and even where no student has reported the incident, the school employees' notice of conduct

that could constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 (i.e., unwelcome conduct that a reasonable person would conclude is so severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive that it effectively denies a person equal access to education) charges the recipient with actual knowledge, and the recipient must respond in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, which could include the recipient removing the sexually harassing insults and communicating to the student body that sexual harassment is unacceptable. By way of further example, if a Title IX Coordinator were to receive multiple reports of sexual harassment against the same respondent, as part of a non-deliberately indifferent response the Title IX Coordinator may sign a formal complaint to initiate a grievance process against the respondent, even where no person who alleges to be the victim wishes to file a formal complaint. The deliberate indifference standard does not permit recipients to ignore or respond inadequately to sexual harassment of which the recipient has become aware, but the deliberate indifference standard appropriately recognizes that a recipient's prompt response will differ based on the unique factual circumstances presented in each instance of sexual harassment.

In response to comments that the Gebser/Davis liability standard (i.e., deliberate indifference) is and should be used only for monetary damages in private litigation, the Department notes that courts have used the Gebser/Davis standard in considering and awarding injunctive relief.[932] Additionally, in Gebser, the Supreme Court acknowledged that the Department of Education has the authority to "promulgate and enforce requirements that effectuate [Title IX's] non-discrimination mandate."[933] In promulgating these final regulations, the [932] Fitzgerald v. Barnstable Sch. Dist., 555 U.S. 246, 255 (2009) ("In addition, this Court has recognized an implied private right of action . . . In a suit brought pursuant to this private right, both injunctive relief and damages are available.") (internal citations omitted; emphasis added); Hill v. Cundiff, 797 F.3d 948, 972-73 (11th Cir. 2015) (reversing summary judgment against plaintiff's claims for injunctive relief because a jury could find that the alleged conduct was "severe, pervasive, and objectively offensive" under Davis); B.H. ex rel. Hawk v. Easton Area Sch. Dist., 725 F.3d 293, 322-23 (3d Cir. 2013) (upholding preliminary injunction against school for banning students from wearing bracelets because the school failed to show that the "bracelets would breed an environment of pervasive and severe harassment" under Davis); Haidak v. Univ. of Mass. at Amherst, 299 F. Supp. 3d 242, 270 (D. Mass. 2018) (denying plaintiff's request for a preliminary injunction because he failed to show that the school was deliberately indifferent to an environment of severe and pervasive discriminatory conduct under Davis), aff'd in part, vacated in part, remanded by Haidak v. Univ. of Mass.-Amherst, 933 F.3d 56 (1st Cir. 2019).

---

[933] Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 292 (1998).

Department is choosing to do just that. The Department is not required to adopt identical standards for all civil rights laws under the Department's enforcement authority, and after carefully considering the rationale relied upon by the Supreme Court in the context of sexual harassment under Title IX, the Department adopts the deliberate indifference standard articulated by the Supreme Court, tailored for administrative enforcement of recipients' responses to sexual harassment. The Department believes it would be beneficial for recipients and students alike if the administrative standards governing recipients' responses to sexual harassment were aligned with the standards developed by the Supreme Court in private actions, while ensuring that through administrative enforcement the

Department holds recipients accountable for taking specific actions that the Gebser/Davis framework does not require.[934]

The Department also believes that the language used to describe the deliberate indifference standard is sufficiently clear. The Department defines the standard according to the

---

[934] E.g., § 106.44(a) specifically requires that a recipient's mandatory response to each report of sexual harassment must include promptly offering supportive measures to the complainant, and must avoid imposing disciplinary sanctions against a respondent without following the § 106.45 grievance process; § 106.44(b)(1) requires a recipient to investigate sexual harassment allegations made in a formal complaint; § 106.45 prescribes specific procedural protections for complainants, and respondents, when a recipient investigates and adjudicates formal complaints.

conventional understanding of the standard, that is, to be deliberately indifferent means to have acted in a way that is "clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances" consistent with the formulation of the deliberate indifference standard offered by the Supreme Court in Davis.[935] The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that the term "deliberate" as

---

[935] Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 648-49 (1999); § 106.44(a).

used in the standard does not require an element of subjective intent to harm, or bad faith, or similar mental state, on the part of a recipient's officials, administrators, or employees. Rather, the final regulations clearly state in § 106.44(a) that a recipient with actual knowledge of sexual harassment against a person in the United States occurring in its education program or activity must respond in a manner that is "not clearly unreasonable," including by taking certain specific steps such as offering supportive measures to a complainant. Accordingly, the Department will hold a recipient responsible for compliance regardless of whether acting in a clearly unreasonable way, in light of the known circumstances, is the result of malice, incompetence, ignorance, or other mental state of the recipient's officials, administrators, or employees. As

adapted for administrative enforcement, the deliberate indifference standard sufficiently ensures that a recipient takes steps to address student safety and provides equal access to the recipient's education program or activity while preserving a recipient's discretion to address the unique facts and circumstances presented by any particular situation (for example, a recipient's offer of supportive measures as required in § 106.44(a) will be evaluated based on whether the recipient offered supportive measures to the complainant that, under the facts and circumstances presented in an individual complainant's situation, were in fact designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal educational access).

The Department is persuaded by commenters' suggestions that the Department should impose stricter, more specific obligations on recipients' responses to sexual harassment or sexual harassment allegations, including allegations against employees in positions of authority. Rather than abandoning the deliberate indifference liability standard, the Department adapts that standard for administrative enforcement in ways that preserve the benefits of aligning judicial and administrative enforcement rubrics, preserve the benefit of the "not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances" standard's deference to unique factual circumstances, yet imposes mandatory obligations on every recipient to respond in specific ways to each complainant alleged to be victimized by sexual harassment. Adopting the Supreme Court's formulation of the deliberate indifference

standard, while adapting that standard to specify what a recipient must do every time the recipient knows of sexual harassment (or allegations of sexual harassment), addresses commenters' concerns that the deliberate indifference standard as presented in the NPRM did not impose strict enough requirements on a recipient to ensure the recipient responds supportively and fairly to sexual harassment in its education programs or activities.

In the interest of providing greater clarity, consistency, and transparency as to a recipient's obligations under Title IX and what students can expect, the Department does not want to overcomplicate the regulatory scheme in the final regulations by establishing separate standards for when a recipient is handling complaints involving different classes of respondents (for example, allegations against students, versus allegations against employees). The Department believes that expecting a recipient to respond in a manner that is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances appropriately requires a recipient to take into account whether the respondent holds a position of authority.

Changes: The Department revised § 106.44(a) to provide that a recipient's response must be prompt, and must treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering supportive measures as defined in § 106.30 to a complainant, and by following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, against a respondent. Section § 106.44(a) is also revised to provide that the Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint.

Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances

Section 106.44(b) Proposed "Safe harbors," generally

Comments: Some commenters praised the safe harbor provisions generally for giving colleges and universities the discretion to respond to sexual harassment complaints outside the formal grievance process. Some commenters also praised the safe harbor provisions for identifying specific circumstances under which a recipient can conform its response to legal requirements and avoid a finding of deliberate indifference.

Some commenters, although supportive of the safe harbors generally, requested that the Department clarify how the safe harbors would work.

Many commenters disagreed with the Department's use of the term "safe harbor" in the NPRM, because the provisions that provided a "safe harbor" also include mandatory requirements. These commenters argued that a safe harbor is conventionally understood as a provision that a regulated party can take advantage of to shield itself from administrative action, as opposed to something a regulated party is required to do. Commenters asserted that "safe harbors" are options rather than obligations and pointed to the mandatory language contained in proposed § 106.44(b)(2) under which the Title IX Coordinator would have been required to file a formal complaint upon receiving multiple reports against a respondent,[936] as fundamentally inconsistent with the idea of a safe harbor.

Some commenters criticized the safe harbor provisions as rules intended to immunize recipients from a finding of deliberate indifference but requiring no more than a minimal response to allegations of sexual harassment, contrary to Title IX's express intent. Commenters argued that the safe harbor provisions, combined with the deliberate indifference standard, curtail the Department's ability to independently and comprehensively review a recipient's response to sexual harassment allegations, amounting to an abdication of the Department's role to enforce Title IX.

---

[936] Proposed § 106.44(b)(2) has been removed in the final regulations; see discussion under the "§ Proposed 106.44(b)(2) Reports by Multiple Complainants of Conduct by Same Respondent [removed in final regulations]" subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

Discussion: The Department appreciates comments in support of the two proposed safe harbors. Upon further consideration, the Department decided not to include the two proposed safe harbors in these final regulations.

One of the proposed safe harbor provisions provided that if the recipient followed a grievance process (including implementing any appropriate remedy as required) that complies with § 106.45

in response to a formal complaint, the recipient's response to the formal complaint would not be deliberately indifferent and would not otherwise constitute discrimination under Title IX. The proposed provision was meant to provide an assurance that the recipient's response (only as to the formal complaint) would not be deemed deliberately indifferent as long as a recipient complies with § 106.45. This proposed safe harbor left open the possibility that other aspects of the recipient's response may be deliberately indifferent. The Department understands commenters' concerns that this safe harbor provision may have been confusing or misleading by somehow suggesting that compliance with § 106.45 is not required, or by suggesting that compliance with § 106.45 would have excused a recipient from providing a non-deliberately indifferent response with respect to matters other than conducting a grievance process. The Department is not including this proposed safe harbor provision in the final regulations to make it clear that recipients are always required to comply with § 106.45 in response to a formal complaint, and are always required to comply with all the obligations specified in § 106.44(a), with or without a formal complaint being filed. Indeed, the Department retains the mandate in § 106.45(b)(1) and revises this mandate for clarity to state: "In response to a formal complaint, a recipient must follow a grievance process that complies with § 106.45." The Department did not intend to leave the impression that it was immunizing recipients with respect to their obligations to address sexual harassment. These final regulations require a meaningful response to allegations of sexual harassment of which a recipient has notice, when the sexual harassment occurs in a recipient's education program or activity against a person in the United States.

The second proposed safe harbor provided that a recipient would not be deliberately indifferent when in the absence of a formal complaint the recipient offers and implements supportive measures designed to effectively restore or preserve the complainant's access to the recipient's education program or activity, and the recipient also informs the complainant in writing of the right to file a formal complaint. This safe harbor is now unworkable and unnecessary in light of other revisions made to the proposed regulations, specifically a recipient's obligations in § 106.44(a) and §

106.45(b)(10)(ii). Under § 106.44(a), a recipient's response must treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering the complainant supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, and a Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. The Department revised § 106.45(b)(1) to add a mandate that with or without a formal complaint, a recipient must comply with § 106.44(a), emphasizing that recipients must offer supportive measures to a complainant regardless of whether a complainant chooses to file a formal complaint, and recipients must investigate any formal complaint that a complaint does choose to file. Additionally, under § 106.45(b)(10)(ii), if a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document why such a response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. As recipients are now required to offer supportive measures to a complainant (not only incentivized to do so by the proposed safe harbor) and to document why not providing a complainant with supportive measures was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, the final regulations removes safe harbors and instead, the Department will enforce the mandates and requirements in the final regulations, including those specified in §§ 106.44(a) and 106.44(b).

Despite the absence of these safe harbor provisions, recipients still have discretion with respect to how to respond to sexual harassment allegations in a way that takes into account factual circumstances. The final regulations, like the proposed regulations, require a recipient to begin the § 106.45 grievance process in response to a formal complaint. A recipient retains significant discretion

under these final regulations, yet must meet specific, mandatory obligations that ensure a recipient responds supportively and fairly to every allegation of Title IX sexual harassment. For example, a recipient may decide which supportive measures to offer a complainant, whether to offer an informal resolution process under § 106.45(b)(9), whether to allow all parties, witnesses, and other participants to appear at the live hearing virtually under § 106.45(b)(6)(i), and whether to take action under another provision of the recipient's code of conduct even if the recipient must dismiss allegations in a formal complaint under § 106.45(b)(3)(i), among other areas of discretion.

These final regulations also provide sufficient clarity as to how a recipient must respond to sexual harassment, rendering the proposed safe harbors unnecessary. For example, § 106.44(a) specifically addresses how a recipient's response must treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering supportive measures as defined in § 106.30 to a complainant, and by following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures against a respondent. Section

§ 106.44(b)(1) also clearly mandates that in response to a formal complaint a recipient must follow a grievance process that complies with § 106.45, and with or without a formal complaint, a recipient must comply with § 106.44(a). The Department clearly addresses specific circumstances throughout these final regulations. For example, the Department addresses when a recipient must or may dismiss a formal complaint under §106.45(b)(3) for purposes of sexual harassment under Title IX or this part, when a recipient may consolidate formal complaints as to allegations of sexual harassment under § 106.45(b)(4), and when an informal resolution process may be offered under § 106.45(b)(9), among other matters.

The elimination of the safe harbor provisions proposed in the NPRM alleviates and addresses the concerns of commenters who opposed these safe harbor provisions.

Changes: The Department does not include the two safe harbor provisions from the NPRM, in proposed § 106.44(b)(1) and proposed § 106.44(b)(3).

Section 106.44(b)(1) Mandate to Investigate Formal Complaints and Safe Harbor

Comments: Several commenters supported § 106.44(b)(1), asserting that this provision places control in the hands of the victims, and prevents victims from having to participate in a grievance process against their will. Other commenters opposed this provision, arguing that it relieves institutions of the obligation to address sexual harassment claims of which they have actual knowledge by discouraging institutions from investigating allegations in the absence of a formal complaint.

Many commenters expressed concern that institutions will merely "check" the procedural "boxes" outlined in § 106.45 without regard for the substantive outcomes of formal grievance processes. Many commenters asserted that this proposed safe harbor would only benefits respondents, and would provide no benefit to complainants. Other commenters asserted that if a recipient fails to follow procedural requirements in § 106.45, the safe harbor in § 106.44(b)(1) would only hold recipients to the standard of deliberate indifference, which commenters argued was too low a standard to ensure that recipients comply with the § 106.45 grievance process.

Many commenters argued that the safe harbor in § 106.44(b)(1) provided too little flexibility for institutions to develop their own grievance process. Some commenters expressed concern that a recipient would not have the flexibility to forgo a grievance process in a situation where the recipient determined that the allegations contained in a formal complaint were without merit, frivolous, or that the allegations had already been investigated. Some commenters asked the Department to clarify whether satisfying § 106.45 is the only way, or one of many ways, to comply with the proposed rules and receive the safe harbor protections of § 106.44(b)(1).

Another commenter suggested that the Department add a timeliness requirement to § 106.44(b)(1) so that a formal complaint must be filed within a certain time frame, in order to avoid prejudice or bias against a respondent.

Discussion: As explained in the "Section 106.44(b) Proposed 'Safe harbors,' generally," subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" section of this preamble, these final regulations do not include the safe harbor provision that if the recipient follows a grievance process (including implementing any appropriate remedy as required) that complies with § 106.45 in response to a formal complaint, the recipient's response to the formal complaint is not deliberately indifferent and does not otherwise constitute discrimination under Title IX. The Department understands commenters' concerns that this safe harbor provision may have been confusing or misleading by somehow suggesting that full compliance with § 106.45 is not required – that is, by suggesting that a recipient must only follow § 106.45 in a way that is not deliberately indifferent. The Department is not including this proposed safe harbor provision in the final regulations to make it clear that recipients are always required to fully comply with § 106.45 in response to a formal complaint. Indeed, the Department retains the mandate in §

106.45(b)(1) and revises this mandate for clarity to state: "In response to a formal complaint, a recipient must follow a grievance process that complies with § 106.45." The Department also recognizes, as many commenters stated, that a complainant may not wish to initiate or participate in a grievance process for a variety of reasons, including fear of re-traumatization, and the Department affirms the autonomy of

complainants by making it clear that a recipient must investigate and adjudicate when a complainant has filed a formal complaint. At the same time, the final regulations ensure that complainants must be offered supportive measures with or without filing a formal complaint, thus respecting the autonomy of complainants who do not wish to initiate or participate in a grievance process by ensuring that such complainants receive a supportive response from the recipient regardless of also choosing to file a formal complaint. For this reason, the Department revised § 106.44(b)(1) to expressly state: "With or without a formal complaint, a recipient must comply with § 106.44(a)." Section 106.44(a) requires a recipient to offer a complainant supportive measures as part of its prompt, non-deliberately indifferent response, whether or not the complainant chooses to file a formal complaint.

The Department disagrees that these final regulations discourage recipients from investigating allegations. As explained previously, a recipient must investigate a complainant's allegations when the complainant chooses to file a formal complaint, and a recipient may choose to initiate a grievance process to investigate the complainant's allegations even when the complainant chooses not to file a formal complaint, if the Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, after having considered the complainant's wishes and evaluated whether an investigation is not clearly unreasonable in light of the specific circumstances. A recipient, however, cannot impose any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures against a respondent until after the recipient follows a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. The recipient's Title IX Coordinator may always sign a formal complaint, as defined in § 106.30, to initiate an investigation. The formal complaint triggers the grievance process in § 106.45, which provides notice to both parties of the investigation and provides them an equal opportunity to participate and respond to the allegations of sexual harassment. These final regulations protect both complainants and respondents from the repercussions of an investigation that they do not know about and cannot participate in, and the complainant as well as the respondent may choose whether to participate in the grievance process.[937]

---

[937] Section 106.71 (added in the final regulations, prohibiting retaliation against any individual for exercising rights under Title IX, including an individual's right to participate, or to choose not to participate, in a Title IX grievance process). See the "Retaliation" section of this preamble for further discussion.

By eliminating § 106.44(b)(1), the Department makes it clear that recipients will not be able to merely "check boxes" or escape liability just for having a process that appears "on paper" to comply with § 106.45. We appreciate the opportunity to clarify that the Department will evaluate a recipient's compliance with § 106.45 without regard to whether the recipient was "deliberately indifferent" in failing to comply with those provisions. In other words, the Department may find that the recipient violated any of the requirements in § 106.45, whether or not the recipient believes that failure to comply was "not clearly unreasonable." As explained throughout this preamble, including in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department has selected all the provisions of the § 106.45 grievance process as those provisions needed to improve the fairness, reliability, predictability, and legitimacy of Title IX grievance processes, and expects recipients to comply with the entirety of § 106.45. For example, the Department may find that a recipient violated § 106.45(b)(2) if the recipient did not provide the requisite written notice of allegations to both parties, even if the recipient believes that the recipient had a good reason for refusing to send that initial written notice. Similarly, a recipient may violate § 106.45(b)(5)(ii) if the recipient does not provide an equal opportunity for the parties to present witnesses, including fact and expert witnesses, and other inculpatory and exculpatory evidence as part of the investigation, even if the recipient believes that refusing to do so was not clearly unreasonable.

The Department disagrees that the grievance process prescribed by § 106.45 favors respondents or provides no benefits to complainants. For reasons explained throughout this preamble, including in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section and the "General Support and Opposition to the § 106.45 Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the § 106.45 grievance process gives complainants and respondents clear, strong procedural rights and protections that foster a fair process leading to reliable outcomes. For example, a complainant whose allegations of sexual harassment in a formal complaint are dismissed may appeal such a dismissal on specific grounds under § 106.45(b)(8)(i). The grievance process in § 106.45 provides consistency, predictability, and transparency as to a recipient's obligations and what students can expect when a formal complaint is filed. As many commenters appreciated, under the final regulations, if the complainant decides to file a formal complaint, this will trigger a grievance process that includes the procedural safeguards set forth in § 106.45.

The Department understands commenters' arguments that §

106.44b)(1) does not afford recipients flexibility to select a grievance process that the recipient prefers over the process prescribed in § 106.45. For reasons described in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, and in the "General Support and Opposition to the § 106.45 Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the grievance process prescribed

by § 106.45 creates a standardized framework for resolving formal complaints of sexual harassment under Title IX while leaving recipients discretion to adopt rules and practices not required under § 106.45.[938] We reiterate that the § 106.45 grievance process applies only to formal

[938] The revised introductory sentence in § 106.45(b) provides that any provisions, rules, or practices other than those required by § 106.45 that a recipient adopts as part of its grievance process for handling formal complaints of sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, must apply equally to both parties. The final regulations grant flexibility to recipients in other respects. The discussion in the "Other Language/Terminology Comments" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble notes that recipients may decide whether to calculate time frames using calendar days, school days, or other method. See also § 106.45(b)(6)(i) (allowing, but not requiring, live hearings to be held virtually through use of technology); § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) (removing the requirement that evidence in the investigation be provided to the parties using a file-sharing platform); § 106.45(b)(7)(i) (giving recipients a choice between using the preponderance of the evidence standard or the clear and convincing evidence standard).

complaints alleging sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, that occurred in the recipient's education program or activity against a person in the United States. These final regulations do not dictate what kind of process a recipient should or must use to resolve allegations of other types of misconduct. Because a recipient's response to Title IX sexual harassment is part of a recipient's obligation to protect every student's Federal civil right to participate in education programs and activities free from sex discrimination a recipient's response is not simply a matter of the recipient's own codes of conduct or policies; a recipient's response is a matter of fulfilling obligations under a Federal civil rights law. The Department has carefully crafted a standardized grievance process for resolving allegations of Title

IX sexual harassment so that every student (and employee) receives the benefit of transparent, predictable, consistent resolution of formal complaints that allege sex discrimination in the form of sexual harassment under Title IX.

The Department acknowledges commenters' concerns that recipients do not have the discretion to forgo a formal grievance process in a situation where the recipient determined the allegations were without merit, frivolous, or had already been investigated, but we decline to grant that kind of discretion because the Department believes that, where a complainant chooses to file a formal complaint and initiate a recipient's formal grievance process, that formal complaint should be taken seriously and not prejudged or subjected to cursory or conclusory

evaluation by a recipient's administrators. The purpose of the § 106.45 grievance process is to resolve allegations of sexual harassment impartially, without conflicts of interest or bias, and to objectively examine relevant evidence before reaching a determination regarding responsibility. Permitting a recipient to deem allegations meritless or frivolous without following the § 106.45 grievance process would defeat the Department's purpose in providing both parties with a consistent, transparent, fair process, would not increase the reliability of outcomes, and would increase the risk that victims of sexual harassment will not be provided remedies. The Department notes that the final regulations give recipients discretion to offer informal resolution processes to resolve formal complaints (§

106.45(b)(9)) and permit discretionary dismissal of a formal complaint (or allegations therein) by a recipient under limited circumstances (§ 106.45(b)(3)(ii)).[939]

We have also considered commenters' suggestion that the Department add a requirement limiting the amount of time a complainant has

---

[939] See the "Dismissal and Consolidation of Formal Complaints" section of this preamble. We note that one of the bases for discretionary dismissal of a formal complaint (or allegations therein) is where specific circumstances prevent the recipient from gathering evidence sufficient to reach a determination. When a formal complaint contains allegations that are precisely the same as allegations the recipient has already investigated and adjudicated, that circumstance could justify the recipient exercising discretion to dismiss those allegations, under § 106.45(b)(3)(ii).

for filing a formal complaint, but the Department declines to revise the final regulations to include a statute of limitations or similar time limit.[940] However, we have revised § 106.30 defining "formal complaint" to specify that at the time of filing a formal complaint, the complainant must be participating in or attempting to participate in the recipient's education program or activity. In addition, § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) allows a discretionary dismissal of a formal complaint where the complainant wishes to withdraw the formal complaint (if the complainant notifies the Title IX Coordinator, in writing, of this wish), where the respondent is no longer enrolled or employed by the recipient, or where specific circumstances prevent the recipient from meeting the recipient's burden of collecting evidence sufficient to reach a determination regarding responsibility. The length of time elapsed between an incident of alleged sexual harassment, and the filing of a formal complaint, may, in specific circumstances, prevent a recipient from collecting enough evidence to reach a determination, justifying a discretionary dismissal under § 106.45(b)(3)(ii).

---

[940] For further discussion, see the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble.

Changes: The Department does not include the safe harbor provision regarding the § 106.45 grievance process that was proposed in § 106.44(b)(1) in the NPRM. Section 106.44(b)(1) in the final regulations retains the mandate to follow a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 in response to a formal complaint, and adds a mandate that the recipient must comply with § 106.44(a) with or without a formal complaint.

Proposed § 106.44(b)(2) Reports by Multiple Complainants of Conduct by Same Respondent [removed in final regulations]

Comments: A number of commenters expressed opposition to proposed § 106.44(b)(2), which would have required Title IX Coordinators to file a formal complaint upon receiving reports from multiple complainants that a respondent engaged in conduct that could constitute sexual harassment. Commenters opposed this proposed provision due to concerns that the provision could place the safety of victims at risk by requiring a grievance process against a respondent over the wishes of the complainant and could place victims in harm's way without the victim's knowledge or input because

nothing in the proposed provision required the Title IX Coordinator to first alert or warn the victim that the Title IX Coordinator would file a formal complaint. Commenters argued that this proposed provision implied that Title IX Coordinators could not file a formal complaint unless a respondent was a repeat offender.

A number of commenters expressed concern that the proposed provision would pose a particular risk in cases dealing with dating violence, domestic violence, or stalking. Commenters argued that survivors often choose not to report intimate partner violence or stalking to authorities for a multitude of reasons, one of which is fear that the perpetrator will retaliate or escalate the violence.

A number of commenters expressed concern that the mandatory filing requirement in proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would violate survivor autonomy. Commenters argued that the proposed provision would violate autonomy principles embedded elsewhere in the proposed rules. Commenters argued the Department's contradictory statements regarding the importance of survivor autonomy were arbitrary and capricious. Commenters argued that requiring schools to trigger formal grievance procedures when the school has received multiple reports of harassment by the same perpetrator would violate survivor autonomy and discourage reporting. One commenter asserted that the proposed provision would retraumatize victims by forcing an investigation when no victim wants to testify against the perpetrator. One commenter asserted that this provision would exacerbate survivors' feelings of powerlessness. Commenters asserted that students should be able to discuss a situation without the Title IX office initiating a formal process without the complainant's permission. Commenters stated that sometimes a student may want advice, or want supportive measures, without desiring a formal process.

A number of commenters expressed concern that requiring Title IX

Coordinators to file formal complaints against the wishes of complainants will lead to violations of confidentiality of survivors who already do not want to come forward, and may not come forward at all if there is a risk that the school will violate their wishes by investigating. Commenters argued that victims who report but do not wish to pursue a formal complaint would be forced into potentially dangerous situations unknowingly, since nothing in the proposed rules imposed a duty on the institution to offer safety measures or accommodations. Other commenters asserted that litigation arising out of Title IX proceedings is common, and that requiring a recipient to pursue a grievance proceeding against a respondent invites the respondent to then name the complainant as a party to subsequent litigation even when the complainant did not want to initiate an investigation in the first place.

A number of commenters expressed concern that deeming the Title IX Coordinator as a complainant (by requiring them to file a formal complaint) creates a significant conflict of interest by placing the Title IX Coordinator in an adversarial position against the respondent. Other commenters argued that asking the Title IX Coordinator to sign and file a formal complaint in cases where complainants are unwilling to participate would make it impossible for the Title IX Coordinator to maintain the appearance of neutrality, even if they are in fact unbiased in all other ways. Other commenters expressed concern that if the person who reported the incident is reluctant to come forward, it would place the Title IX Coordinator, who should be an impartial resource, into a role of advocating for a specific person's report.

A number of commenters argued that the proposed provision would chill reporting of sexual harassment because victims would fear being drawn involuntarily into a formal process. Commenters suggested that, if institutions file formal complaints without the willing, informed participation of the victim, some requirements, including the cross-examination requirement, should be adjusted, to protect victims who did not consent to participate in a grievance process from negative consequences that commenters argued may possibly result from participating in a grievance process, especially a live hearing. Commenters argued that these consequences might include fear of re-traumatization from being cross- examined, questions perceived as invasions of privacy, and lawsuits filed by respondents based on testimony given during a Title IX hearing.

Commenters argued that this provision would depart from best practices for helping victims. Commenters asserted that in order to effectively address sex discrimination, educational institutions must be able to cultivate relationships of trust with community members with regard to reporting systems, and that this proposed provision would mean that recipients would violate the wishes of reporting parties, thereby betraying and violating their trust. Commenters asserted that the ability of a complainant to seek supportive measures without risking public exposure is foundational to creating conditions under which community members are more willing to avail themselves of institutional support, including formal grievance proceedings. Commenters expressed concern that, in the absence of supportive measures, many survivors cannot keep up with the demands of rigorous schoolwork while dealing with the impacts of trauma, and this proposed provision would leave complainants in a position of never knowing whether the complainant's report of sexual harassment would result in a formal process, because the complainant would have no way of knowing whether another complainant's report would trigger proposed § 106.44(b)(2).

Commenters expressed concern that proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would conflict with or be in tension with the requirement in § 106.45(b)(6)(i) that schools disregard statements provided by witnesses or parties who do not submit to cross-examination at a hearing, because if alleged victims are unwilling to participate in the process and be subject to cross-examination, then the adjudicator is not permitted to consider the complainant's statements, rendering the filing of a formal complaint by a Title IX Coordinator potentially futile. Commenters argued that there was a conflict between proposed § 106.44(b)(2) and the proposed

requirement in § 106.45(b)(3) that a recipient must dismiss a complaint if the alleged harassment did not occur within the recipient's education program or activity; commenters questioned how the recipient should respond when multiple reports are made against the same respondent, but one or more of the reported incidents did not take place within the education program or activity of the school and suggested that to solve this conflict, recipients should make a good faith investigation into all reports of sexual harassment, regardless of the location of the incident, when one or more parties involved in the report are under the "purview" of the recipient.

A number of commenters argued that proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would not meet its stated goal of protecting students because the provision would not be limited only to stopping serial predators. Commenters argued that the proposed provision would incentivize schools to bring weak cases against serial perpetrators that may allow the predators to escape responsibility. Commenters expressed concern if schools are forced to move forward without the participation of complainants in every case where there are multiple reports of sexual harassment against the same respondent, then this may lead to dismissals or inaccurate findings of non-responsibility. Other commenters expressed concern that this proposed provision was designed to help recipients, not protect victims. Commenters argued the proposed provision was a designed-to-fail framework that would protect a recipient from a claim by another victim who is attacked by the same perpetrator, since all the recipient would be required to do is show that it made a pro forma attempt to comply with its obligations, to qualify for the safe harbor. Other commenters expressed concern that a recipient impermissibly motivated by sex stereotypes could exploit this proposed provision to engage in discriminatory practices that would otherwise constitute a violation of Title IX.

Commenters argued that this proposed provision could put a recipient in the untenable situation of being required to apply the formal grievance processes to a situation the recipient does not believe it can adequately investigate or that the recipient reasonably believes can be addressed through other appropriate means. A number of commenters expressed concern that this proposed provision would remove the Title IX Coordinator's discretion; commenters asserted that instead, Title IX Coordinators should evaluate what the appropriate response is, whether it be a formal investigation or putting the respondent on notice of the behavior complained about.

Commenters argued that, consistent with the 2001 Guidance, recipients should continue to have discretion in determining whether or how to address multiple reports involving a single respondent in cases where complainants wish to remain anonymous or for other reasons are unwilling to participate in formal proceedings.

A number of commenters argued that proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would alter and harm the valuable function of the Title IX Coordinator. Other commenters expressed concern that this proposed provision would complicate the role of the Title IX Coordinator because if the Title IX Coordinator receives a report from a resident advisor or faculty member (rather than from the victim themselves), and then subsequently receives a report from a victim alleging a similar incident involving the same perpetrator, the Title IX Coordinator might be confused about whether or not the proposed provision requires the Title IX Coordinator to file a formal complaint.

One commenter asserted that proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would put schools at risk for liability for monetary damages in private Title IX lawsuits, as well as other State tort actions.

Commenters asserted that sometimes a third party reports an alleged sexual harassment situation, but the alleged victim insists that there was no violation and in cases like that, the recipient should be required to make a report that is not attached to either party's transcript, but that can be referenced if the alleged victim later wishes to file a formal complaint.

Discussion: Despite the intended benefits of proposed § 106.44(b)(2) described in the NPRM, the Department is persuaded by the many commenters who expressed a variety of concerns about requiring the Title IX Coordinator to file a formal complaint after receiving multiple reports about the same respondent. In addition to raising serious concerns about the potential effects on complainants, commenters also described practical problems with proposed § 106.44(b)(2) in relation to the rest of the final regulations. As a result, the Department is removing proposed § 106.44(b)(2) entirely.[941]

The Department is persuaded by commenters who argued that this proposed provision would have removed the Title IX Coordinator's discretion without necessary or sufficient reason to do so. The Department agrees that the Title IX Coordinator should have the flexibility to [941] The section number, 106.44(b)(2), now refers to the provision discussed in the "Section 106.44(b)(2) OCR Will Not Re-weigh the Evidence" subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

---

evaluate and determine an appropriate response under pertinent facts and circumstances. The Department agrees with commenters who argued that institutions should continue to have discretion in determining whether or how to address multiple reports involving a single respondent in cases where complainants wish to remain anonymous or otherwise are unwilling to participate in a formal process.

Removing this proposed provision means that Title IX Coordinators retain discretion, but are not required, to sign formal complaints after receiving multiple reports of potential sexual harassment against the same respondent. We believe that this approach properly balances complainant autonomy, campus safety, and recipients' use of resources that would otherwise be required to be used to institute a potentially futile grievance process. The Department was persuaded by commenters' concerns that under the proposed rules, filing a formal complaint might have resulted in a Title IX Coordinator becoming a "complainant" during the grievance process, or creating a conflict of interest or lack of neutrality. We have revised the definitions of "complainant" and "formal complaint" in § 106.30 to clarify that when a Title IX Coordinator chooses to sign a formal complaint, that action is not taken "on behalf of" the complainant; the "complainant" is the person who is alleged to be the victim of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment. Those revisions further clarify that when a Title IX Coordinator signs a formal complaint, the Title IX Coordinator does not become a complainant or otherwise a party to the grievance process, and must abide by § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), which requires Title IX personnel to be free from conflicts of interest and bias, and serve impartially. We do not believe that signing a formal complaint that initiates a grievance process inherently creates a conflict of interest between the Title IX Coordinator and the respondent; in such a situation, the Title IX Coordinator is not advocating for or against the complainant or respondent, and is not subscribing to the truth of the allegations, but is rather instituting a grievance process (on behalf of the recipient, not on behalf of the complainant) based on reported sexual harassment so that the recipient may factually determine, through a fair and impartial grievance process, whether or not sexual harassment occurred in the recipient's education program or activity.

The Department is persuaded by commenters' concerns that the proposed provision would have created tension with § 106.45(b)(6)(i), which mandates that if a party or witness does not submit to cross-examination at the hearing, the decision-maker must not rely on any statement of that party or witness in reaching a determination regarding responsibility. The Department is persuaded by commenters' arguments that the proposed provision would have incentivized or forced recipients to file futile complaints against respondents with no complaining witness willing to testify at a live hearing. Whether or not proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would have conflicted with § 106.45(b)(3), the proposed provision § 106.44(b)(2) has been removed from the final regulations, and we have revised § 106.45(b)(3) to clarify that a recipient may choose to address allegations of sexual harassment that occurred outside the recipient's education program or activity, through non-Title IX codes of conduct. Where a complainant does not wish to participate in a grievance process, including being cross-examined at a live hearing, the recipient is not permitted to threaten, coerce, intimidate, or discriminate against the complainant in an attempt to secure the complainant's participation.[942] Thus, even if a Title IX Coordinator has signed a formal complaint, the complainant is not obligated to participate in the ensuing grievance process and need not appear at a live hearing or be cross-examined. We have added § 106.71

---

[942] Section 106.71(a).

prohibiting retaliation and expressly protecting any person's right not to participate in a Title IX proceeding.

The Department is also persuaded that a chilling effect on victim reporting can be avoided by eliminating this proposed provision. The Department is persuaded by commenters' concerns that complainants who are unwilling to file a formal complaint should be able to confidentially seek supportive measures without fear of being drawn into a formal complaint process whenever the Title IX Coordinator receives a second report from another complainant about the same respondent. The Department is persuaded by commenters' arguments that students should be able to discuss a situation with a Title IX Coordinator without the Title IX Coordinator being required to initiate a grievance process against the complainant's wishes, and

by commenters' assertions that it is not uncommon for respondents filing private lawsuits against the recipient to include the complainant as a party to such lawsuits, so dragging a complainant into a grievance process against the complainant's wishes exposes the complainant to potential involvement in private litigation as well.

The Department appreciates commenters' suggestions for specific changes and clarifications to proposed § 106.44(b)(2); however, there is no need to consider such changes or clarifications because we are removing this proposed provision from the final regulations.

Changes: The Department has not included proposed § 106.44(b)(2) in the final regulations.

Comments: Some commenters expressed support for proposed §

106.44(b)(2), asserting that it would be valuable for the protection of sexual assault victims on university campuses. Other commenters argued that it is common sense for the Title IX Coordinator to be able to file complaints against bad actors. Some commenters argued that the provision would improve the responsiveness of university Title IX Coordinators to sexual assault or harassment allegations at institutions

around the country. Other commenters supported this proposed provision so that Title IX Coordinators would file a complaint against repeat sexual offenders even when no victim was willing to file a formal complaint because this would protect a complainant's confidentiality.

Discussion: For the reasons discussed above, the Department is persuaded that eliminating proposed § 106.44(b)(2)

better serves the Department's goals of ensuring that recipients respond adequately to reports of sexual harassment without infringing on complainant autonomy. Elimination of this proposed provision leaves Title IX Coordinators discretion to sign a formal complaint initiating a grievance process, when doing so is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, without mandating such a response every time multiple reports against a respondent are received. We note that contrary to some commenters' belief, the proposed provision would not have protected complainants' confidentiality by requiring Title IX Coordinators to file formal complaints, because the recipient would still have been required under § 106.45(b)(2) to send written notice of the allegations to both parties, and the written notice must include the complainant's identity, if known.

Changes: The Department has not included proposed § 106.44(b)(2) in the final regulations.

Comments: Some commenters suggested expanding or modifying proposed § 106.44(b)(2), for example by specifying factors to consider as to whether a pattern of behavior might present a potential threat to the recipient's community. Some commenters suggested specifying that a formal complaint must be filed where threats, serial predation, violence, or weapons were allegedly involved.

Commenters recommended adding a credibility threshold to proposed § 106.44(b)(2) specifying that a Title IX Coordinator would only be required to file a formal complaint upon receiving multiple credible reports against the same respondent, so that the Title IX Coordinator would not need to file a formal complaint where reports appeared frivolous or unfounded.

Commenters suggested that the Department adopt the model used by Harvard Law School for its Title IX compliance, which as described by commenters provides that (1) that there be a complainant willing to participate before the recipient will initiate a formal investigation and (2) the only time an action should be pursued without a willing complainant is if there is a serious risk to campus-wide safety and security. Several commenters suggested that, in instances where there are reports by multiple complainants but none are willing to participate in the proceedings, the Department could ensure accountability by requiring the recipient to document its reason for not initiating a formal complaint rather than requiring the recipient to file a formal complaint in every such situation.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' suggestions for specific changes to proposed § 106.44(b)(2); however, we decline to make such changes because we are removing this proposed provision from the final regulations for the reasons described above. The Department declines to adopt in these final regulations the suggestion that patterns of behavior be considered as a factor to determine whether possible future threats to the community warrant filing a formal complaint even where a complainant does not wish to file; however, as discussed above, elimination of proposed § 106.44(b)(2) leaves the Title IX Coordinator discretion to sign a formal complaint where doing so is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. The Title IX Coordinator may consider a variety of factors, including a pattern of alleged misconduct by a particular respondent, in deciding whether to sign a formal complaint. By giving the recipient's Title IX Coordinator the discretion to sign a formal complaint in light of the specific facts and circumstances, the Department believes it has reached the appropriate balance between campus safety, survivor autonomy, and respect for the most efficient use of recipients' resources. We also note that under the final regulations, including revised § 106.44(a), a Title IX Coordinator's decision to sign a formal complaint may occur only after the Title IX Coordinator has promptly contacted the complainant (i.e., the person alleged to have been victimized by sexual harassment) to discuss availability of supportive measures, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. Thus, the Title IX Coordinator's decision to sign a formal complaint includes taking into account the complainant's wishes regarding how the recipient should respond to the complainant's allegations.

The Department disagrees with the suggestion to expand the proposed provision to cover other circumstances such as alleged use of threats, violence, or weapons, because we are persuaded by commenters that leaving the Title IX Coordinator discretion to sign a formal complaint is preferable to mandating circumstances under which a Title IX Coordinator must sign a formal complaint. The final regulations give the

Title IX Coordinator discretion to sign a formal complaint, and the Title IX Coordinator may take circumstances into account such as whether a complainant's allegations involved violence, use of weapons, or similar factors. The Department eliminated proposed § 106.44(b)(2) in part due to concerns expressed by commenters about survivor autonomy and safety; in some situations, the Title IX Coordinator may believe that signing a formal complaint is not in the best interest of the complainant and is not otherwise necessary for the recipient to respond in a non-deliberately indifferent manner. With the elimination of this provision, however, the Title IX Coordinator still possesses the discretion to sign formal complaints in situations involving threats, serial predation, violence, or weapons. Even in the absence of a formal complaint being filed, a recipient has authority under § 106.44(c) to order emergency removal of a respondent where the situation arising from sexual harassment allegations presents a risk to the physical health or safety of any person. Nothing in the final regulations prevents recipients, Title IX Coordinators, or complainants from contacting law enforcement to address imminent safety concerns.

Because the final regulations do not include this proposed provision, the Department does not further consider the commenter's suggestion to revise the eliminated provision by adding the word "credible" before "reports." As discussed previously, the Department has removed this provision to respect complainant autonomy and avoid chilling reporting by mandating that a Title IX Coordinator sign a formal complaint over a complainant's wishes; the commenter's suggestion for modifying this proposed § 106.44(b)(2) would not change the Department's belief that the proposed provision should be removed in its entirety, because narrowing the circumstances under which the Title IX Coordinator would be required to sign a formal complaint over the complainant's wishes would not address the concerns raised by many commenters that persuaded the Department of the need to respect survivor autonomy by giving a Title IX Coordinator discretion (without making it mandatory) to sign a formal complaint. The Department further notes that one of the purposes of the § 106.45 grievance process is to ensure that determinations are reached only after objective evaluation of relevant evidence by impartial decision-makers, and therefore permitting or requiring a Title IX Coordinator to only respond to reports or formal complaints that the Title IX Coordinator deems "credible" would defeat the goal of following a grievance process to reach reliable outcomes. Similarly, the commenter's suggestion to require the recipient to document its reason for not initiating a formal complaint following reports by multiple complainants does not alter the

Department's conclusion that the better way to respect survivor autonomy and the discretion of a Title IX Coordinator is to remove proposed § 106.44(b)(2) from the final regulations, so that a Title IX Coordinator retains the discretion to sign a formal complaint, but is not mandated to do so. We note that § 106.45(b)(10) does require a recipient to document the reasons for its conclusion that its response to any reported sexual harassment was not deliberately indifferent.

The Department declines to adopt the Harvard Law School model because we believe the final regulations provide the same or similar benefits with respect to requiring a grievance process only where a formal complaint has been filed by a complainant or signed by a Title IX Coordinator. For reasons discussed in the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, third parties are not allowed to file formal complaints.

Changes: None.

Proposed § 106.44(b)(3) Supportive Measures Safe Harbor in Absence of a Formal Complaint [removed in final regulations]

Comments: Many commenters appreciated that the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures would provide an incentive for institutions to offer supportive measures for both parties. Several commenters recounted personal stories of accused individuals being removed from classes and dorms before a determination had been made about pending allegations. Many commenters supported § 106.44(b)(2) for not requiring an individual to file a formal complaint in order to obtain supportive measures and for expressly including the requirement that, when offering supportive measures, recipients must notify a complainant of the right to file a formal complaint at a later date if they wish. Many commenters asserted that often, supportive measures are sufficient for both parties to deal with a situation without causing additional trauma to either party.

Some commenters expressed concern that the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures would effectively relieve institutions of the responsibility to hold respondents accountable and address sexual harassment on campuses. Many commenters argued that offering "meager" supportive measures to a student in lieu of investigating allegations would not satisfy a recipient's obligations under Title IX and asked the Department to clarify that the provision of supportive measures is not always adequate to satisfy the deliberate indifference standard.

Many commenters argued that the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures actually created a barrier to providing supportive measures for elementary and secondary school victims because the provision applied only to institutions of higher education, and asked the Department to modify the proposed rules to extend this supportive measures safe harbor to the elementary and secondary school context either by creating a separate safe harbor with nearly identical language or by deleting the phrase "for institutions of higher education" in the proposed regulatory text. One commenter asserted that § 106.44(b)(3)

is redundant because it merely repeats the standard of § 106.44(a). One commenter argued that, when combined with the Department's proposed definition of sexual harassment, this proposed provision would create a safe harbor for educational institutions to avoid liability.

Other commenters suggested that the Department modify the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures to expressly prohibit institutions from coercing a complainant into accepting supportive measures in lieu of filing a formal complaint. At least one commenter suggested adding an outer time limit to a party's right to file a formal complaint "at a later time," asserting that this proposed provision was inconsistent with the recordkeeping requirement in the proposed regulations, which would have allowed a record to be destroyed in three years (this retention period has been revised to seven years in § 106.45(b)(10) of the final regulations).

Discussion: As explained in the "Section 106.44(b) Proposed 'Safe harbors,' generally," subsection of the "Recipient's Response in Specific Circumstances" section of this preamble, these final regulations do not include the safe harbor provision that a recipient is not deliberately indifferent when in the absence of a formal complaint the recipient offers and implements supportive measures designed to effectively restore or preserve the complainant's access to the recipient's education program or activity, and the recipient also informs the complainant in writing of the right to file a formal complaint. This safe harbor is now unworkable and unnecessary in light of other revisions made to the proposed regulations, specifically a recipient's obligations in § 106.44(a) and § 106.45(b)(10)(ii). Under § 106.44(a), a recipient's response must treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, and a Title IX Coordinator must promptly contact the complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures as defined in §

106.30, consider the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, inform the complainant of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. As previously explained, § 106.45(b)(1) now contains an additional mandate that with or without a formal complaint, a recipient

must comply with § 106.44(a), which places recipients on notice that it must offer supportive measures to a complainant. Additionally, under § 106.45(b)(10)(ii), if a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document why such a response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. As recipients are now required to offer supportive measures to a complainant and to document why not providing a complainant with supportive measures was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances, the final regulations no longer provides a safe harbor. Recipients cannot receive a safe harbor for offering supportive measures because recipients are now required to offer supportive measures under these final regulations. Accordingly, the Department does not include the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures in these final regulations.

With respect to concerns that respondents may suffer disciplinary sanctions or punitive action stemming from pending allegations, the Department notes that § 106.44(a) expressly provides that a recipient's response must treat complainants and respondents equitably by offering supportive measures as defined in § 106.30 to a complainant, and by following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45 before the imposition of any disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, against a respondent. Additionally, supportive measures in § 106.30 are expressly defined as non-disciplinary, non- punitive individualized services offered as appropriate, as reasonably available, and without fee or charge to the complainant or the respondent. Supportive measures must not have a punitive or disciplinary consequence for either complainants or respondents.

Even without the proposed safe harbor provision regarding supportive measures, the Department believes that these final regulations appropriately draw recipients' attention to the importance of offering supportive measures to all students, including students who do not wish to initiate a recipient's formal grievance process, and thus give complainants greater autonomy to decide if supportive measures, alone, represent the kind of school-level response that will best help the complainant heal after any trauma. The Department in part requires a recipient to offer supportive measures to all complainants under § 106.44(a) because the Department recognizes that, in many cases, a complainant's equal access to education can be effectively restored or preserved through the school's provision of supportive measures. Accordingly, the Department provides an additional mandate in § 106.44(b)(1), that with or without a formal complaint, a recipient must comply with § 106.44(a) (e.g., by offering the complainant supportive measures).

We are persuaded by commenters' assertions that providing supportive measures to a complainant does not always satisfy a recipient's obligation to respond in a non-deliberately indifferent manner to known sexual harassment. In some circumstances and depending on the unique facts, a non-deliberately indifferent response may require the recipient's Title IX Coordinator to sign a formal complaint as defined in § 106.30 so that the recipient initiates the grievance process in § 106.45. The Department acknowledges that a recipient should respect the complainant's autonomy and wishes with respect to a formal complaint and grievance process to the extent possible.

As the proposed safe harbor regarding supportive measures is no longer included in these final regulations, we do not revisit whether excluding elementary and secondary school recipients from this safe harbor was preferable to modifying the proposed safe harbor to also apply to elementary and secondary schools. Revised § 106.44(a) requires every recipient (including elementary and secondary schools) to offer supportive measures to complainants.

The Department understands the concern that a recipient may coerce potential complainants into accepting supportive measures in lieu of a formal grievance process. Partly in response to these concerns, the Department revised § 106.44(a) to require that a Title IX Coordinator promptly contact a complainant not only to discuss supportive measures but also to explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint. Accordingly, a complainant will know how to file a formal complaint, if the complainant wishes to do so. We have also added § 106.71 to expressly forbid a recipient from threatening, intimidating, coercing, or discriminating against any complainant for the purpose of chilling the complainant's exercise of any rights under Title IX, which includes the right to file a formal complaint, and to receive supportive measures even if the complainant chooses not to file a formal complaint.

The Department agrees that the safe harbor, as proposed, is redundant, especially in light of the revisions to § 106.44(a), requiring a recipient to offer supportive measures to a complainant. As this safe harbor is not included in these final regulations, this safe harbor does not provide a way for a recipient to avoid responsibility.

For reasons discussed above, the Department declines to revise the final regulations to include a statute of limitations or similar time limit on filing a formal complaint but as discussed in the "Formal Complaint" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, the Department has revised the final regulations to provide that at the time of filing a formal complaint, the complainant must be participating in or attempting to participate in the recipient's education program or activity. This provides a reasonable condition on a complainant's ability to require a recipient to investigate, based on the complainant's connection to the recipient's education program or activity rather than by imposing a statute of limitations or similar time-based deadline. A complainant may be "attempting to participate" in the recipient's education program or activity in a broad variety of circumstances that do not depend on a complainant being, for instance, enrolled as a student or employed as an employee. A complainant may be "attempting to participate," for example, where the complainant has withdrawn from the school due to alleged sexual harassment and expresses a desire to re-enroll if the recipient responds appropriately to the sexual harassment allegations, or if the complainant has graduated but would like to participate in alumni events at the school, or if the complainant is on a leave of absence to seek counseling to recover from trauma. In addition, the Department has also revised the final regulations to provide in § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) that a recipient has the discretion to dismiss a formal complaint against a respondent who is no longer enrolled or employed by the recipient. While these provisions are not an express limit on the amount of time a complainant has to file a formal complaint, the Department believes these provisions help address commenters' concerns about being forced to expend resources investigating situations where one or both parties have no affiliation with the recipient, without arbitrarily or unreasonably imposing a deadline on complainants, in recognition that complainants sometimes do not report or desire to pursue a formal process in the immediate aftermath of a sexual harassment incident.

Changes: The Department does not include the safe harbor provision proposed in the NPRM as § 106.44(b)(3). The Department adds a mandate to § 106.44(b)(1) that the recipient must comply with § 106.44(a), with or without a formal complaint.

Section 106.44(b)(2) OCR Will Not Re-weigh the Evidence

Comments: Some commenters appreciated that the proposed rules contained an express guarantee that an institution will not be deemed deliberately indifferent solely because the Assistant Secretary would have reached a different determination regarding responsibility based on an independent weighing of the evidence. Some commenters expressed concerns that § 106.44(b)(2) would result in a lack of accountability or oversight for how schools or colleges handle sexual harassment complaints. Other commenters contended that this provision would unjustifiably reduce the Department's oversight unless a school's actions are clearly unreasonable. Some commenters asserted that the provision would improperly defer to a school district's determination, which commenters argued is not always the appropriate way to ensure Title IX accountability. A number of commenters felt that § 106.44(b)(2) would spur more civil lawsuits to hold schools accountable, because the Department would no longer be holding schools accountable.

Several commenters argued that the proposed provision would negatively impact OCR's ability to investigate non-compliance under Title IX, which would dangerously lower the bar of compliance and signal that a bare, minimal response to sexual harassment would suffice. Other commenters warned that the provision would limit OCR's ability to evaluate a school's response to sexual harassment, which would effectively narrow over 20 years of Title IX enforcement standards. Several commenters expressed their belief that OCR plays a key role as an independent, impartial investigator. For example, one commenter argued that OCR, as an independent entity, is more qualified than a school to perform an impartial investigation because the school has its own financial interests at stake and is thus less likely to identify inaccuracies in its own procedures. Another commenter asserted that OCR's independent weighing of evidence is a relevant factor because it may allow OCR to identify patterns or practices of shielding respondents or favoring complainants; the commenter argued that OCR should, after a thorough investigation, have discretion to decide if a school's determination regarding responsibility was discriminatory.

Some commenters expressed concern that proposed § 106.44(b)(2) was one-sided in a way that favored only respondents, because the language in the proposed provision would give deference to the school's determinations only where a respondent has been found not responsible.

Commenters argued that as proposed, § 106.44(b)(2) would require OCR investigators to close investigations even if OCR found gross or malicious procedural violations affecting the determination reached by the school, as long as the school had determined the respondent to be not responsible. Another commenter expressed concern that a deferential procedural review by OCR may incentivize schools to find in favor of respondents so as to avoid OCR scrutiny; commenters argued that this would be perceived as biased against complainants, may chill reporting of sexual harassment at the school level, and would discourage complainants from filing OCR complaints alleging procedural defects that led to erroneous findings of non-responsibility.

Another commenter asserted that proposed § 106.44(b)(2) was inconsistent with Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) practices with respect to employee sexual harassment claims; the commenter stated that the EEOC never defers to an employer's conclusion but conducts its own investigation and makes an independent assessment of the facts so that employers do not avoid liability merely by conducting exculpatory internal investigations. The commenter also asserted that applying § 106.44(b)(2) to employee sexual harassment claims would conflict with U.S. Department of Justice equal employment opportunity coordination regulations' requirement that a referring agency must give due weight to an EEOC determination of reasonable cause to believe that Title VII has been violated,[943] which OCR could not give if it instead gave conclusive weight to a recipient's contrary factual determination.

[943] 28 CFR 42.610(a).

Conversely, some commenters expressed support for § 106.44(b)(2). Commenters asserted that this provision, combined with other provisions in the proposed rules, would assist colleges and universities in ensuring an impartial, transparent, and fair process for both complainants and respondents, while also providing institutions flexibility reflecting their unique attributes (e.g., size, student population, location, mission). Several commenters expressed support for OCR not "second guessing" a school's response to incidents of sexual harassment. One commenter asserted that the provision was reasonable because OCR should not intrude into a school's decision making based on OCR's own weighing of the evidence.

One commenter expressed confusion as to whether OCR would defer to schools' determinations about sex discrimination not involving sexual harassment, or in instances when a person who filed a complaint with a recipient could have filed directly with OCR. Another commenter suggested clarifying that further scrutiny by OCR is not barred by this provision and may be called for if a responsibility determination seems to hold little basis.

Discussion: We appreciate commenters' concerns about, and support of, § 106.44(b)(2). The intent of this provision is to convey that the Department will not overturn the outcome of a Title IX grievance process solely based on whether the Department might have weighed the evidence in the case differently from how the recipient's decision-maker weighed the evidence.

This provision does not limit OCR's ability to evaluate a school's response to sexual harassment, and it does not narrow Title IX enforcement standards; OCR retains its full ability, and responsibility, to oversee recipients' adherence to the requirements of Title IX, including requirements imposed under these final regulations. The Department agrees with commenters who stated that OCR has special qualifications that enable OCR to perform independent, impartial investigations into whether recipients have violated Title IX and Title IX regulations. The Department will continue to vigorously enforce recipients' Title IX obligations.[944] The Department believes that the § 106.45

---

[944] See further discussion in the "Section 106.3(a) Remedial Action" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble, regarding remedies the Department may pursue in administrative enforcement actions against recipients.

grievance process prescribes fair procedures likely to result in reliable outcomes; however, when a recipient does not comply with the requirements of § 106.45, nothing in § 106.44(b)(2) precludes the Department from holding the recipient accountable for violating these final regulations. Refraining from second guessing the determination reached by a recipient's decision-maker solely because the evidence could have been weighed differently does not prevent OCR from identifying and correcting any violations the recipient may have committed during the Title IX grievance process. The deference given to the recipient's determination regarding responsibility in § 106.44(b)(2) does not preclude OCR from overturning a determination regarding responsibility where setting aside the recipient's determination is necessary to remedy a recipient's violations of these final regulations. Rather, § 106.44(b)(2) promotes finality for parties and recipients by stating that OCR will not overturn determinations just because OCR would have weighed the evidence in the case differently. To clarify this point, we have revised § 106.44(b)(2) to use the phrase "solely because" instead of "merely because." Nothing about § 106.44(b)(2) prevents OCR from taking into account the determination regarding responsibility as one of the factors OCR considers in deciding whether a recipient has complied with these final regulations, and whether any violations of these final regulations may require setting aside the determination regarding responsibility in order to remediate a recipient's violations.

If a recipient has not complied with any provision of the final regulations, nothing in § 106.44(b)(2) prevents OCR from holding the recipient accountable for non-compliance. The intent of the provision is to assure recipients that because the § 106.45 grievance process contains robust procedural and substantive requirements designed to produce reliable outcomes, OCR will not substitute its judgment for that of the recipient's decision-maker with respect to weighing the relevant evidence at issue in a particular case.

We believe that this limited deference also serves the interests of complainants and respondents in resolving sexual harassment allegations, by limiting the circumstances under which a "final" determination reached by the recipient may be subject to being setting aside and requiring the parties to go through a grievance process for a second time. As an example, if a decision-maker evaluates the relevant evidence in a case and judges one witness to be more credible than another witness, or finds one item of relevant evidence to be more persuasive than another item of relevant evidence, § 106.44(b)(2) provides that OCR will not set aside the determination regarding responsibility solely because OCR would have found the other witness more credible or the other item of evidence more persuasive. It does not mean that OCR would refrain from holding the recipient accountable for violations of the decision-maker's obligations, for instance to avoid basing credibility determinations on a party's status as a complainant, respondent, or witness.[945] This provision does not meant that OCR would refrain from, for instance, independently determining that evidence deemed relevant by the decision-maker was in fact irrelevant and should not have been relied upon.[946] Violations of these final regulations may indeed result in a recipient's determination regarding responsibility being set aside by OCR, but determinations will not be overturned

[945] Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii).

[946] E.g., § 106.45(b)(6) (deeming questions and evidence about a complainant's prior sexual history to be irrelevant, with limited exceptions); § 106.45(b)(1)(x) (barring use of privileged information in the grievance process).

"solely" because OCR would have weighed the evidence differently.

Some commenters understood this provision to work in a one-sided way, giving recipients' determinations regarding responsibility deference only where a respondent has been found not responsible; one commenter reached this conclusion based on the provision's reference to "deliberate indifference" which is a theory usually only raised by complainants challenging the sufficiency of a recipient's response to sexual harassment. The Department appreciates these commenters' concerns; we intend this provision to apply equally to all outcomes, regardless of whether the determination found a respondent responsible or not responsible. For this reason, the provision uses the phrase "determination regarding responsibility"

(emphasis added) and not determination of responsibility.[947] However, to clarify that this provision applies to all determinations of the outcome of a Title IX grievance process regardless of whether the respondent was found responsible or not responsible, we have revised § 106.44(b)(2) by adding "or otherwise evidence of discrimination

[947] We use the phrase "determination of responsibility" (emphasis added) to describe a finding that the respondent is responsible for perpetrating sexual harassment, and "determination regarding responsibility" to describe a determination irrespective of whether that determination has found the respondent responsible, or not responsible. E.g., compare §§ 106.45(b)(1)(i) and 106.45(b)(1)(vi) with §§ 106.45(b)(1)(iv), 106.45(b)(2), 106.45(b)(5)(i), 106.45(b)(5)(vi)-(vii), 106.45(b)(6) through 106.45(b)(10).

under title IX by the recipient" so that the reference in this provision to "deliberate indifference" is not misunderstood to exclude theories of sex discrimination commonly raised by respondents after being found responsible. This additional phrase in § 106.44(b)(2) clarifies that this provision operates neutrally to all determinations regarding responsibility. The Department will not overturn the recipient's finding solely because the Department would have reached a different determination based on an independent weighing of the evidence, irrespective of whether the recipient found in favor of the complainant or the respondent. Whether the recipient found the respondent not responsible (and thus a complainant might allege deliberate indifference) or the recipient found the respondent responsible (and thus a respondent might allege sex discrimination under Title IX on a theory such as selective enforcement or erroneous outcome), this provision would equally apply to give deference to the recipient's determination where the challenge to the determination is solely based on whether the Department might have weighed the evidence differently.

In no manner does this limited deference by the Department restrict the Department's ability to identify patterns or practices of sex discrimination, or to investigate allegations of a recipient committing gross or malicious violations of Title IX or these final regulations. This provision gives a recipient deference only as to the decision-maker's weighing of evidence with respect to a determination regarding responsibility. Section 106.44(b)(2) simply clarifies OCR's role and standard of review under these final regulations, by providing that OCR will not conduct de novo reviews of determinations absent allegations that the recipient failed in some way to comply with Title IX or these final regulations. The provision is intended to alleviate potential confusion recipients may feel about needing to successfully predict how the Department would make factual determinations "in the shoes" of the recipient's decision-maker.

Indeed, it would be impractical and unhelpful, for all parties, if the Department conducted de novo reviews of all recipient determinations. Doing so would contravene the Department's goal of providing consistency, predictability, transparency, and reasonably prompt resolution, in Title IX grievance processes. The Department disagrees that § 106.44(b)(2) "dangerously" lowers the bar of compliance by signaling that recipients need only provide a "bare minimum response" to sexual harassment. The requirements of the final regulations do not constitute a low bar; rather, these final regulations expect – and the Department will hold recipients accountable for – responses to sexual harassment allegations that support complainants and treat both parties fairly by complying with specific, mandatory obligations. For instance, under the final regulations recipients are required to offer supportive measures to every complainant regardless of whether a grievance process is ever initiated.[948] When a recipient does investigate a complainant's sexual harassment allegations, the final regulations prescribe a grievance process that lays out clear, practical steps for processing a formal complaint of Title IX sexual harassment, including requirements that recipients: treat complainants and respondents equitably by providing remedies for complainants when a respondent is found responsible, and a grievance process prior to imposing disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures, against a respondent;[949] objectively evaluate all relevant evidence and give both parties equal opportunity to present witnesses and evidence;[950] not harbor a bias or conflict of interest against either party;[951] and resolve the allegations under designated, reasonably prompt time frames.[952] The Department will hold recipients

---

[948] Section 106.44(a).

[949] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i).
[950] Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii); § 106.45(b)(5)(ii).
[951] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).
[952] Section 106.45(b)(1)(v).

accountable to follow these, and all the other, requirements set forth in § 106.45, whether failure to comply affected the complainant, the respondent, or both parties.

The Department does not agree that § 106.44(b)(2) will lead to increased litigation. The final regulations require recipients to protect complainants' equal educational access, while at the same time providing both parties due process protections throughout any grievance process, and § 106.44(b)(2) does not impair the Department's ability to hold recipients accountable for meeting these obligations. The Department does not believe that courts are inclined through private lawsuits to second guess a recipient's determinations regarding responsibility absent allegations that the recipient arrived at a determination due to discrimination, bias, procedural irregularity, deprivation of constitutionally guaranteed due process protections, or other defect that affected the outcome; in other words, the limited deference in § 106.44(b)(2) is no greater than the deference courts generally also give to recipients' determinations.[953] As [953] E.g., Wood v. Strickland, 420 U.S. 308, 326 (1975), overruled on other grounds by Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800 (1982) (absent "errors in the exercise of school officials' discretion" that "rise to the level of violations of specific constitutional guarantees" – as would reaching a determination in the complete "absence of evidence" which would be arbitrary and capricious – 42 U.S.C. 1983 "does not extend that right to relitigate in federal court evidentiary questions arising in school disciplinary proceedings"); Nicholas B. v. Sch. Comm. of Worcester, 412 Mass. 20, 23-24 (1992) (rejecting a student's claim that the student is "entitled to an independent judicial determination of the facts" concerning the school's finding that the student committed battery") (holding that "In deciding whether the discipline imposed was lawful, no de novo judicial fact-finding is required" and rejecting the contention that the State legislature, in enacting the State Civil Rights Act "intended a de novo review of the factual determinations of a school committee in an action challenging school discipline") (citing Wood, 420 U.S. at 326).

---

discussed in the "Litigation Risk" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble, the Department believes that these final regulations may have the effect of reducing litigation arising out of recipients' responses to sexual harassment.

These final regulations do not apply to the EEOC and do not dictate how the

---

The Department's view of restraint from conducting de novo review of recipient determinations regarding responsibility is consistent with judicial views recognizing that this type of limited restraint in no way impairs the ability of the courts to effectuate the purposes of Federal and State civil rights statutes. Similarly, § 106.44(b)(2) in no way impairs the Department's ability to effectuate the purposes of Title IX.

EEOC will administer Title VII or its implementing regulations. If the Assistant Secretary refers a complaint filed with OCR to the EEOC under Title VII or 28 CFR 42.605, then the EEOC will make a determination under its own regulations and not the Department's regulations. Even if the Department is required to give due weight to the EEOC's determination regarding Title VII under 28 CFR 42.610(a), the Department does not have authority to administer or enforce Title VII. There may be incidents of sexual harassment that implicate both Title VII and Title IX, and this Department will continue to administer Title IX and its implementing regulations and to defer to the EEOC to administer Title VII and its implementing regulations. Nothing in these final regulations precludes the Department from giving due weight to the EEOC's determination regarding Title VII under 28 CFR 42.610(a).[954] The Department recognizes that employers must fulfill their obligations under Title VII and also under Title IX. There is no inherent conflict between Title VII and Title IX, and the Department will construe Title IX and its implementing regulations in a manner to avoid an actual conflict

[954] 28 CFR 42.610(c) also states: "If the referring agency determines that the recipient has not violated any applicable civil rights provision(s) which the agency has a responsibility to enforce, the agency shall notify the complainant, the recipient, and the Assistant Attorney General and the Chairman of the EEOC in writing of the basis of that determination." Accordingly, these regulations contemplate that each agency enforces the civil rights provisions that the agency has the responsibility to enforce.

between an employer's obligations under Title VII and Title IX.

The Department wishes to clarify that § 106.44(b)(2) applies only to determinations regarding responsibility reached in a § 106.45 grievance process, which in turn applies only to formal complaints (defined in § 106.30 to mean allegations of sexual harassment); the § 106.45 grievance process does not apply to complaints about other types of sex discrimination. Complaints about sex discrimination that is not sexual harassment may be filed with the recipient for processing under the prompt and equitable grievance procedures that recipients must adopt under § 106.8. We appreciate the opportunity to clarify that no regulation or Department practice precludes a person from filing a complaint with OCR, whether or not the person also could have filed, or did file, a complaint with the school.

Changes: Section 106.44(b)(2) is revised to reference not only deliberate indifference but also other sex discrimination under Title IX, and to replace the word "merely" with "solely" in the phrase describing situations in which the Assistant Secretary would have reached a different determination based on an independent weighing of the evidence.

Additional Rules Governing Recipients' Responses to Sexual Harassment

Section 106.44(c) Emergency Removal

Overall Support and Opposition to Emergency Removals

Comments: Some commenters believed that § 106.44(c) provides due process protections for respondents while protecting campus safety. Some commenters supported this provision because it allows educational institutions to respond to situations of immediate danger, while protecting respondents from unfair or unnecessary removals. At least one commenter appreciated the latitude granted to educational institutions under § 106.44(c) to determine how to address safety emergencies arising from allegations of sexual harassment. Some commenters asserted that this provision appropriately reflects many schools' existing behavior risk assessment procedures. Several commenters supported § 106.44(c) and recounted personal stories of how a respondent was removed from classes, or from school, and the negative impact the removal had on that student's professional, academic, or extracurricular life because the removal seemed to presume the "guilt" of the respondent without allegations ever being proved.

Some commenters wanted to omit the emergency removal provision entirely, arguing that if administrators at the postsecondary level have the power to preemptively suspend or expel a student, on the pretext of an emergency, then every sexual misconduct situation could be deemed an emergency and respondents would never receive the due process protections of the § 106.45 grievance process. One commenter suggested that instead of permitting removals, all allegations of sexual harassment should simply go through a more rapid investigation so that the respondent may remain in school and victims are protected, while any falsely accused respondent is quickly exonerated. Some commenters requested that this removal power be limited because of the negative consequences of involuntary removal; one commenter suggested the provision be modified so that the removal must be "narrowly tailored" and "no more extensive than is strictly necessary" to mitigate the health or safety risk. One commenter asserted that this provision should also require that interim emergency removals be based on objective evidence and on current medical knowledge where appropriate, made by a licensed, qualified evaluator.

Some commenters asserted that emergency removals should not be used just because sexual harassment or assault has been alleged, and that § 106.44(c) should more clearly define what counts as an emergency. Some commenters argued that emergency removals should be allowed if the sexual harassment allegation involves rape, but no emergency removal should be allowed if the sexual harassment allegation involves offensive speech.

Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) is unclear as to what constitutes an immediate threat to health or safety. Several commenters argued that emergency removals should be restricted to instances where there is

“an immediate threat to safety” (not health), while other commenters argued this provision must be limited to “physical” threats to health or safety. Commenters argued that a “threat to health or safety” is too nebulous a concept to justify immediate removal from campus. According to one commenter, even speaking on campus in favor of the NPRM could be construed by schools or student activists as a threat to the emotional or mental "health or safety" of survivors, even though discussion of public policy is core political speech protected by the First Amendment.

One commenter stated that the use of the plural "students and employees" in § 106.44(c) may preclude an institution from taking emergency action when the immediate threat is to a single student or employee. Commenters argued that postsecondary institutions need the flexibility to address immediate threats to the safety of one student or employee in the same manner as threats to multiple students or employees. Some commenters asserted that § 106.44(c) would unreasonably limit a postsecondary institution's ability to protect persons and property, or to protect against potential disruption of the educational environment, and argued that an institution should have the discretion to invoke an emergency removal under circumstances beyond those listed in § 106.44(c). Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) is too limiting because it does not allow recipients to pursue an emergency removal where the respondent poses a threat of illegal conduct that is not about a health or safety emergency; commenters contended this will subject the complainant or others to ongoing illegal conduct just because it does not constitute a threat to health or safety. Commenters argued that in addition to a health or safety threat, this provision should consider the need to restore or preserve equal access to education as justification for emergency removals. One commenter asserted that a legitimate reason to institute an emergency removal of a respondent is a threat that the respondent may obstruct the collection of relevant information regarding the sexual harassment allegations at issue.

One commenter cited New York Education Law Article 129-B as an example of a detailed framework under which campus officials may conduct an individualized threat assessment, order an interim suspension, and provide due process; commenters asserted that courts hold that the due process required for an interim suspension does not need to consist of a full hearing.[955] Another commenter argued that this provision would constitute an unprecedented Federal preemption of Oregon's existing State and local student discipline rules, which establish the due process requirements for emergency removals from school.

---

[955] Commenters cited: Haidak v. Univ. of Mass. at Amherst, 299 F. Supp. 3d 242, 265-66 (D. Mass. 2018), aff'd in part, vacated in part, remanded by Haidak v. Univ. of Mass.-Amherst, 933 F.3d 56 (1st Cir. 2019).

Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) would create a higher level of due process for emergency removals in situations that involve alleged sexual harassment than for any other behavioral violation, and that the proposed rules are unclear whether this heightened procedural requirement is triggered only when a complainant alleges sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30, or is also triggered in any case where a complainant alleges sexual harassment that meets a State law definition or school code of conduct that may define sexual harassment more broadly than conduct meeting the § 106.30 definition.

Some commenters suggested that § 106.44(c) be modified to require periodic review of any emergency removal decision, to promote transparency and eliminate the possibility of leaving a respondent on interim suspension indefinitely. Commenters argued that immediate removal is very traumatic, and respondents who have been removed have a significant potential to react by harming themselves or others thus recipients should reduce these risks by ensuring a safe exit plan with adequate support for the respondent in place.

Commenters asserted that the goal should be to preserve educational opportunities for all parties involved to the extent possible, so § 106.44(c) should require recipients to provide alternative academic accommodations for respondents who are removed. Some commenters suggested that this provision should address a respondent's access to a recipient's program or activity, post-removal.

Because emergency removal is not premised on a finding of responsibility and occurs ex parte, commenters argued that the recipient should be required to provide a respondent with alternative access to the respondent's academic classes during the period of removal and that failure to do so would be sex discrimination against the respondent. Some commenters argued that as to a respondent who is removed

on an emergency basis and later found to be not responsible, the final regulations should require the recipient to mitigate the damage caused by the removal, for example, by allowing the respondent to retake classes or exams missed during the removal. One commenter suggested that a recipient should secure the personal property of the removed person (such as the respondent's vehicle) and be responsible for any loss or damage occurring to personal property during a removal.

Other commenters asserted that an individualized risk assessment should be required after every report of sexual assault. Commenters argued that because insurance statistics show a high degree of recidivism among college rapists, and because Title IX is also supposed to deter discrimination based on sex, schools should be required to consider the safety of other students on their campus if they know there is a possible sexual assailant in their midst.

One commenter suggested that licensing board procedures provide the best model for campus procedures because they offer the closest parallel to the types of behavior evaluated and issues at stake for respondents such as reputation, future livelihood, and future opportunities; the commenter asserted that court precedents hold that both public and private recipients must follow principles of fundamental due process and fundamental fairness in disciplinary processes,[956] and professional licensing board procedures adequately protect due process. One commenter applauded the Department for proposing to provide greater due process protections than

[956] Commenter cited: Boehm v. Univ. of Pa. Sch. of Veterinary Med., 573 A.2d 575, 578 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1990).

what current procedures typically provide; however, this commenter asserted that Native American students attending institutions funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs receive strong due process protections, including greater due process with respect to emergency removals than what § 106.44(c) provides, and the commenter contended that the stronger due process protections should be extended to non-

Native American institutions.[957] According to this commenter, unlike Native American students attending schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, non-Native American students are at risk for permanent removal from campus with potentially devastating consequences.

One commenter asserted that § 106.44(c) should explicitly require the recipient to comply with the Clery Act, notify appropriate authorities, and provide any necessary safety interventions. Another commenter stated that recipients should be required to publicly report the annual number of emergency removals the recipient conducts under § 106.44(c).

---

[957] Commenters cited: 25 CFR 42.1-42.10.

Some commenters asserted that recipients need to do more than simply remove a respondent from its education program or activity. Commenters argued that trauma from sexual assault may cause a complainant to withdraw from an education program or activity, including due to fear of seeing the respondent, suggested that more resources should be made available to complainants, and asserted that the final regulations should specify best practices addressing how a recipient should respond to immediate threats.

Discussion: We appreciate commenters' support for the emergency removal provision in § 106.44(c). Revised in ways explained below, § 106.44(c) provides that in situations where a respondent poses an immediate threat to the physical health and safety of any individual before an investigation into sexual harassment allegations concludes (or where no grievance process is pending), a recipient may

remove the respondent from the recipient's education programs or activities. A recipient may need to undertake an emergency removal in order to fulfill its duty not to be deliberately indifferent under § 106.44(a) and protect the safety of the recipient's community, and § 106.44(c) permits recipients to remove respondents in emergency situations that arise out of allegations of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30. Emergency removal may be undertaken in addition to implementing supportive measures designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education.[958] While we recognize that emergency removal may have serious consequences for a respondent, we decline to remove this provision because where a genuine emergency exists, recipients need the authority to remove a respondent while providing notice and opportunity for the respondent to challenge that decision.

[958] Section 106.44(a) requires a recipient to offer supportive measures to every complainant, including by having the Title IX Coordinator engage with the complainant in an interactive process that takes into account the complainant's wishes regarding available supportive measures.

The Department does not believe that rushing all allegations of sexual harassment or sexual assault through expedited grievance procedures adequately promotes a fair grievance process, and forbidding an emergency removal until conclusion of a grievance process (no matter how expedited such a process reasonably could be) might impair a recipient's ability to quickly respond to an emergency situation. The § 106.45 grievance process is designed to provide both parties with a prompt, fair investigation and adjudication likely to reach an accurate determination regarding the responsibility of the respondent for perpetrating sexual harassment. Emergency removal under

§ 106.44(c) is not a substitute for reaching a determination as to a respondent's responsibility for the sexual harassment allegations; rather, emergency removal is for the purpose of addressing imminent threats posed to any person's physical health or safety, which might arise out of the sexual harassment allegations. Upon reaching a determination that a respondent is responsible for sexual harassment, the

final regulations do not restrict a recipient's discretion to impose a disciplinary sanction against the respondent, including suspension, expulsion, or other removal from the recipient's education program or activity. Section 106.44(c) allows recipients to address emergency situations, whether or not a grievance process is underway, provided that the recipient first undertakes an individualized safety and risk analysis and provides the respondent notice and opportunity to challenge the removal decision. We do not believe it is necessary to restrict a recipient's emergency removal authority to removal decisions that are "narrowly tailored" to address the risk because § 106.44(c) adequately requires that the threat "justifies" the removal. If the high threshold for removal under § 106.44(c)

exists (i.e., an individualized safety and risk analysis determines the respondent poses an immediate threat to any person's physical health or safety), then we believe the recipient should have discretion to determine the appropriate scope and conditions of removal of the respondent from the recipient's education program or activity. Similarly, we decline to require recipients to follow more prescriptive requirements to undertake an emergency removal (such as requiring that the assessment be based on objective evidence, current medical knowledge, or performed by a licensed evaluator). While such detailed requirements might apply to a recipient's risk assessments under other laws, for the purposes of these final regulations under Title IX, the Department desires to leave as much flexibility as possible for recipients to address any immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any student or other individual. Nothing in these final regulations precludes a recipient from adopting a policy or practice of relying on objective evidence, current medical knowledge, or a licensed evaluator when considering emergency removals under § 106.44(c).

We agree that emergency removal is not appropriate in every situation where sexual harassment has been alleged, but only in situations where an individualized safety and risk analysis determines that an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any student or other individual justifies the removal, where the threat arises out of allegations of sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30. Because all the conduct that could constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 is serious conduct that jeopardizes a complainant's equal access to education, we decline to limit emergency removals only to instances where a complainant has alleged sexual assault or rape, or to prohibit emergency removals where the sexual harassment allegations involve verbal harassment. A threat posed by a respondent is not necessarily measured solely by the allegations made by the complainant; we have revised § 106.44(c) to add the phrase "arising from the allegations of sexual harassment" to clarify that the threat justifying a removal could consist of facts and circumstances "arising from" the sexual harassment allegations (and "sexual harassment" is a defined term, under § 106.30). For example, if a respondent threatens physical violence against the complainant in response to the complainant's allegations that the respondent verbally sexually harassed the complainant, the immediate threat to the complainant's physical safety posed by the respondent may "arise from" the sexual harassment allegations. As a further example, if a respondent reacts to being accused of sexual harassment by threatening physical self-harm, an immediate threat to the respondent's physical safety may "arise from" the allegations of sexual harassment and could justify an emergency removal. The "arising from" revision also clarifies that recipients do not need to rely on, or meet the requirements of, § 106.44(c) to address emergency situations that do not arise from sexual harassment allegations under Title IX (for example, where a student has brought a weapon to school unrelated to any sexual harassment allegations).

We are persuaded by commenters that § 106.44(c) should be clarified. The final regulations revise this provision to state that the risk posed by the respondent must be to the "physical" health or safety, of "any student or other individual," arising from the allegations of sexual harassment. These revisions help ensure that this provision applies to genuine emergencies involving the physical health or safety of one or more individuals (including the respondent, complainant, or any other individual) and not only multiple students or employees. We agree with commenters who asserted that adding the word "physical" before "health or safety" will help ensure that the emergency removal provision is not used inappropriately to prematurely punish respondents by relying on a person's mental or emotional "health or safety" to justify an emergency removal, as the emotional and mental well-being of complainants may be addressed by recipients via supportive measures as defined in § 106.30. The revision to § 106.44(c) adding the word "physical" before "health and safety" and changing "students or employees" to "any student or other individual" also addresses commenters' concerns that the proposed rules were not specific enough about what kind of threat justifies an emergency removal; the latter revision clarifies that the threat might be to the physical health or safety of one or more persons, including the complainant, the respondent themselves, or any other individual. We decline to remove "health" from the "physical health or safety" phrase in this provision because an emergency situation could arise from a threat to the physical health, or the physical safety, of a person, and because "health or safety" is a relatively recognized term used to describe emergency circumstances.[959]

We decline to add further bases that could justify an emergency removal under § 106.44(c). We recognize the importance of the need to restore or

[959] E.g., 20 U.S.C. 1232g(b)(1)(I) (allowing disclosure, without prior written consent, of personally identifiable information from a student's education records "subject to regulations of the Secretary, in connection with an emergency, appropriate persons if the knowledge of such information is necessary to protect the health or safety of the student or other persons"); 34 CFR 99.31(a)(10) and 34 CFR 99.36 (regulations implementing FERPA).

preserve equal access to education, but disagree that it should be a justification for emergency removal; supportive measures are intended to address restoration and preservation of equal educational access, while § 106.44(c) is intended to apply to genuine emergencies that justify essentially punishing a respondent (by separating the respondent from educational opportunities and benefits) arising out of sexual harassment allegations without having fairly, reliably determined whether the respondent is responsible for the alleged sexual harassment. As explained above, we have revised § 106.44(c) to apply only where the immediate threat to a person's physical health or safety arises from the allegations of sexual harassment; this clarifies that where a respondent poses a threat of illegal conduct (perhaps not constituting a threat to physical health or safety) that does not arise from the sexual harassment allegations, this provision does not apply. Nothing in these final regulations precludes a recipient from addressing a respondent's commission of illegal conduct under the recipient's own code of conduct, or pursuant to other laws, where such illegal conduct does not constitute sexual harassment as defined in § 106.30 or is not "arising from the sexual harassment allegations." We disagree that a recipient's assessment that a respondent poses a threat of obstructing the sexual harassment investigation, or destroying relevant evidence, justifies an emergency removal under this provision, because this provision is intended to ensure that recipients have authority and discretion to address health or safety emergencies arising out of sexual harassment allegations, not to address all forms of misconduct that a respondent might commit during a grievance process.

The Department appreciates commenters' concerns that State or local law may present other considerations or impose other requirements before an emergency removal can occur. To the extent that other applicable laws establish additional relevant standards for emergency removals, recipients should also heed such standards. To the greatest degree possible, State and local law ought to be reconciled with the final regulations, but to the extent there is a direct conflict, the final regulations prevail.[960] While commenters correctly note that a "full hearing" is not a constitutional due process requirement

---

[960] See discussion under the "Section 106.6(h) Preemptive Effect" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble; see also discussion under the "Spending Clause" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble.

in all interim suspension situations, § 106.44(c) does not impose a requirement to hold a "full hearing" and in fact, does not impose any pre-deprivation due process requirements; the opportunity for a respondent to challenge an emergency removal decision need only occur post-deprivation. For reasons described in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department has determined that postsecondary institutions must hold live hearings to reach determinations regarding responsibility for sexual harassment. However, because § 106.44(c) is intended to give recipients authority to respond quickly to emergencies, and does not substitute for a determination regarding the responsibility of the respondent for the sexual harassment allegations at issue, recipients need only provide respondents the basic features of due process (notice and opportunity), and may do so after removal rather than before a removal occurs. An emergency removal under § 106.44(c) does not authorize a recipient to impose an interim suspension or expulsion on a respondent because the respondent has been accused of sexual harassment. Rather, this provision authorizes a recipient to remove a respondent from the recipient's education program or activity (whether or not the recipient labels such a removal as an interim suspension or expulsion, or uses any different label to describe the removal) when an individualized safety and risk analysis determines that an imminent threat to the physical health or safety of any person, arising from sexual harassment allegations, justifies removal.

Section 106.44(c) expressly acknowledges that recipients may be obligated under applicable disability laws to conduct emergency removals differently with respect to individuals with disabilities, and these final regulations do not alter a recipient's obligation to adhere to the IDEA, Section 504, or the ADA. Due to a recipient's obligations under applicable State laws or disability laws, uniformity with respect to how a recipient addresses all cases involving immediate threats to physical health and safety may not be possible. However, the Department believes that § 106.44(c) appropriately balances the need for schools to remove a respondent posing an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any person, with the need to ensure that such an ability is not used inappropriately, for instance to bypass

the prohibition in § 106.44(a) and § 106.45(b)(1)(i) against imposition of disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures against a respondent without first following the § 106.45 grievance process. The Department does not believe that a lower threshold for an emergency removal appropriately balances these interests, even if this means that emergency removals arising from allegations of sexual harassment must meet a higher standard than when a threat arises from conduct allegations unrelated to Title IX sexual harassment. In response to commenters' reasonable concerns about the potential for confusion, we have added the phrase "arising from the allegations of sexual harassment" (and "sexual harassment" is a defined term under § 106.30) into this provision to clarify that this emergency removal provision only governs situations that arise under Title IX, and not under State or other laws that might apply to other emergency situations.

The Department does not see a need to add language stating that the emergency removal must be periodically reviewed. Emergency removal is not a substitute for the § 106.45 grievance process, and § 106.45(b)(1)(v) requires reasonably prompt time frames for that grievance process. We acknowledge that a recipient could remove a respondent under § 106.44(c) without a formal complaint having triggered the § 106.45 grievance process; in such situations, the requirements in § 106.44(c) giving the respondent notice and opportunity to be heard post-removal suffice to protect a respondent from a removal without a fair process for challenging that outcome, and the Department does not believe it is necessary to require periodic review of the removal decision. We decline to impose layers of complexity onto the emergency removal process, leaving procedures in recipients' discretion; in many cases, recipients will develop a "safe exit plan" as part of implementing an emergency removal, and accommodate students who have been removed on an emergency basis with alternative means to continue academic coursework during a removal period or provide for a respondent to re-take classes upon a return from an emergency removal, or secure personal property left on a recipient's campus when a respondent is removed. We disagree that a recipient's failure to refusal to take any of the foregoing steps necessarily constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX, although a recipient would violate Title IX by, for example, applying different policies to female respondents than to male respondents removed on an emergency basis. Nothing in the final regulations prevents students who have been removed from asserting rights under State law or contract against the recipient arising from a removal under this provision.

We decline to require an individualized safety and risk analysis upon every reported sexual assault, because the § 106.45 grievance process is designed to bring all relevant evidence concerning sexual harassment allegations to the decision-maker's attention so that a determination regarding responsibility is reached fairly and reliably. A recipient is obligated under § 106.44(a) to provide a complainant with a non-deliberately indifferent response to a sexual assault report, which includes offering supportive measures designed to protect the complainant's safety, and if a recipient does not provide a complainant with supportive measures, then the recipient must document the reasons why such a response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances pursuant to §

106.45(b)(10)(ii). Emergency removals under § 106.44(c) remain an option for recipients to respond to situations where an individualized safety and risk analysis determines that a respondent poses an immediate threat to health or safety.

The Department appreciates commenters' assertions that § 106.44(c) should provide more due process protections, similar to those applied in professional licensing board cases or under Federal laws that apply to schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs; however, we believe that § 106.44(c) appropriately balances a recipient's need to protect individuals from emergency threats, with providing adequate due process to the respondent under such emergency circumstances. Notice and an opportunity to be heard constitute the fundamental features of procedural due process, and the Department does not wish to prescribe specific procedures that a recipient must apply in emergency situations. Accordingly, the Department does not wish to adopt the same due process protections that commenters asserted are applied in professional licensing revocation proceedings, or that are provided to Native American students in schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Department acknowledges that schools receiving funding from the Bureau of Indian Affairs must provide even greater due process protections than what these final regulations require, but these greater due process protections do not conflict with these final regulations. These final regulations govern a variety of recipients, including elementary and secondary schools and postsecondary institutions, but also recipients that are not educational institutions; for example, some libraries and museums are recipients of Federal financial assistance operating education programs or activities. These final regulations provide the appropriate amount of due process for a wide variety of recipients of Federal financial assistance with respect to a recipient's response to emergency situations.

As discussed in the "Clery Act" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble, postsecondary institutions subject to these Title IX regulations may also be subject to the Clery Act. We decline to state in § 106.44(c) that recipients must also comply with the Clery Act because we do not wish to create confusion about whether § 106.44(c) applies only to postsecondary institutions (because the Clery Act does not apply to elementary and secondary schools). We decline to require recipients to notify authorities, provide safety interventions, or annually report the number of emergency removals conducted under § 106.44(c), because we do not wish to prescribe requirements on recipients beyond what we have determined is necessary to fulfill the purpose of this provision: granting recipients authority and discretion to appropriately respond to emergency situations arising from sexual harassment allegations. Nothing in these final regulations precludes a recipient from notifying authorities, providing safety interventions, or reporting the number of emergency removals, to comply with other laws requiring such steps or based on a recipient's desire to take such steps. For similar reasons, we decline to require recipients to adopt "best practices" for responding to threats. We note that these final regulations require recipients to offer supportive measures to every complainant, and do not preclude a recipient from providing resources to complainants or respondents.

Changes: We have revised § 106.44(c) so that a respondent removed on an emergency basis must pose an immediate threat to the "physical"

health or safety (adding the word "physical") of "any student or other individual" (replacing the phrase "students or employees"). We have also revised the proposed language to clarify that the justification for emergency removal must arise from allegations of sexual harassment under Title IX.

Intersection with the IDEA, Section 504, and ADA

Comments: Some commenters applauded the "saving clause" in § 106.44(c) acknowledging that the respondent may have rights under the IDEA, Section 504, or the ADA. Several commenters asserted that § 106.44(c) would create uncertainty regarding the interplay between Title IX and relevant disabilities laws, which would further exacerbate the uncertainty regarding involuntary removal of students who pose a threat to themselves. Other commenters stated that the result of this provision would likely be different handling of Title IX cases for students with disabilities versus students without disabilities because of the requirements of the IDEA, Section 504, and the ADA. Some commenters believed this provision (and the proposed rules overall) appear to give consideration to the rights and needs of respondents with disabilities, without similar consideration for the rights of complainants or witnesses with disabilities. Commenters asserted that § 106.44(c) is subject to problematic interpretation because by expressly referencing the IDEA, Section 504, and the ADA this provision might wrongly encourage schools to remove students with disabilities because of implicit bias against students with disabilities, especially students with intellectual disabilities.

One commenter suggested that § 106.44(c) should track the definition of "direct threat" used in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's (EEOC) regulations, upheld by the Supreme Court,[961] and as outlined in

---

[961] Commenters cited: Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Echazabal, 536 U.S. 73 (2002).

ADA regulations[962] because this would give recipients and respondents a clearer standard and reduce the chances that removal decisions will be based on generalizations, ignorance, fear, patronizing attitudes, or stereotypes regarding individuals with disabilities.

Some commenters argued that this provision conflicts with the IDEA,

---

[962] Commenters cited: 28 CFR 35.139(b) ("In determining whether an individual poses a direct threat to the health or safety of others, a public entity must make an individualized assessment, based on reasonable judgment that relies on current medical knowledge or on the best available objective evidence, to ascertain: the nature, duration, and severity of the risk; the probability that the potential injury will actually occur; and whether reasonable modifications of policies, practices, or procedures or the provision of auxiliary aids or services will mitigate the risk.").

Section 504, and the ADA, and that removals are not as simple as conducting a mere risk assessment, because the IDEA governs emergency removal of students in elementary school who are receiving special education and related services.[963] Commenters asserted that under the IDEA, a school administrator cannot make a unilateral risk assessment, and

---

[963] Commenters cited: Glen by & through Glen v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Sch. Bd. of Educ., 903 F. Supp. 918, 935 (W.D.N.C. 1995) ("[W]here student poses an immediate threat, [the school] may temporarily suspend up to 10 school days.").

placement decisions cannot be made by an administrator alone; rather, commenters argued, these decisions must be made by a team that includes the parent and relevant members of the IEP (Individualized Education Program) Team and if the conduct in question was a manifestation of a disability, the recipient cannot make a unilateral threat assessment and remove a child from school, absent extreme circumstances.

These commenters further argued that sometimes certain behaviors are the result or manifestation of a disability, despite being sexually offensive, e.g., a student with Tourette's syndrome blurting out sexually offensive language. Commenters argued that under disability laws schools cannot remove those students from school without complying with the IDEA, Section 504, and the ADA. One commenter

recommended that § 106.44(c) require, at a minimum, training for Title IX administrators on the intersection among Title IX and applicable disability laws. In the college setting, the commenter further recommended that Title IX Coordinators not be permitted to impose supportive measures that involve removal without feedback from administrators from the institution's office of disability services, provided that the student is registered with the pertinent office. If a student has an Individualized Education Plan (IEP) in secondary school, commenters recommended that the administration immediately call for a team meeting to determine the next steps.

Other commenters asserted that any language under § 106.44(c) must make clear that the free appropriate public education (FAPE) to which students with disabilities are entitled must continue, even in circumstances when emergency removal is deemed necessary under Title IX. Given this, one commenter recommended that the language in § 106.44(c) clarify that this provision does not supersede rights under disability laws.

Some commenters, while expressing overall support for § 106.44(c), requested additional guidance on the intersection of Title IX, the IDEA, and the ADA, and how elementary and secondary schools would implement § 106.44(c). The commenters asserted that the final regulations should be explicit that regardless of a student's IEP or "504 plan" under the IDEA or Section 504, the student is not allowed to engage in threatening or harmful behavior and that this would be similar to the response a campus might have to any other serious violation, such as bringing a firearm to class. Commenters also argued that the final regulations should clarify that separation of elementary and secondary school students with disabilities from classroom settings should be rare and only when done in compliance with the IDEA. Commenters argued that recipients must be made aware that a student with a disability does not have to be eligible for a free appropriate public education (FAPE) in order for § 106.44(c) to apply, and that recipients must not be misled into thinking there are different standards for elementary and secondary school and postsecondary education environments when it comes to equal access to educational opportunities.

Other commenters argued that § 106.44(c) may violate compulsory educational laws by removing elementary-age students from school on an emergency basis. When an elementary school student is removed under § 106.44(c), commenters wondered whether the school is supposed to have a designated site for housing or educating removed students during the investigation.

Discussion: Section 106.44(c) states that this provision does not modify any rights under the IDEA, Section 504, or the ADA. In the final regulations, we removed reference to certain titles of the ADA and refer instead to the "Americans with Disabilities Act" so that application of any portion of the ADA requires a recipient to meet ADA obligations while also complying with these final regulations. We disagree that this provision will create ambiguity or otherwise supersede rights that students have under these disability statutes. Additionally, we do not believe that expressly acknowledging recipients' obligations under disability laws incentivizes recipients to remove respondents with disabilities; rather, reference in this provision to those disability laws will help protect respondents from emergency removals that do not also protect the respondents' rights under applicable disability laws.

With respect to implicit bias against students with disabilities, recipients must be careful to ensure that all emergency removal proceedings are impartial, without bias or conflicts of interest[964] and the final regulations do not preclude a recipient from providing training to employees, including Title IX personnel, regarding a recipient's

---

[964] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) requires all Title IX Coordinators (and investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolution processes) to be free from conflicts of interest or bias against complainants and respondents generally or against an individual complainant or respondent, and requires training for such personnel that includes (among other things) how to serve impartially. A "respondent" under § 106.30 means any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of conduct that could constitute sexual harassment; thus, a Title IX Coordinator interacting with a respondent undergoing an emergency removal must serve impartially, without conflict of interest or bias.

obligations under both Title IX and applicable disability laws. Any different treatment between students without disabilities and students with disabilities with respect to emergency removals, may occur due to a recipient's need to comply with the IDEA, Section 504, the ADA, or other disability laws, but would not be permissible due to bias or stereotypes against individuals with disabilities.

As explained in the "Directed Question 5: Individuals with Disabilities" subsection of the "Directed Questions" section of this preamble, recipients have an obligation to comply with applicable disability laws with respect to complainants as well as respondents (and any other individual involved in a Title IX matter, such as a witness), and the reference to disability laws in § 106.44(c) does not obviate recipients' responsibilities to comply with disability laws with respect to other applications of these final regulations.

The Department appreciates commenters' suggestion to mirror the "direct threat" language utilized in ADA regulations; however, we have instead revised § 106.44(c) to refer to the physical health or safety of "any student or other individual" because this language better aligns this provision

with the FERPA health and safety emergency exception, and avoids the confusion caused by the "direct threat" language under ADA regulations because those regulations refer to a "direct threat to the health or safety of others"[965] which does not clearly encompass a threat to the respondent themselves (e.g., where a respondent

[965] 28 CFR 35.139(b) ("In determining whether an individual poses a direct threat to the health or safety of others, a public entity must make an individualized assessment, based on reasonable judgment that relies on current medical knowledge or on the best available objective evidence, to ascertain: the nature, duration, and severity of the risk; the probability that the potential injury will actually occur; and whether reasonable modifications of policies, practices, or procedures or the provision of auxiliary aids or services will mitigate the risk.") (emphasis added).

threatens self-harm). By revising § 106.44(c) to refer to a threat to the physical health or safety "of any student or other individual" this provision does encompass a respondent's threat of self-harm (when the threat arises from the allegations of sexual harassment), and is aligned with the language used in FERPA's health or safety exception.[966]

---

[966] E.g., 20 U.S.C. 1232g(b)(1)(I) (allowing disclosure, without prior written consent, of personally identifiable information from a student's education records "subject to regulations of the Secretary, in connection with an emergency, appropriate persons if the knowledge of such information is necessary to protect the health or safety of the student or other persons"); see also regulations implementing FERPA, 34 CFR 99.31(a)(10) and 99.36.

We note that recipients still need to comply with applicable disability laws, including the ADA, in making emergency removal decisions.

The Department appreciates commenters' varied concerns that complying with these final regulations, and with disability laws, may pose challenges for recipients, including specific challenges for elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions, because of the intersection among the IDEA, Section 504, the ADA, and how to conduct an emergency removal under these final regulations under Title IX. The Department will offer technical assistance to recipients regarding compliance with laws under the Department's enforcement authority. However, the Department does not believe that recipients' obligations under multiple civil rights laws requires changing the emergency removal provision in § 106.44(c) because this is an important provision to ensure that recipients have flexibility to balance the need to address emergency situations with fair treatment of a respondent who has not yet been proved responsible for sexual harassment. The Department does not believe that applicable disability laws, or other State laws, render a recipient unable to comply with all relevant legal obligations. For instance, with respect to compulsory education laws, nothing in § 106.44(c) relieves a recipient from complying with State laws requiring that students under a certain age receive government-provided education services. As a further example, nothing in § 106.44(c) prevents a recipient from involving a student's IEP team before making an emergency removal decision, and §

106.44(c) does not require a recipient to remove a respondent where the recipient has determined that the threat posed by the respondent, arising from the sexual harassment allegations, is a manifestation of a disability such that the recipient's discretion to remove the respondent is constrained by IDEA requirements.

Changes: We have replaced the phrase "students or employees" with the phrase "any student or other individual" in § 106.44(c) and removed specification of certain titles of the ADA, instead referencing the whole of the ADA.

Post-Removal Challenges

Comments: Some commenters supported § 106.44(c) giving respondents notice and opportunity to challenge the removal immediately after the removal, because during a removal a respondent might lose a significant amount of instructional time while waiting for a grievance proceeding to conclude, and being out of school can harm the academic success and emotional health of the removed student. Other commenters asserted that respondents should not be excluded from a recipient's education program or activity until conclusion of a grievance process, and a post-removal challenge after the fact is insufficient to assure due process for respondents, especially because § 106.44(c) does not specify requirements for the time frame or procedures used for a challenging the removal decision.

Some commenters argued that the ability of a removed respondent to challenge the removal would pose an unnecessary increased risk to the safety of the community, especially because § 106.44(c) already requires the recipient to determine the removal was justified by an individualized safety and risk analysis. Commenters argued that a school's emergency removal decision should stand until a threat assessment team has met and given a recommendation to affirm or overrule the decision.

Some commenters asserted that § 106.44(c) is ambiguous about the right to a post-removal challenge and argued that the failure to provide more clarity is problematic because it is unclear if the "immediate" challenge must occur minutes, hours, one day, or several days after the removal. Commenters argued that a plain language interpretation of "immediately" may require the challenge to occur minutes after the suspension, but this could jeopardize the safety of the complainant and the community, because the very point of an interim suspension is to remove a known risk from campus. Other commenters argued that requiring an "immediate" post-removal challenge could undermine the respondent's due process rights, because the respondent might not be physically present on campus when the interim suspension (e.g., removal) is issued. Some commenters argued that there should be a delay between when the removal occurred and when the opportunity to challenge occurs, because students and employees are often afraid of providing information to college administrations due to legitimate, reasonable fear for their own safety. Commenters requested that this provision be modified to give the respondent a challenge opportunity "as soon as reasonably practicable" rather than "immediately." Commenters asked whether providing a challenge opportunity "immediately" must, or could, be the same as the "prompt" time frames required under § 106.45.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support of the post-removal challenge opportunity provided in § 106.44(c). The Department disagrees with commenters who suggested that no challenge to removals ought to be possible, and believes that § 106.44(c) appropriately balances the interests involved in emergency situations. We do not believe that prescribing procedures for the post-removal challenge is necessary or desirable, because this provision ensures that respondents receive the essential due process requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard while leaving recipients flexibility to use procedures that a recipient deems most appropriate.[967]

---

[967] E.g., Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 582-83 (1975) ("Students whose presence poses a continuing danger to persons or property or an ongoing threat of disrupting the academic process may be immediately removed from school. In such cases, the necessary notice and rudimentary hearing should follow as soon as practicable").

These final regulations aim to improve the perception and reality of the fairness and accuracy by which a recipient resolves allegations of sexual harassment, and therefore the § 106.45 grievance process prescribes a consistent framework and specific procedures for resolving formal complaints of sexual harassment. By contrast, § 106.44(c) is not designed to resolve the underlying allegations of sexual harassment against a respondent, but rather to ensure that recipients have the authority and discretion to appropriately handle emergency situations that may arise from allegations of sexual harassment. As discussed above, the final regulations revise the language in § 106.44(c) to add the phrase "arising from the allegations of sexual harassment," which clarifies that the facts or circumstances that justify a removal might not be the same as the sexual harassment allegations but might "arise from" those allegations.

The Department disagrees that a post-removal challenge is unnecessary because the individualized safety and risk analysis already determined that removal was justified; the purpose of a true emergency removal is to authorize a recipient to respond to immediate threats even without providing the respondent with pre-deprivation notice and opportunity to be heard because this permits a recipient to protect the one or more persons whose physical health or safety may be in jeopardy. The respondent's first opportunity to challenge the removal (e.g., by presenting the recipient with facts that might contradict the existence of an immediate threat to physical health or safety) might be after the recipient already reached its determination that removal is justified, and due process principles (whether constitutional due process of law, or fundamental fairness) require that the respondent be given notice and opportunity to be heard.[968] Section 106.44(c) does not preclude a recipient from convening a threat assessment team to review the recipient's emergency removal determination, but § 106.44(c) still requires the recipient to give the respondent post-removal notice and opportunity to challenge the removal decision.

[968] Goss, 419 U.S. at 580 ("At the very minimum, therefore, students facing suspension and the consequent interference with a protected property interest must be given some kind of notice and afforded some kind of hearing.").

The Department expects the emergency removal process to be used in genuine emergency situations, but when it is used, recipients must provide an opportunity for a removed individual to challenge their removal immediately after the removal. The term "immediately" will be fact-specific, but is generally understood in the context of a legal process as occurring without delay, as soon as possible, given the circumstances. "Immediately" does not require a time frame of "minutes" because in the context of a legal proceeding the term immediately is not generally understood to mean an absolute exclusion of any time interval. "Immediately" does not imply the same time frame as the "reasonably prompt" time frames that govern the grievance process under § 106.45, because "immediately" suggests a more pressing, urgent time frame than "reasonable promptness." This is appropriate because § 106.44(c) does not require a recipient to provide the respondent with any pre-deprivation

notice or opportunity to be heard, so requiring post-deprivation due process protections "immediately" after the deprivation ensures that a respondent's interest in access to education is appropriately balanced against the recipient's interest in quickly addressing an emergency situation posed by a respondent's risk to the physical health or safety of any student or other individual. We decline to require the post-removal notice and challenge to be given "as soon as reasonably practicable" instead of "immediately" because that would provide the respondent less adequate post-deprivation due process protections.

Changes: None.

No Stated Time Limitation for the Emergency Removal

Comments: Some commenters viewed the absence of a time limitation with respect to how long an emergency removal could be as a source of harm to both respondents and complainants. Commenters asserted that, given how long the grievance process could take, students and employees removed from their education or employment until conclusion of the grievance process could experience considerable negative consequences. Commenters argued that the proposed rules should not encourage emergency removal, particularly not when other, less severe measures could be taken to ensure safety pending an investigation. Commenters proposed limiting an emergency removal to seven days, during which time an institution would determine in writing that an immediate threat to health or safety exists, warranting the emergency action, and if no such determination is reached, the respondent would be reinstated.

Discussion: The final regulations require schools to offer supportive measures to complainants and permit recipients to offer supportive measures to respondents. We decline to require emergency removals in every situation where a formal complaint triggers a grievance process. The grievance process is designed to conclude promptly, and the issue of whether a respondent needs to be removed on an emergency basis should not arise in most cases, since § 106.44(c) applies only where emergency removal is justified by an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any student or other individual. Revised § 106.44(a), and revised § 106.45(b)(1)(i), prohibit a recipient from imposing against a respondent disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, without following the § 106.45 grievance process. Emergency removal under § 106.44(c) constitutes an exception to those prohibitions, and should not be undertaken in every situation where sexual harassment has been alleged. Rather, emergency removal is appropriate only when necessary to address imminent threats to a person's physical health or safety arising from the allegations of sexual harassment.

The Department declines to put any temporal limitation on the length of a valid emergency removal, although nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from periodically assessing whether an immediate threat to physical health or safety is ongoing or has dissipated.

Changes: None.

"removal"

Comments: Commenters requested clarification in the following regards: Would removing a respondent from a class, or changing the respondent's class schedule, before a grievance process is completed (or where no formal complaint has initiated a grievance process), require a recipient to undertake emergency removal procedures? Under § 106.44(c) must a recipient remove a respondent from the entirety of recipient's education program or activity, or may a recipient choose to only remove the respondent to the extent the individual poses an emergency in a specific setting, i.e., a certain class, student organization, living space, athletic team, etc.?

Commenters argued that the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures and § 106.44(c) regarding emergency removal could lead to confusion among recipients about what steps they can take to protect a complainant's safety and access to education prior to conclusion of a grievance process, or where no formal complaint has initiated a grievance process. One commenter suggested modifying this provision to expressly permit partial exclusion from programs or activities by adding the phrase "or any part thereof."

Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) would make it too difficult to remove a respondent before the completion of a disciplinary proceeding absent an extreme emergency. Commenters suggested that the Department should consider a more nuanced approach that provides schools with a range of options, short of emergency removal, that are proportionate to the alleged misconduct and meet the needs of the victim. Commenters requested that § 106.44(c) be revised to allow an appropriate administrator (such as a dean of students), in consultation with the Title IX Coordinator, discretion to determine the appropriateness of an emergency removal based on a standard that is in the best interest of the institution.

Some commenters argued that even where an emergency threat exists, §

106.44(c) does not provide a time frame in which the recipient must make this emergency removal decision, leaving survivors vulnerable to daily contact with a dangerous respondent. Commenters asserted that recipients should be able to remove a respondent from a dorm or shared classes before conclusion of a disciplinary proceeding, particularly when it is clear that the survivor's education will be harmed

otherwise. Commenters asserted that 80 percent of rapes and sexual assaults are committed by someone known to the victim,[969] which means that it is highly likely that the victim and perpetrator share a dormitory, a class, or other aspect of the school environment and that § 106.44(c) (combined with the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures") leaves victims in continual

---

[969] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Special Report: Rape and Sexual Assault Victimization Among College-Age Females, 1995-2013 (2014).

contact with their harasser, thereby prioritizing the education of accused harassers over the education of survivors. Commenters argued that survivors should not have to wait until the end of a grievance process to be protected from seeing a perpetrator in class or on campus, and this provision would pressure survivors to file formal complaints when many survivors do not want a formal process for valid personal reasons, because a formal process would be the only avenue for ensuring that a "guilty" respondent will be suspended or expelled. Commenters recommended adding language to clarify that nothing shall prevent elementary and secondary schools from implementing an "alternate assignment" during the pendency of an investigation, provided that the same is otherwise permitted by law.

One commenter suggested combining the emergency removal and supportive measures provisions into a single "interim measures" provision.

Discussion: The Department believes the § 106.30 definition of supportive measures, and § 106.44(c) governing emergency removals, in the context of the revised requirements in § 106.44(a) and § 106.45(b)(1)(i) (requiring recipients to offer supportive measures to complainants while not imposing against respondents disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not "supportive measures") provide a wide range and variety of options for a recipient to preserve equal educational access, protect the safety of all parties, deter sexual harassment, and respond to emergency situations.

Under § 106.30, a supportive measure must not be punitive or disciplinary, but may burden a respondent as long as the burden is not unreasonable. As discussed in the "Supportive Measures" subsection of the "Section 106.30 Definitions" section of this preamble, whether a certain measure unreasonably burdens a respondent requires a fact-specific inquiry. Changing a respondent's class schedule or changing a respondent's housing or dining hall assignment may be a permissible supportive measure depending on the circumstances. By contrast, removing a respondent from the entirety of the recipient's education programs and activities, or removing a respondent from one or more of the recipient's education programs or activities (such as removal from a team, club, or extracurricular activity), likely would constitute an unreasonable burden on the respondent or be deemed disciplinary or punitive, and therefore would not likely qualify as a supportive measure. Until or unless the recipient has followed the § 106.45 grievance process (at which point the recipient may impose any disciplinary sanction or other punitive or adverse consequence of the recipient's choice), removals of the respondent from the recipient's education program or activity[970] need to meet the standards for emergency removals under § 106.44(c).[971] Supportive measures provide one avenue for recipients to protect the safety of parties and permissibly may affect and even burden the respondent, so long as the burden is not

---

[970] As discussed in the "Section 106.44(a) 'education program or activity'" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble, the Title IX statute and existing regulations provide definitions of "program or activity" that apply to interpretation of a recipient's "education program or activity" in these final regulations, and we have clarified in § 106.44(a) that for purposes of responding to sexual harassment a recipient's education program or activity includes circumstances over which the recipient exercised substantial control. 20 U.S.C. 1687; 34 CFR 106.2(h); 34 CFR 106.2(i) (defining "recipient"); 34 CFR 106.31(a) (referring to "any academic, extracurricular, research, occupational training, or other education program or activity operated by a recipient which receives Federal financial assistance").

[971] Cf. § 106.44(d) (a non-student employee-respondent may be placed on administrative leave (with or without pay) while a § 106.45 grievance process is pending, without needing to meet the emergency removal standards in § 106.44(c)).

unreasonable. Supportive measures may include, for example, mutual or unilateral restrictions on contact between parties or re-arranging class schedules or classroom seating assignments, so complainants need not remain in constant or daily contact with a respondent while an investigation is pending, or even where no grievance process is pending.

Whether an elementary and secondary school recipient may implement an "alternate assignment" during the pendency of an investigation (or without a grievance process pending), in circumstances that do not justify an emergency removal, when such action is otherwise permitted by law, depends on whether the alternate assignment constitutes a disciplinary or punitive action or unreasonably burdens

the respondent (in which case it would not qualify as a supportive measure as defined in § 106.30).[972] Whether an action "unreasonably burdens" a respondent is fact-specific, but should be evaluated in light of the nature and purpose of the benefits, opportunities, programs and activities, of the recipient in which the respondent is participating, and the extent to which an action taken as a supportive measure would result in the respondent forgoing benefits, opportunities, programs, or activities in which the respondent has been participating. An alternate assignment may, of course, be appropriate when an immediate threat justifies an emergency removal of the respondent because under the final regulations, emergency removal may justify total removal from the recipient's education program or activity, so offering the respondent alternate assignment is included within the potential scope of an emergency removal. Under § 106.44(a), the recipient must offer supportive measures to the complainant, and if a particular action – such as alternate assignment – does not, under specific circumstances, meet the definition of a supportive measure, then the recipient must carefully consider other individualized services, reasonably available, designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal educational access and/or protect safety and deter sexual harassment, that the recipient will offer to the complainant.

[972] For discussion of alternate assignments when the respondent is a non-student employee, see the "Section 106.44(d) Administrative Leave" subsection of the "Additional Rules Governing Recipients' Responses to Sexual Harassment" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble.

We do not believe that the final regulations incentivize complainants to file formal complaints when they otherwise do not wish to do so just to avoid contacting or communicating with a respondent, because supportive measures permit a range of actions that are non-punitive, non-disciplinary, and do not unreasonably burden a respondent, such that a recipient often may implement supportive measures that do meet a complainant's desire to avoid contact with the respondent. For example, if a complainant and respondent are both members of the same athletic team, a carefully crafted unilateral no-contact order could restrict a respondent from communicating directly with the complainant so that even when the parties practice on the same field together or attend the same team functions together, the respondent is not permitted to directly communicate with the complainant. Further, the recipient may counsel the respondent about the recipient's anti-sexual harassment policy and anti-retaliation policy, and instruct the team coaches, trainers, and staff to monitor the respondent, to help enforce the no-contact order and deter any sexual harassment or retaliation by the respondent against the complainant. Further, nothing in the final regulations, or in the definition of supportive measures in § 106.30, precludes a recipient from altering the nature of supportive measures provided, if circumstances change. For example, if the Title IX Coordinator initially implements a supportive measure prohibiting the respondent from directly communicating with the complainant, but the parties later each independently decide to take the same lab class, the Title IX Coordinator may, at the complainant's request, reevaluate the circumstances and offer the complainant additional supportive measures, such as requiring the professor teaching the lab class to ensure that the complainant and respondent are not "teamed up" or assigned to sit near each other or assigned as to be "partners," during or as part of the lab class.

Commenters correctly observe that the final regulations prohibit suspending or expelling a respondent without first

following the § 106.45 grievance process, or unless an emergency situation justices removal from the recipient's education program or activity (which removal may, or may not, be labeled a "suspension" or "expulsion" by the recipient). We do not believe this constitutes unfairness to survivors, or poses a threat to survivors' equal educational access, because there are many actions that meet the definition of supportive measures that may restore or preserve a complainant's equal access, protect a complainant's safety, and/or deter sexual harassment without punishing or unreasonably burdening a respondent. As discussed in the "Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) Presumption of Non-Responsibility" subsection of the "General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to

Formal Complaints" section of this preamble, refraining from treating people accused of wrongdoing as responsible for the wrongdoing prior to evidence proving the person is responsible is a fundamental tenet of American justice. These final regulations appropriately ensure that respondents are not unfairly, prematurely treated as responsible before being proved responsible, with certain reasonable exceptions: emergency removals, administrative leave for employees, and informal resolution of a formal complaint that resolves the allegations without a full investigation and adjudication but may result in consequences for a respondent including suspension or expulsion. In this way, the final regulations ensure that every complainant is offered supportive measures designed to preserve their

equal educational access and protect their safety (even without any proof of the merits of the complainant's allegations) consistent with due process protections and fundamental fairness. As an example, a complainant understandably may desire as a supportive measure the ability to avoid being in the same classroom with a respondent, whether or not the complainant wants to file a formal complaint. A school may conclude that transferring the respondent to a different section of that class (e.g., that meets on a different day or different time than the class section in which the complainant and respondent are enrolled) is a reasonably available supportive measure that preserves the complainant's equal access and protects the complainant's safety or deters sexual harassment, while not constituting an unreasonable burden on the respondent (because the respondent is still able to take that same class and earn the same credits toward graduation, for instance). If, on the other hand, that class in which both parties are enrolled does not have alternative sections that meet at different times, and precluding the respondent from completing that class would delay the respondent's progression toward

graduation, then the school may determinate that requiring the respondent to drop that class would constitute an unreasonable burden on the respondent and would not quality as a supportive measure, although granting the complainant an approved withdrawal from that class with permission to take the class in the future, would of course constitute a permissible supportive measure for the recipient to offer the complainant. Alternatively in such a circumstance (where the complainant, like the respondent, cannot withdraw from that class and take it later without delaying progress toward graduation), the school may offer the complainant as a supportive measure, for example, a one-way no contact order that prohibits the respondent from communicating with the complainant and assigns the respondent to sit across the classroom from the complainant. As such an example shows, these final regulations allow, and require, a recipient to carefully consider the specific facts and circumstances unique to each situation to craft supportive measures to help a complainant without prematurely penalizing a respondent.

The Department does not believe it is necessary or appropriate to require a time frame for when a recipient must undertake an emergency removal, because the risk arising from the sexual harassment allegations that may justify a removal may arise at any time; further, § 106.44(a) requires a recipient to respond "promptly" to sexual harassment, and if an emergency removal is a necessary part of a recipient's non-deliberately indifferent response then such a response must be prompt. We reiterate that emergency removal is not about reaching factual conclusions about whether the respondent is responsible for the underlying sexual harassment allegations. Emergency removal is about determining whether an immediate threat arising out of the sexual harassment allegations justifies removal of the respondent.

We appreciate the opportunity to clarify that, where the standards for emergency removal are met under § 106.44(c), the recipient has discretion whether to remove the respondent from all the recipient's education programs and activities, or to narrow the removal to certain classes, teams, clubs, organizations, or activities. We decline to add the phrase "or any part thereof" to this provision because a "part of" a program may not be readily understood, and we believe the authority to exclude entirely includes the lesser authority to exclude partially.

Section 106.44(a) and § 106.45(b)(1)(i) forbid a recipient from imposing disciplinary sanctions (or other actions that are not supportive measures) on a respondent without first following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. We reiterate that a § 106.44(c) emergency removal may be appropriate whether or not a grievance process is underway, and that the purpose of an emergency removal is to protect the physical health or safety of any student or other individual to whom the respondent poses an immediate threat, arising from allegations of sexual harassment, not to impose an interim suspension or expulsion on a respondent, or penalize a respondent by suspending the respondent from, for instance, playing on a sports team or holding a student government position, while a grievance process is pending. The final regulations respect complainants' autonomy and understand that not every complainant wishes to participate in a grievance process, but a complainant's choice not to file a formal complaint or not to participate in a grievance process does not permit a recipient to bypass a grievance process and suspend or expel

(or otherwise discipline, penalize, or unreasonably burden) a respondent accused of sexual harassment. An emergency removal under § 106.44(c) separates a respondent from educational opportunities and benefits, and is permissible only when the high threshold of an immediate threat to a person's physical health or safety justifies the removal.

Because the purposes of, and conditions for, "supportive measures" as defined in § 106.30 differ from the purposes of, and conditions for, an emergency removal under § 106.44(c), we decline to combine these provisions. Both provisions, and the final regulations as a whole, do not prioritize the educational needs of a respondent over a complainant, or vice versa, but aim to ensure that complainants receive a prompt, supportive response from a recipient, respondents are treated fairly, and recipients retain latitude to address emergency situations that may arise.

Changes: None.

"individualized safety and risk analysis"

Comments: Many commenters argued that the lack of guidance in § 106.44(c) on the requirements for conducting the "individualized safety and risk analysis"

is confusing, and should be better defined because it could lead to inconsistent results from school to school, county to county, and State to State. Some commenters expressed overall support for this provision, but argued that the power of removal should not be wielded without careful consideration, and requested clarity about who would undertake the risk analysis (e.g., an internal or external individual on behalf of a recipient). Other commenters stated that § 106.44(c) should list factors to consider in the required safety and risk analysis including: whether violence was alleged (which commenters asserted is rare in cases involving alleged incapacitation), how long the complainant took to file a complaint, whether the complainant has reported the allegations to the police, and whether there are other, less restrictive measures that could be taken. Commenters argued that the risk assessment requirement may prevent the removal of respondents who are in fact dangerous because context and other nuances may not be accounted for in the assessment. One commenter stated that the § 106.44(c) safety and risk analysis requirements are "good, but sometimes not realistic" because threat assessment teams do not meet daily, and it is sometimes necessary to decide a removal in a matter of hours. Other commenters stated some recipients have already incorporated this sort of threat assessment into their decision matrix because postsecondary institutions are obligated to take reasonable steps to address dangers or threats to their students.

Some commenters were concerned that institutions lack sufficient resources to properly conduct the required safety and risk analysis, that institutions lack the proper tools to conduct assessments calibrated to the age and developmental issues of the respondent, and that institutions lack the training and knowledge to properly implement such assessments. Commenters asserted that this provision would require institutions to train employees to conduct an individualized safety and risk analysis before removing students on an emergency basis, but that such assessments are rarely within the capacity or expertise of a single employee, and thus may require a committee or task force dedicated for this purpose.

Discussion: Recipients are entitled to use § 106.44(c) to remove a respondent on an emergency basis, only where there is an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any student or other individual. The "individualized safety or risk analysis" requirement ensures that the recipient should not remove a respondent from the recipient's education program or activity pursuant to § 106.44(c) unless there is more than a generalized, hypothetical, or speculative belief that the respondent may pose a risk to someone's physical health or safety. The Department believes that the immediate threat to physical health or safety threshold for justifying a removal sufficiently restricts § 106.44(c) to permitting only emergency removals and believes that further describing what might constitute an emergency would undermine the purpose of this provision, which is to set a high threshold for emergency removal yet ensure that the provision will apply to the variety of circumstances that could present such an emergency. The Department also believes that the final regulations adequately protect respondents, since in cases where the recipient removes a respondent, the recipient must follow appropriate procedures, including bearing the burden of demonstrating that the removal meets the threshold specified by the final regulations, based on a factual, individualized safety and risk analysis. We understand commenters' concerns that the individualized, fact-based nature of an emergency removal assessment may lead to different results from school to school or State to State, but different results may be reasonable based on the unique circumstances presented in individual situations.

Because the safety and risk analysis under § 106.44(c) must be "individualized," the analysis cannot be based on general assumptions about sex, or research that purports to profile characteristics of sex offense perpetrators, or statistical data about the frequency or infrequency of false or unfounded sexual misconduct allegations. The safety and risk analysis must be individualized with respect to the particular respondent and must examine the circumstances "arising from the allegations of sexual harassment" giving rise to an immediate threat to a person's physical health or safety. These circumstances may include factors such as whether violence was allegedly involved in the conduct constituting sexual harassment, but could also include circumstances that "arise from" the allegations yet do not constitute the alleged conduct itself; for example, a respondent could pose an immediate threat of physical self-harm in reaction to being accused of sexual harassment. For a respondent to be removed on an emergency basis, the school must determine that an immediate threat exists, and that the threat justifies removal. Section 106.44(c) does not limit the factors that a recipient may consider in reaching that determination.

We appreciate commenters' concerns that performing safety and risk analyses may require a recipient to expend resources or train employees, but without an individualized safety and risk analysis a recipient's decision to remove a respondent might be arbitrary, and would fail to apprise the respondent of the basis for the recipient's removal decision so that the respondent has an opportunity to challenge the decision. Procedural due process of law and fundamental fairness require that a respondent deprived of an educational benefit be given notice and opportunity to contest the deprivation;[973] without knowing the individualized reasons why a recipient determined that the respondent posed a threat to someone's physical health or safety, the respondent cannot assess a basis for challenging the recipient's removal decision. Recipients may choose to provide specialized training to employees or convene interdisciplinary threat assessment teams, or be required to take such actions under other laws, and § 106.44(c) leaves recipients flexibility to decide how to conduct an individualized safety and risk analysis, as well as who will conduct the analysis.

---

[973] See the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble.

Changes: None.

"provides the respondent with notice and an opportunity to challenge the decision immediately following the removal"

Comments: One commenter stated that during any emergency removal hearing, schools should be required to share all available evidence with the respondent, permit that person an opportunity to be heard, and allow the respondent's advisor to cross-examine any witnesses. According to the commenter, if these full procedural rights are not extended, this provision would create a loophole that allows emergency measures to effectively replace a full grievance process. Commenters also argued that a recipient's emergency removal decisions would often be hastily made, and that recipients would ignore requirements that a removed student be given the opportunity to review or challenge the decision made by the recipient. Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) should include express language safeguarding students against abusive practices during the challenge procedure. One commenter suggested adding the word "meaningful" so the respondent would have "a meaningful opportunity" to challenge the removal decision, asserting that certain institutions of higher education in California have not consistently given respondents meaningful opportunities to "make their case." While supportive of § 106.44(c), one commenter suggested modifying this provision to require the recipient to send the respondent written notice of the specific facts that supported the recipient's decision to remove the student, so the respondent can meaningfully challenge the removal decision.

Some commenters asserted that if the respondent has a right to challenge the emergency removal, the recipient must offer an equitable opportunity for the complainant to contest an overturned removal or participate in the respondent's challenge process. Other commenters asked whether § 106.44(c) requires, or allows, a recipient to notify the complainant that a respondent has been removed under this provision, that a respondent is challenging a removal decision, or that a removal decision has been overturned by the recipient after a respondent's challenge.

Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) would also effectively mandate that an institution's employees must be trained to conduct hearings or other undefined post-removal procedures in the event that a respondent exercises the right to challenge the emergency removal. Commenters argued that this burden likely would require a dedicated officer or committee to carry out procedural obligations that did not previously exist, and these burdens were not contemplated at the time of the recipient's acceptance of the Federal funding. Commenters argued that § 106.44(c) would provide rights to at-will employees that are otherwise unavailable, restricting employment actions that are normally within the discretion of an employer.

Commenters requested clarification about the procedures for challenging a removal decision, such as: whether a respondent's opportunity challenge the emergency removal means the recipient must, or may, use processes under § 106.45 to meet its obligations, including

whether evidence must be gathered, witnesses must be interviewed, or a live hearing with cross-examination must be held; whether the recipient, or respondent, will bear the burden of proof that the removal decision was correct or incorrect; whether the recipient must, or may, involve the complainant in the challenge procedure; whether the recipient must, or may, use the investigators and decision-makers

that have been trained pursuant to § 106.45 to conduct the post-removal challenge procedure; and whether the determinations about an emergency removal must, or may, influence a determination regarding responsibility during a grievance process under § 106.45.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that § 106.44(c) poses a possible loophole through which recipients may bypass giving respondents the due process protections in the § 106.45 grievance process. The threshold for an emergency removal under § 106.44(c) is adequately high to prevent recipients from using emergency removal as a pretense for imposing interim suspensions and expulsions. We do not believe it is necessary to revise § 106.44(c) to prevent recipients from imposing "abusive" procedures on respondents; recipients will be held accountable for reaching removal decisions under the standards of § 106.44(c), giving recipients adequate incentive to give respondents the immediate notice and challenge opportunity following a removal decision. We do not believe that recipients will make emergency removal decisions "hastily," and a respondent who believes a recipient has violated

these final regulations may file a complaint with OCR.

The Department does not want to prescribe more than minimal requirements on recipients for purposes of responding to emergency situations. We decline to require written notice to the respondent because minimal due process requires some kind of notice, and compliance with a notice requirement suffices for a recipient's handling of an emergency situation.[974] We decline to add the modifier "meaningful" before "opportunity" because the basic due process requirement of an opportunity to be heard entails an opportunity that is appropriate under the circumstances, which ensures a meaningful opportunity.[975] While a recipient has

---

[974] E.g., Goss, 419 U.S. at 578-79 (holding that in the public school context "the interpretation and application of the Due Process Clause are intensely practical matters" that require at a minimum notice and "opportunity for hearing appropriate to the nature of the case") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).
[975] Id.

discretion (subject to FERPA and other laws restricting the nonconsensual disclosure of personally identifiable information from education records) to notify the complainant of removal decisions regarding a respondent, or post-removal challenges by a respondent, we do not require the complainant to receive notice under § 106.44(c) because not every emergency removal directly relates to the complainant. As discussed above, circumstances that justify removal must be "arising from the allegations of sexual harassment" yet may consist of a threat to the physical health or safety of a person other than the complainant (for example, where the respondent has threatened self-harm).[976]

---

[976] As discussed in the "Section 106.6(e) FERPA" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble, the complainant has a right to know the nature of any disciplinary sanctions imposed on a respondent after the recipient has found the respondent to be responsible for sexual harassment alleged by the complainant, because the disciplinary sanctions are directly related to the allegations made by the complainant. By contrast, emergency removal of a respondent does not involve a recipient's determination that the respondent committed sexual harassment as alleged by the complainant, and information about the emergency removal is not necessarily directly related to the complainant. Thus, FERPA (or other privacy laws) may restrict a recipient's discretion to disclose information relating to the emergency removal.

The Department disagrees that § 106.44(c) requires a recipient to go through excessively burdensome procedures prior to removing a respondent on an emergency basis. The seriousness of the consequence of a recipient's decision to removal of a student or employee, without a hearing beforehand, naturally requires the school to meet a high threshold (i.e., an individualized safety and risk assessment shows that the respondent poses an immediate threat to a person's physical health or safety justifying removal). At the same time, § 106.44(c) leaves recipients wide latitude to select the procedures for giving notice and opportunity to challenge a removal.

A recipient owes a general duty under § 106.44(a) to respond to sexual harassment in a manner that is not deliberately indifferent. Where removing an individual on an emergency basis is necessary to avoid acting with deliberate indifference, a recipient must meet the requirements in § 106.44(c). The Department disagrees that § 106.44(c) imposes requirements on recipients that violate the Spending Clause, because recipients understand that compliance with Title IX will require dedication of personnel, time, and resources.[977] Because this provision does not prescribe specific post-removal challenge procedures, we do not believe recipients face significant burdens in training personnel to comply with new or unknown requirements; this provision ensures that the essential features of due process of law, or fundamental fairness, are provided to the respondent (i.e., notice and opportunity to be heard), and we believe that recipients are already familiar with these basic requirements of due process (for public institutions) or fair process (for private institutions).

[977] See discussion under the "Spending Clause" subsection of the "Miscellaneous" section of this preamble.

In response to commenters' clarification requests, the post-removal procedure may, but need not, utilize some or all the procedures prescribed in § 106.45, such as providing for collection and presentation of evidence.

Nothing in § 106.44(c) or the final regulations precludes a recipient from placing the burden of proof on the respondent to show that the removal decision was incorrect. Section 106.44(c) does not preclude a recipient from using Title IX personnel trained under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to make the emergency removal decision or conduct a post-removal challenge proceeding, but if involvement with the emergency

removal process results in bias or conflict of interest for or against the complainant or respondent, § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) would preclude such personnel from serving in those roles during a grievance process.[978] Facts and evidence relied on during an emergency removal decision and post-removal challenge procedure may be relevant in a § 106.45 grievance process against the

[978] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) requires all Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate an informal resolution to be free from bias or conflicts of interest for or against complainants or respondents generally, or for or against any individual complainant or respondent.

respondent but would need to meet the requirements in § 106.45; for example, a witness who provided information to a postsecondary institution recipient for use in reaching an emergency removal decision would need to appear and be cross-examined at a live hearing under § 106.45(b)(6)(i) in order for the witness's statement to be relied on by the decision-maker.

Changes: None.

How OCR Will Enforce the Provision

Comments: Commenters requested clarification about how OCR would enforce § 106.44(c), including what standard OCR would use in deciding whether a removal was proper; whether OCR would only find a violation if the recipient violates § 106.44(c) with deliberate indifference; whether violating this provision constitutes a violation of Title IX; whether OCR would defer to the determination reached by the recipient even if OCR would have reached a different determination based on the independent weighing of the evidence; whether a harmless error standard would apply to OCR's evaluation of a proper removal decision and only require reversing the recipient's removal decision if OCR thinks the outcome was affected by a recipient's violation of § 106.44(c); and whether OCR, or the recipient, would bear the burden of showing the correctness or incorrectness of the removal decision or the burden of showing that any violation affected the outcome or not.

Discussion: OCR will enforce this provision fully and consistently with other enforcement practices. OCR will not apply a harmless error standard to violations of Title IX, and will fulfill its role to ensure compliance with Title IX and these final regulations regardless of whether a recipient's non-compliance is the result of the recipient's deliberate indifference or other level of intentionality. Recipients whose removal decisions fail to comply with § 106.44(c) may be found by OCR to be in violation of these final regulations. As discussed above, a recipient may need to undertake an emergency removal under § 106.44(c) in order to meet its duty not to be deliberately indifferent to sexual harassment. However, OCR will not second guess the decisions made under a recipient's exercise of discretion so long as those decisions comply with the terms of § 106.44(c). For example, OCR may assess whether a recipient's failure to undertake an individualized risk assessment was deliberately indifferent

under § 106.44(a), but OCR will not second guess a recipient's removal decision based on whether OCR would have weighed the evidence of risk differently from how the recipient weighed such evidence. While not every regulatory requirement purports to represent a definition of sex discrimination, Title IX regulations are designed to make it more likely that a recipient does not violate Title IX's non- discrimination mandate, and the Department will vigorously enforce Title IX and these final regulations.

Changes: None.

Section 106.44(d) Administrative Leave

Comments: Some commenters expressed support for § 106.44(d), asserting that this provision appropriately recognizes that cases involving employees as respondents, especially faculty or administrative staff, should have different frameworks than cases involving students.

Some commenters asserted that it is unclear what standard a recipient must satisfy before it may place an employee on administrative leave. Commenters recommended giving discretion to an elementary and secondary school recipient to implement an alternate assignment (such as administrative reassignment to home) for staff during the pendency of an investigation, provided the same is otherwise permitted by law.

Commenters wondered how the Department defines "administrative leave," whether § 106.44(d) applies to paid or unpaid leave, and whether that would depend on how existing recipient employee conduct codes or employment contracts address the issue of paid or unpaid leave. Commenters asked whether an employee-respondent placed on leave may collect back pay from the recipient, if the grievance process determines there was insufficient evidence of misconduct. One commenter argued that administrative leave must include pay and benefits, as well as lodging if the employee-respondent resided in campus housing.

One commenter asserted that treating non-student employees differently than students or student-employees under § 106.44(d) constitutes discrimination. Another commenter questioned why recipients can deny employees paychecks for months until the conclusion of a formal grievance process, but give immediate due process for students to challenge an emergency removal; the commenter asserted that the recipient could simply provide a free semester of college to cover any loss to a student yet the proposed rules do not require a recipient to give back pay to an employee. Some commenters argued that § 106.44(c) emergency removal requirements to undertake an individualized safety and risk analysis and provide notice and an opportunity to challenge should also apply to administrative leave so that employees receive the same due process protections as students. Commenters argued that school investigations can take several months and that being on leave, especially without pay, can be a severe hardship for many employees. Commenters asserted that the Department should explicitly require recipients to secure a removed employee's personal property and be responsible for any damage occurring to the property before the removed employee can regain custody.

Commenters asserted that § 106.44(d) should apply to student-employee respondents and should be revised to limit the provision to administrative leave "from the person's employment," so that a student-employee respondent could still have access to the recipient's educational programs but the recipient would not be forced to continue an active employment relationship with that respondent during the investigation. For example, commenters argued, a recipient should not be compelled to allow a teaching assistant who has been accused of sexual harassment to continue teaching while the accusations are being investigated.

Commenters argued that § 106.44(d) should reference disability laws that protect employees parallel to the references to disability laws in § 106.44(c).

Discussion: The Department appreciates the support from commenters for § 106.44(d), giving a recipient discretion to place respondents who are employees on administrative leave during the pendency of an investigation.

We acknowledge commenters' concerns that § 106.44(d) does not specify conditions justifying administrative leave; however, we desire to give recipients flexibility to decide when administrative leave is appropriate. If State law allows or requires a school district to place an accused employee on "reassignment to home" or alternative assignment, § 106.44(d) does not preclude such action while an investigation under § 106.45 into sexual harassment allegations against the employee is pending.

The Department does not define "administrative leave" in this provision, but administrative leave is generally understood as temporary separation from a person's job, often with pay and benefits intact. However, these final regulations do not dictate whether administrative leave during the pendency of an investigation under § 106.45 must be with pay (or benefits) or without pay (or benefits). With respect to the terms of administrative leave, recipients who owe obligations to employees under State laws or contractual arrangements may comply with those obligations without violating § 106.44(d). Similarly, these final regulations do not require back pay to an employee when the pending investigation results in a determination that the employee was not responsible. Further, this provision does not require a recipient to cover the costs of lodging for, or to secure the personal property of, an employee placed on administrative leave, although the final regulations do not preclude a recipient from taking such actions. We note that these final regulations similarly allow – but do not require – a recipient to repay

a respondent for expenses incurred as a result of an emergency removal or to take actions to secure personal property during a removal under § 106.44(c) (whether the removed respondent was a student, or an employee). We also note that § 106.6(f) provides that nothing in this part may be read in derogation of an individual's rights, including an employee's rights, under Title VII[979] and that other laws such as Title VII may dictate whether administrative leave should be paid or unpaid and whether a respondent should be repaid for expenses incurred as a result of any of the recipient's actions.

The Department acknowledges that being placed on administrative leave –

[979] For discussion of the revision to language in § 106.6(f) (i.e., stating in these final regulations that nothing in this part may be read in derogation of an individual's rights instead of an employee's rights, under Title VII), see the "Section 106.6(f) Title VII and Directed Question 3 (Application to Employees)" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble.

especially if the leave is without pay – may constitute a hardship for the employee. However, no respondent who is an employee may be kept on administrative leave indefinitely, because § 106.44(d) does not authorize administrative leave unless a § 106.45 grievance process has been initiated, and § 106.45(b)(1)(v) requires the grievance process to be concluded within a designated reasonably prompt time frame. As proposed in the NPRM, § 106.44(d) provided that a recipient may place a non-student employee respondent on administrative leave during the pendency of an investigation; this was intended to refer to an investigation conducted pursuant to the § 106.45 grievance process. To clarify this point, the Department replaces "an investigation" with "a grievance process that complies with § 106.45" in §

106.44(d) to make it clear that a recipient may place a non-student employee respondent on administrative leave during the pendency of a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. The Department also revised § 106.44(d) to provide that "nothing in this subpart" instead of "nothing in this section" precludes a recipient from placing a non-student employee respondent on administrative leave to clarify that §

106.44(d) applies to subpart D of Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations. This revision makes it clear that nothing in subpart D of Part 106 of Title, which concerns nondiscrimination on the basis of sex in education programs or activities receiving Federal financial assistance and which includes other provisions such as § 106.44 and § 106.45, precludes a recipient from placing a non-student employee

respondent on administrative leave during the pendency of a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

The Department appreciates commenters' suggestions that the same due process protections (notice and opportunity to challenge a removal) that apply to respondents under § 106.44(c) should apply to an employee placed on administrative leave under § 106.44(d). This is unnecessary, because §

106.44(c) applies to an emergency removal of any respondent. Any respondent (whether an employee, a student, or other person) who poses an immediate threat to the health or safety of any student or other individual may be removed from the recipient's education program or activity on an emergency basis, where an individualized safety and risk analysis justifies the removal. Thus, respondents who are employees receive the same due process protections with respect to emergency removals (i.e., post-removal notice and opportunity to challenge the removal) as respondents who are students.

The Department also clarifies that pursuant to §106.44(d), a recipient may place a non-student employee respondent on administrative leave, even if the emergency removal provision in § 106.44(c) does not apply. With respect to student-employee respondents, we explain more fully, below, that these final regulations do not necessarily prohibit a recipient from placing a student-employee respondent on administrative leave if doing so does not violate other regulatory provisions. For example, placing a student-employee respondent on administrative leave with pay may be permissible as a supportive measure, defined in § 106.30, for a complainant (for instance, to maintain the complainant's equal educational access and/or to protect the complainant's safety or deter sexual harassment) as long as that action meets the conditions that a supportive measure is not punitive, disciplinary, or unreasonably burdensome to the respondent. Whether a recipient considers placing a student-employee

respondent on administrative leave as part of a non-deliberately indifferent response under § 106.44(a) is a decision that the Department will evaluate based on whether such a response is clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances. The Department will interpret these final regulations in a manner that complements an employer's obligations under Title VII, and nothing in these final regulations or in Part 106 of Title 34 of the Code of Federal Regulations may be read in derogation of any individual's rights, including any employee's rights, under Title VII, as explained in more detail in the "Section 106.6(f) Title VII and Directed Question 3 (Application to Employees)" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble.

Section 106.44(a) prohibits a recipient from imposing disciplinary sanctions against a respondent without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. Administrative leave without pay is generally considered disciplinary, and would likely be prohibited under § 106.44(a) in the absence of the § 106.44(d) administrative leave provision. The Department believes that while an investigation is pending, a recipient should have discretion to place an employee-respondent on any form of administrative leave the recipient deems appropriate, so that the recipient has flexibility to protect students from exposure to a potentially sexually abusive employee. Numerous commenters asserted that educator sexual misconduct is prevalent throughout elementary and secondary schools, and postsecondary institutions.[980] For these reasons, the final regulations permit, but do not require, what may amount to an interim suspension of an employee-respondent (i.e., administrative leave without pay) even though the final regulations prohibit interim suspensions of student-respondents. We reiterate that any respondent may be removed on an emergency basis under § 106.44(c).

---

[980] E.g., Charol Shakeshaft, Educator Sexual Misconduct: A Synthesis of Existing Literature (2004) (prepared for the U.S. Dep't. of Education) (ten percent of children were targets of educator sexual misconduct by the time they graduated from high school); National Academies of Science, Engineering, and Medicine, Sexual Harassment of Women: Climate, Culture, and Consequences in Academic Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine 61 (Frasier F. Benya et al. eds., 2018) (describing the prevalence of faculty-on-student sexual harassment at the postsecondary level).

We do not believe that employees placed on administrative leave are denied sufficient due process under these circumstances, because in order for § 106.44(d) to apply, a § 106.45 grievance process must be underway, and that grievance process provides the respondent (and complainant) with clear, strong procedural protections designed to reach accurate outcomes, including the right to conclusion of the grievance process within the recipient's designated, reasonably prompt time frame. As previously explained, the Department revised § 106.44(d) to clarify that a recipient may place a non-student respondent on administrative leave during the pendency of a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

Commenters erroneously asserted that because § 106.44(d) applies only to "non-student employees," a recipient is always precluded from placing an employee-respondent on administrative leave if the employee is also a student. We decline to make § 106.44(d) apply to student-employees or to change this provision to specify that administrative leave is "from the person's employment." Consistent with § 106.6(f), where an employee is not a student, we do not preclude a recipient-employer from placing a non-student employee on administrative leave during the pendency of a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. These final regulations do not prohibit a recipient from placing a student-employee respondent on administrative leave if doing so does not violate other regulatory provisions. As discussed above, placing a student-employee respondent on administrative leave with pay may be permissible as a supportive measure, defined in § 106.30, and may be considered by the recipient as part of the recipient's obligation to respond in a non-deliberately indifferent manner under § 106.44(a). Where a student is also employed by their school, college, or university, it is likely that the student depends on that employment in order to pay tuition, or that the employment is important to the student's academic opportunities. Administrative leave may jeopardize a student-employee's access to educational benefits and opportunities in a way that a non-student employee's access to education is not jeopardized. Accordingly, administrative leave is not always appropriate for student-employees. There may be circumstances that justify administrative leave with pay for student-employees, and the specific facts of a particular matter will dictate whether a recipient's response in placing a student-employee on administrative leave is permissible. For example, if a student-employee respondent works at a school cafeteria where the complainant usually eats, a recipient may determine that placing the student-employee respondent on administrative leave with pay, during the pendency of a grievance process that complies with § 106.45, will not unreasonably burden the student-employee respondent, or the recipient may determine that re-assigning the student-employee respondent to a different position during pendency of a § 106.45 grievance process, will not unreasonably burden the student-employee respondent. If a recipient places a party who is a student-employee on administrative leave with pay as a supportive measure, then such administrative leave must be non-disciplinary, non-punitive, not unreasonably burdensome, and otherwise satisfy the definition of supportive measures in § 106.30. With respect to a student-employee respondent, a recipient also may choose to take measures other than administrative leave that could constitute supportive measures for a complainant, designed to protect safety or deter sexual harassment without unreasonably burdening the respondent. For example, where an employee is also a recipient's student, it is likely that the recipient has the ability to supervise the student-employee to ensure that any continued contact between the student-employee respondent and other students occurs under monitored or supervised conditions (e.g., where the respondent is a teaching assistant), during the pendency of an investigation. If a recipient removes a respondent pursuant to § 106.44(c) after conducting an individualized safety and risk analysis and determining that an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of any students or other individuals justifies removal, then a recipient also may remove a student-employee respondent from any employment opportunity that is part of the recipient's education program or activity.

The Department is persuaded by commenters who asserted that analogous disability protections should expressly apply for employee-respondents under § 106.44(d) as for respondents under the § 106.44(c)

emergency removal provision. We have revised § 106.44(d) of the final regulations to state that this provision may not be construed to modify any rights under Section 504 or the ADA.

Changes: We have revised § 106.44(d) to clarify that it will not be construed to modify Section 504 or the ADA.[981] We also revised § 106.44(d) to clarify that nothing in subpart D of Part 106, Title 34

---

[981] As discussed in the "Section 106.6(f) Title VII and Directed Question 3 (Application to Employees)" subsection of the "Clarifying Amendments to Existing Regulations" section of this preamble, we revised the reference to "this section" to "this subpart" in § 106.44(d).

of the Code of Regulations, precludes a recipient from placing a non-student employee respondent on administrative leave during the pendency of a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints

General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process

Section 106.45(a) Treatment of Complainants or Respondents Can Violate Title IX

Comments: Commenters including students, professors, campus administrators, and attorneys, expressed appreciation and support for

§ 106.45(a). Some commenters asserted that § 106.45(a) is a welcome addition because in recent years, Federal judges have expressed concerns about how university treatment of respondents (or complainants) might run afoul of Title IX and contradict Title IX's promise of gender equity. Some commenters noted that although Federal courts have not assumed that all unfair procedures depriving respondents of a fair process

necessarily equate to sex discrimination,[982] numerous Federal courts have identified plausible claims of an institutions' sex discrimination against respondents, and commenters cited Federal cases[983] where courts noted sex discrimination may exist where an institution failed to investigate

[982] Commenters cited: Nokes v. Miami Univ., 1:17-CV-482, 2017 WL 3674910 (S.D. Ohio Aug. 25, 2017); Sahm v. Miami Univ., 110 F. Supp. 3d 774 (S.D. Ohio 2015); Bleiler v. Coll. of the Holy Cross, No. 1:11-CV-11541, 2013 WL 4714340 (D. Mass. Aug. 26, 2013).

[983] Commenters cited: Doe v. Baum, 903 F.3d 575 (6th Cir. 2018); Doe v. Miami Univ., 882 F.3d 579 (6th Cir. 2018); Rossley v. Drake Univ., 342 F. Supp. 3d 904 (S.D. Iowa 2018); Doe v. Univ. of Miss., No. 3:16-CV-63, 2018 WL 3570229 (S.D. Miss. July 14, 2018); Doe v. Univ. of Pa., 270 F. Supp. 3d 799 (E.D. Pa. 2017); Doe v. Amherst Coll., 238 F. Supp. 3d 195 (D. Mass. 2017); Doe v. Williams Coll., No. 3:16-CV-30184 (D. Mass. Apr. 28, 2017); Saravanan v. Drexel Univ., No. 2:17-CV-03409, 2017 WL 5659821 (E.D. Pa. Nov. 24, 2017); Marshall v. Ind. Univ., No. 1:15-CV-00726, 2016 WL 4541431 (S.D. Ind. Aug. 31, 2016).

evidence that the complainant might also have committed sexual misconduct in the same case, credited only female witnesses, ignored exonerating evidence because of preconceived notions about how males and females behave, used gender-biased training materials that portray only men as sexual predators or only women as victims, or denied the respondent necessary statistical information to test allegations of gender bias.

Other commenters gave examples of how they have observed sex-driven unfair treatment against respondents in campus Title IX proceedings. A few commenters pointed out that when a sexual harassment grievance process favors females over males in an attempt to be equitable to victims, the result is often that male victims of sexual harassment are not treated equitably; some commenters cited to statistics showing that similar percentages of men (5.3 percent) and women (5.6 percent) experience sexual violence other than rape each year,[984] that about 14 percent of reported rape cases involve men or boys, one in six reported sexual assaults is against a boy, one in 25 reported sexual assaults is against a

---

[984] Commenters cited: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2010 Summary Report Tables 2.1 and 2.2 (Nov. 2011).

man,[985] and that a survey of 27 colleges and universities revealed that 40.9 percent of undergraduate heterosexual males had experienced sexual harassment, intimate partner violence, or stalking, compared to 60.5 percent of undergraduate heterosexual females.[986] Some commenters opined that the Department's withdrawn 2011 Dear

---

[985] Commenters cited: National Alliance to End Sexual Violence, "Male Victims," ("About 14% of reported rapes involve men or boys, 1 in 6 reported sexual assaults is against a boy, and 1 in 25 reported sexual assaults is against a man."), https://www.endsexualviolence.org/where_we_stand/male-victims/.

[986] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).

Colleague Letter contributed to more instances of universities applying grievance procedures in a sex-discriminatory manner (usually against respondents, who, commenters argued, are overwhelmingly male). At least one commenter supportive of § 106.45(a) cited a white paper by NCHERM cautioning colleges and universities to avoid applying grievance procedures in an unfair, biased manner (whether favoring complainants, or favoring the accused) and urging institutions to have balanced processes.[987] Several commenters, including attorneys and organizations with experience representing accused students, supported § 106.45(a) because although the provision only clarifies what is already the intent of the law, the

---

[987] Commenters cited: National Center for Higher Education Risk Management (NCHERM), White Paper: Due Process and the Sex Police 14-15 (2017) ("There are always unintended consequences to showing favoritism. If a college is known to be biased toward responding parties, this can chill the willingness of victims/survivors to report. If a college is known to be biased toward reporting parties, a victim/survivor's sense of safety or justice based on the campus outcome in the short run may be quickly compromised by a court order or lawsuit reinstating the responding party, giving her a Pyrrhic victory, at best. What is needed for all of our students is a balanced process that centers on their respective rights while showing favoritism to neither. Not only is that best, it is required by law.").

provision is necessary to counter institutional bias in favor of female accusers and against male accused students, as both are entitled to equally fair procedures untainted by gender bias; one such commenter referred to § 106.45(a) as an "essential corrective" to gender bias that permeates campus sexual misconduct proceedings, and another believed that the provision will encourage schools to be more careful in how they treat both sides.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for § 106.45(a) and acknowledges that many commenters have observed through personal experiences navigating campus sexual misconduct proceedings that some recipients have applied grievance procedures in a manner that shows discrimination against respondents on the basis of sex. We note that other commenters have recounted personal experiences navigating campus sexual misconduct proceedings perceived to be biased against complainants on the basis of sex. To the extent that such discriminatory practices occur, § 106.45(a) advises recipients against sex discriminatory practices during the grievance process and to avoid different treatment favoring or disfavoring any party on the basis of sex. However, to clarify that § 106.45(a) applies as much to complainants as to respondents, the final regulations revise the language in this provision but retain the provision's statement that how a recipient treats a complainant, or a respondent, "may" constitute sex discrimination under Title IX. The Department emphasizes that any person regardless of sex may be a victim or perpetrator of sexual harassment and that different treatment due to sex-based stereotypes about how men or women behave with respect to sexual violence violates Title IX's non-discrimination mandate.

Changes: The final regulations revise § 106.45(a) to state more clearly that treatment of a complainant or respondent may constitute sex discrimination in violation of Title IX.

Comments: Some commenters opposed § 106.45(a), claiming that this provision would harbor perpetrators by permitting them to claim a Title IX violation even if the recipient merely opens an investigation into their conduct, and would revictimize and retraumatize survivors. Some commenters argued that this provision operates from a premise of false equivalency since the respondent is not involved in the process on the basis of their sex but rather on the basis of their alleged behavior whereas the complainant alleges to have suffered Title IX sexual harassment (discrimination on the basis of sex). Some commenters argued that a recipient's treatment of the respondent does not constitute discrimination on the basis of sex under Title IX unless sex bias was a factor and therefore the Department lacks authority to issue a regulation that equates unfair treatment of a respondent with sex discrimination. Other commenters contended that Title IX[988] does not include the grievance process prescribed in these final regulations and does not address the conduct of school officials implementing a grievance process, and that the Department has no authority to create new individual rights under Title IX. At least one commenter argued that the purpose of § 106.45(a) appears to be justifying the entirety of the Department's prescribed grievance process (which the commenter argued is characterized by rape exceptionalism with many provisions designed to benefit only respondents) by wrongfully characterizing procedural protections for respondents as needed to avoid sex discrimination. Another commenter argued that § 106.45(a) turns Title IX on its head by making respondents accused of sexual harassment into a protected class, enabling respondents to make a sex discrimination claim for any deviation from the § 106.45 grievance process requirements while complainants would need to show deliberate indifference to claim sex discrimination.

[988] Commenters cited: 20 U.S.C. 1681(a).

Some commenters asserted that this provision hamstrings recipients excessively and that the provision is fundamentally unfair to survivors. Some commenters argued that the provision grants respondents the right to sue for sex discrimination under Title IX and contended that fear of respondent litigation causes recipients to deprive complainants of due process and fair procedures by, for example, giving respondents access to information or accommodations not given to the complainant or to deliberately mislead the complainant about the investigation. One commenter characterized § 106.45(a) as giving an "unsubstantiated right of action for respondents under Title IX" that will cause "risk-averse universities to fail to investigate properly, and that schools and university legal counsel will be incentivized to never find in a survivor's favor, even when the facts clearly indicate that sexual violence occurred," leading to more complainants suing recipients privately under Title IX just to force institutions to treat complainants equally. This concern was echoed by a few commenters who argued that this provision would cause institutions to ignore reports and refuse to punish perpetrators for fear of respondent lawsuits.

Other commenters characterized § 106.45(a) as purporting to consider the treatment of the respondent as equally violating Title IX as the alleged behavior (sexual violence) prompting the Title IX case in the first place, while another commenter believed this provision meant that unfair treatment of a respondent constituted sexual harassment. A few commenters argued that § 106.45(a) unnecessarily risks incentivizing institutions to treat survivors unfairly, because respondents already have legal theories (such as violation of due process and breach of contract) with which to challenge unfair discipline, and Federal courts[989] have appropriately made it difficult for respondents to successfully challenge unfair discipline as sex discrimination, either on an erroneous outcome or selective enforcement theory – a result that would be undermined by § 106.45(a) giving respondents new rights to pursue unfair discipline claims under the auspices of Title IX.

---

[989] Commenters cited, e.g.: Doe v. Colgate Univ. Bd. of Trustees, 760 F. App'x 22 (2d Cir. 2019); Doe v. Cummins, 662 F. App'x 437, 451-53 (6th Cir. 2016); Yusuf v. Vassar Coll., 35 F.3d 709, 715 (2d Cir. 1994); Preston v. Va. ex rel. New River Comm. Coll., 31 F.3d 203, 207 (4th Cir. 1994); Doe v. Univ. of Cincinnati, 173 F. Supp. 3d 586, 606-07 (S.D. Ohio 2016); Winter v. Pa. State Univ., 172 F. Supp. 3d 756, 775-76 (M.D. Pa. 2016); Nungesser v. Columbia Univ., 169 F. Supp. 3d 353, 364 (S.D.N.Y. 2016); Doe v. Columbia Univ., 101 F. Supp. 3d 356, 372 (S.D.N.Y. 2015); Doe v. Univ. of the So., 687 F. Supp. 2d 744, 756 (E.D. Tenn. 2011); Patenaude v. Salmon River Cent. Sch. Dist., No. 3:03-CV-1016, 2005 WL 6152380 (N.D.N.Y. Feb. 16, 2005).

One commenter, a Title IX Coordinator, stated that § 106.45(a) seems unnecessary because typically both parties are members of the recipient's community and the recipient should not discriminate against any member of its community. One commenter opposed § 106.45(a) because it tells male students they have been victimized and gives male students more incentive to gratify themselves at the expense of a woman's education. One commenter argued that if stating that a recipient's treatment of a party in sexual harassment proceedings "may" constitute sex discrimination is sufficient to justify the Department regulating extensive grievance procedures in sexual harassment cases, there is no end to the Department's authority, on the same reasoning, to regulate any other type of interaction between a school and its students or employees, since any action taken by a recipient "may" constitute sex discrimination.

Some commenters suggested modifications in language including to specify that a recipient's response to a complaint may constitute sex discrimination where: the recipient deprives a respondent of access to education based on sex stereotypes or by using procedures that discriminate on the basis of sex; the recipient acts

with deliberate indifference; by a reasonable and objective standard, the "treatment" is sufficiently severe or pervasive so as to interfere with a student's educational opportunities and/or create a hostile work environment; there is evidence of discriminatory application of Title IX or acts of retaliation; the recipient uses investigatory or other acts to mistreat (or not adequately treat well) the respondent. Another commenter asserted that § 106.45(a) should specify that programs funded by the U.S. Department of Justice's Office on Violence Against Women (OVW) must comply with these final regulations. Another commenter argued that §106.45 should consider that when in doubt, the recipient may err on side of releasing information in order to avoid liability under these final regulations.

Discussion: The Department disagrees with commenters who believed that § 106.45(a) would harbor perpetrators and revictimize or retraumatize survivors by permitting respondents to claim a Title IX violation based on a recipient's opening of an investigation into alleged sexual harassment. This provision does not declare that actions toward a respondent (or complainant) do constitute sex discrimination in violation of Title IX, but states only that treatment of a respondent (or treatment of a complainant) may constitute sex discrimination. Title IX prohibits sex discrimination against all individuals on the basis of the protected characteristic (sex), and § 106.45(a) advises recipients to be aware that taking action with respect to either party in a grievance process resolving allegations of sexual harassment may not be done in a sex discriminatory manner. This provision operates to protect complainants and respondents equally, irrespective of sex, by emphasizing to recipients that although a grievance process takes place in the context of resolving allegations of one type of sex discrimination (sexual harassment), a recipient must take care not to treat a party differently on the basis of the party's sex because to do so would inject further sex discrimination into the situation. For example, a recipient's decision to investigate sexual harassment complaints brought by women but not by men may constitute sex discrimination in the context of a sexual harassment grievance process; similarly, a recipient's practice of imposing a sanction of expulsion on female respondents found responsible for sexual harassment, but suspension on male respondents found responsible, may constitute sex discrimination.

The Department acknowledges that the text of the Title IX statute does not specify grievance procedures for resolving allegations of sexual harassment. However, at the time Title IX was enacted in 1972, Federal courts had not yet addressed sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination, but the Supreme Court's Gebser/Davis framework explicitly interpreted Title IX's non-discrimination mandate to include sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination. Since 1975 the Department's Title IX regulations have required recipients to adopt and publish "grievance procedures" for the prompt and equitable resolution of complaints that recipients are committing sex discrimination against students or employees.[990] The Department's authority to enforce such regulations has been acknowledged by the Supreme Court.[991] The Department has determined that current regulatory reference to "grievance procedures" that are "prompt and equitable" does not adequately prescribe a consistent, fair, reliable grievance process for resolving allegations of Title IX sexual harassment; in accordance with the Department's regulatory authority under Title IX, the final regulations now set forth a grievance process for resolving formal complaints raising allegations of sexual harassment.

---

[990] 34 CFR 106.8(b).
[991] Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 291-92 (1998).

The Department disagrees that § 106.45(a) turns Title IX on its head or creates a new protected class (respondents); this provision focuses on the central purpose of Title IX, to provide protections from sex-discriminatory practices to all persons, acknowledging that the ways in which complainants and respondents are treated must not be affected by the sex of a person even though the underlying allegations involve allegations of a type of sex discrimination (sexual harassment) that make it tempting for recipients to intentionally or unintentionally allow sex-based biases, stereotypes, and generalizations to influence how procedures are applied. Partly in response to commenters' misapprehension that § 106.45(a) allows respondents – but not complainants – to claim sex discrimination whenever a requirement in § 106.45 is not met, the final regulations permit either party equally to appeal a determination regarding responsibility on the basis of procedural irregularity.[992] Similarly, either party believing a recipient failed to follow the § 106.45 grievance process could file a complaint with OCR that could result in the Department requiring the recipient to come into compliance with § 106.45, regardless of whether the violation of § 106.45 also amounted to deliberate indifference (as to a complainant) or otherwise constituted

---

[992] Section 106.45(b)(8).

sex discrimination (as to a respondent). A violation of § 106.45 need not, and might not necessarily, constitute sex discrimination, whether the violation disfavored a complainant or a respondent. Thus, § 106.45(a) does not create a special protection for respondents or special burden for complainants with respect to allegations that a recipient failed to comply with the § 106.45 grievance process.

For similar reasons, the Department disagrees that § 106.45(a) in any way "hamstrings" recipients into catering to respondents' interests or permits recipients to ignore complainants or treat complainants unfavorably out of fear of being sued by respondents. Rather, § 106.45(a) reminds recipients that Title IX requires recipients to avoid bias, prejudice, or stereotypes based on sex whether the recipient's intent is to favor or disfavor complainants or respondents. As to commenters' concerns that out of fear of respondent lawsuits recipients will, for example, give respondents access to information or accommodations not given to the complainant or deliberately mislead the complainant about the investigation, the Department notes that such actions likely will either violate specific provisions of § 106.45 (e.g., §

106.45(b)(5)(vi) requires the parties to have equal opportunity to inspect and review evidence) or constitute the very treatment against a complainant that § 106.45(a) cautions against. For reasons discussed in the "General Support and Opposition for the § 106.45 Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department disputes that the § 106.45 grievance process is premised on rape exceptionalism. The prescribed

grievance process is tailored to resolve allegations of sexual harassment that constitute sex discrimination under a Federal civil rights law, not to adjudicate criminal charges; the fact that resolution of sexual harassment under Title IX requires, in the Department's judgment, a consistent, predictable grievance process in no way implies that a "special" process is needed due to rape myths or sex-based generalizations

(such as, “women lie about rape”). The § 106.45 grievance process does not prioritize respondent’s rights over those of complainants. Rather, § 106.45 contains important procedural protections that apply equally to both parties with three exceptions: one provision that treats complainants and respondents equitably instead of equally (by recognizing a complainant’s interest in a recipient providing remedies, and a respondent's interest in disciplinary sanctions imposed only after a recipient follows a fair process);[993] one provision that applies only to respondents (a presumption of non-responsibility until conclusion of a fair process);[994] and one provision that applies only to complainants (protection from questions and evidence regarding sexual history).[995]

---

[993] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i).
[994] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv).
[995] Section 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii).

The Department is aware that in private lawsuits brought under Title IX, Federal courts have been reluctant to equate unfair treatment of a respondent during a sexual misconduct disciplinary proceeding with sex discrimination unless the respondent can show that the unfair treatment was motivated by the party's sex. Contrary to commenters' assertions, § 106.45(a) does not assume that any unfair treatment constitutes sex discrimination, but does caution recipients that treatment of any party could constitute sex discrimination. In this way, § 106.45(a) shields parties (both complainants and respondents) from recipient actions during the grievance process that are impermissibly motivated by sex-based bias or stereotypes in violation of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate. However, as discussed above, this does not mean that every violation of § 106.45 necessarily equates to sex discrimination. The Department disagrees that § 106.45(a) purports to consider treatment of a respondent during a grievance process as the same type of behavior that prompted the respondent to become a respondent in the first place (e.g., alleged sexual misconduct), or that this provision equates unfair discipline with sexual harassment. The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that when a respondent is treated differently based on sex during a grievance process designed to resolve allegations that the respondent perpetrated sexual harassment, the sex-based treatment of the respondent violates Title IX's non-discrimination mandate in a different way than sexual harassment does when sexual harassment constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX. Title IX prohibits different treatment on the basis of sex, which § 106.45(a) acknowledges may occur against respondents or complainants in violation of Title IX. Title IX also requires recipients to respond appropriately to allegations of sexual harassment, because sexual harassment constitutes a particular form of sex discrimination.

The Department also appreciates the opportunity to clarify that the Department does not draw an equivalency among different types of sex discrimination prohibited under Title IX, and recognizes that when sex discrimination takes the form of sexual harassment victims often face trauma and negative impacts unique to that particular form of sex discrimination; indeed, it is this recognition that has prompted the Department to promulgate legally binding regulations governing recipients' response to sexual harassment rather than continuing to rely on guidance documents that lack the force and effect of law.

The Department disagrees with commenters who argued that § 106.45(a) is unnecessary because respondents already have non-Title IX legal theories on which to challenge unfair discipline and have erroneous outcome and selective enforcement theories with which to challenge unfair discipline under Title IX. While it is true that respondents have relied on such theories to pursue private lawsuits, similarly complainants already have a judicially implied private right of action under Title IX to sue a recipient for being deliberately indifferent to a complainant victimized by sexual harassment. The existence of private rights of action under Title IX, or under other laws, does not obviate the importance of the Department using its statutory authorization to effectuate the purposes of Title IX through administrative enforcement by promulgating regulations designed to provide individuals with effective protections against discriminatory practices. Indeed, in the final regulations some requirements intended to protect against sex discrimination apply only to the benefit of complainants (e.g., § 106.44(a) has been revised to require as part of a non-deliberately indifferent response that recipients notify complainants of the availability of supportive measures with or without the filing of a formal complaint, offer supportive measures to the complainant, and explain to complainants the process for filing a formal complaint) while other provisions aim to ensure protections against sex discrimination for both complainants and respondents (e.g., § 106.45(a)). The Department has administrative authority to enforce such provisions, whether or not Federal courts would impose the same requirements under a complainant's or respondent's private Title IX lawsuit.

The Department agrees with the commenter who asserted that recipients should not discriminate against any member of the recipient's community but maintains that § 106.45(a) is not rendered unnecessary by that belief. The Department disagrees that § 106.45(a) conveys to male students that being treated unfairly in the grievance process gives license to perpetrate sexual misconduct against women; while a recipient must treat a respondent in a manner free from sex discrimination and impose discipline only after following a fair grievance process, those restrictions in no way encourage or incentivize perpetration of sexual misconduct and in fact help ensure that sexual misconduct, where reliably determined to have occurred, is addressed through remedies for victims and disciplinary sanctions for perpetrators.

The Department understands the commenter's concern that § 106.45(a) could be misunderstood to justify the Department regulating any facet of a recipient's interaction with students and employees because in any circumstance a recipient "may" act in a sex-biased manner. The Department appreciates the opportunity to clarify that § 106.45(a) is necessary in the context of sexual harassment because allegations of such conduct present an inherent risk of sex-based biases, stereotypes, and generalizations permeating the way parties are treated, such that a consistent, fair process applied without sex bias to any party is needed.

The Department's authority to promulgate regulations under Title IX encompasses regulations to effectuate

the purpose of Title IX, and as commenters acknowledged, one of the two main purposes of Title IX is providing individuals with protections against discriminatory practices.[996] Implementation of a grievance process for resolution of sexual harassment lies within the Department's statutory authority to regulate under Title IX,[997] and § 106.45(a) is a provision designed to protect all individuals involved in a sexual harassment situation from sex discriminatory practices in the context of a grievance process to resolve formal complaints of sexual harassment. Thus, § 106.45, and paragraph (a) in particular, does not create new individual rights but rather prescribes procedures designed to protect the rights granted all persons under Title IX to be free from sex discrimination with respect to participation in education programs or activities.

---

[996] Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 704 (1979).
[997] 20 U.S.C. 1682.

The Department notes that nothing about § 106.45(a) creates or grants respondents (or complainants) rights to file private lawsuits, whether under Title IX or otherwise. Title IX does not contain an express private right of action, but the Supreme Court has judicially implied such a right.[998] In Gebser, the Supreme

---

[998] Cannon, 441 U.S. at 691.

Court declined to allow petitioner to seek damages in a private suit under Title IX for the school's alleged failure to have a grievance procedure as required under Department regulations because "failure to promulgate a grievance procedure does not itself constitute 'discrimination' under Title IX."[999] The Court continued, "Of course, the Department of Education could enforce

---

[999] Gebser, 524 U.S. at 292.

the requirement administratively: Agencies generally have authority to promulgate and enforce requirements that effectuate the statute's non-discrimination mandate, 20 U.S.C. 1682, even if those requirements do not purport to represent a definition of discrimination under the statute."[1000] Thus, the Department's exercise of administrative enforcement authority does not grant new rights to respondents (or complainants) who pursue remedies against recipients in private lawsuits under Title IX.

---

[1000] Id.

The Department appreciates commenters' suggestions for modifications to this provision, but declines to add modifiers or qualifiers that would further describe how and when a recipient's treatment of a complainant or respondent might constitute sex discrimination. In the interest of retaining the broad intent of Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, § 106.45(a) in the final regulations begins the entirety of a Title IX sexual harassment grievance process under § 106.45 by advising recipients to avoid treatment of any party in a manner that discriminates on the basis of sex. The § 106.45 grievance process leaves recipients with significant discretion to adopt procedures that are not required or prohibited by § 106.45, including, for example, rules designed to conduct hearings in an orderly manner respectful to all parties. Section 106.45(a) emphasizes to recipients that such rules or practices that a recipient chooses to adopt must be applied without different treatment on the basis of sex. To reinforce the importance of treating complainants and respondents equally

in a grievance process, the final regulations also revise the introductory sentence of § 106.45(b) to indicate that any grievance process rules a recipient chooses to adopt (that are not already required under § 106.45) must treat the parties equally. Together with § 106.45(a), this modification emphasizes, for the benefit of any person involved in a Title IX grievance process, that recipients must treat both parties equally and without regard to sex.

The Department declines to specify what programs (including those funded by OVW grants) must comply with this provision; questions about application of Title IX to individual recipients may be submitted to the recipient's Title IX Coordinator, the Assistant Secretary, or both, under § 106.8(b)(1). The Department disagrees with the

commenter who suggested that § 106.45(a) will cause a recipient to err on the side of releasing information or increase a recipient's fear of retaliation; however, in response to many comments concerning confidentiality and retaliation, the final regulations include § 106.71 prohibiting retaliation and specifying that the recipient must keep confidential the identity of any individual who has made a report or

complaint of sex discrimination, including any individual who has made a report or filed a formal complaint of sexual harassment, any complainant, any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of sex discrimination, any respondent, and any witness, except as may be permitted by FERPA, required by law, or as necessary to conduct the grievance process, and providing that complaints alleging retaliation may be filed according to the prompt and equitable grievance procedures for sex discrimination that recipients must adopt under § 106.8(c).

Changes: We are adding § 106.71, prohibiting retaliation and specifying that the recipient must keep confidential the identity of any individual who has made a report or complaint of sex discrimination, including any individual who has made a report or filed a formal complaint of sexual harassment, any complainant, any individual who has been reported to be the perpetrator of sex discrimination, any respondent, and any witness, except as may be permitted by the FERPA statute or regulations, 20 U.S.C. 1232g and 34 CFR part 99, or required by law, or to carry out the purposes of 34 CFR part 106, and providing that complaints alleging retaliation may be filed according to the grievance procedures for sex discrimination that recipients must adopt under § 106.8(c). We are revising § 106.45(b)(8) regarding appeals, to expressly permit both parties equally to appeal a determination regarding responsibility on the basis of procedural irregularity. We are revising the introductory sentence of § 106.45(b) to state that any rules a recipient chooses to adopt (that are not required under § 106.45) must apply equally to both parties.

Section 106.45(b)(1)(i) Equitable Treatment of Complainants and Respondents

Comments: Many commenters expressed support for § 106.45(b)(1)(i). Some commenters asserted that this provision rectifies sex discrimination against males that has occurred in recipients' Title IX campus proceedings.[1001] Other commenters stated that this provision advances Title IX's goal of due process-type fundamental fairness to both complainants and respondents alike by balancing the scales. One commenter supported this provision because, in the commenter's view, too many institutions view allegations as "self-proving." At least one commenter approved of this provision as being consistent with existing § 106.8 requiring "prompt and equitable" resolution of sex discrimination complaints. Another commenter asserted that § 106.45(b)(1)(i) is consistent with our Nation's fundamental values that persons accused of serious misconduct should receive notice and a fair hearing before unbiased decision makers, and a presumption of innocence. Another

---

[1001] Commenters cited, for example: Jeannie Suk Gersen, The Transformation of Sexual-Harassment Law Will Be Double-Faced, THE NEW YORKER (Dec. 20, 2017); American Association of University Women Educational Foundation, Drawing the Line: Sexual Harassment on Campus (2005).

commenter supported this provision because everyone on campus benefits from fundamentally fair proceedings. One commenter called this provision a "welcome change" because, in the commenter's view, accused students at institutions of higher education have had a difficult time restoring their reputations after the institution removes the accused student before a fair determination of the truth of the allegations.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for this provision. The Department agrees that a fair process benefits both parties, and recipients, by leading to reliable outcomes and increasing the confidence that parties and the public have regarding Title IX proceedings in schools, colleges, and universities. The

Department also agrees with the commenter who noted that this provision is consistent with the principle underlying existing § 106.8 wherein recipients have long been required to have "prompt and equitable" grievance procedures for handling sex discrimination complaints. The purpose of § 106.45(b)(1)(i) is to emphasize the importance of treating complainants and respondents equitably in the specific context of Title IX sexual harassment, by drawing a recipient's attention to the need to provide remedies to complainants and avoid punishing respondents prior to conclusion of a fair process. As discussed in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the § 106.45 grievance process generally treats both parties equally, and § 106.45(b)(1)(i) is one of the few exceptions to strict equality where equitable treatment of the parties requires recognizing that a complainant's interests differ from those of a respondent with respect to the purpose of the grievance process. This is intended to provide both parties with a fair, truth-seeking process that reasonably takes into account differences between a party's status as a complainant, versus as a respondent. Thus, with respect to remedies and disciplinary sanctions, strictly equal treatment of the parties does not make sense, and to treat the parties equitably, a complainant must be provided with remedies where the outcome shows the complainant to have been victimized by sexual harassment; similarly, a respondent must be sanctioned only after a fair process has determined whether or not the respondent has perpetrated sexual harassment.

Changes: None.

Comments: Some commenters objected to § 106.45(b)(1)(i) on the ground that it reinforces the approach of the overall grievance process that commenters believed requires a complainant to undergo a protracted, often traumatic investigation necessitating continuous interrogation of the complainant, all while forcing the complainant to continue seeing the respondent on campus because the respondent is protected from removal until completion of the grievance process; some of these commenters asserted that this will chill reporting.

Some commenters opposed this provision on the ground that it aims to treat victims and perpetrators as equals, which is inappropriate because a victim has suffered harm inflicted by a perpetrator, placing them in inherently unequal positions of power; some of these commenters expressed particular concern that this dynamic perpetuates the status quo where teachers accused of harassing students are believed because of their position of authority.

Some commenters claimed that by being gender-neutral this provision makes campuses and Title IX proceedings an unsafe space for victims and is biased against women because it reflects obsolete and unfounded assumptions about sexual harassment and sexual violence and perpetuates harm against women and vulnerable populations. At least one such commenter urged the Department to instead adopt a feminist model that supports the healing of survivors of gender-based violence, prevents revictimization following assault, and seeks to restore power and control the survivor has lost.[1002]

Discussion: The Department believes that § 106.45(b)(1)(i) reflects the critical way in which that a recipient must, throughout a grievance process, treat the parties equitably. The Department disagrees that the final regulations require complainants to undergo

---

[1002] Commenters cited: Tara N. Richards et al., A feminist analysis of campus sexual assault policies: Results from a national sample, 66 FAMILY RELATIONS 1 (2017) (criticizing gender-neutral policy approaches because "In gender-neutral advocacy, policies and practices are uniformly applied and do not take gender dynamics into consideration, thus increasing the risk of victim-blaming attitudes and adherence to myths about rape and other forms of gendered violence").

protracted, traumatic investigations or necessarily require complainants to interact with respondents on campus while a process is pending. The final regulations require a recipient to offer supportive measures to a complainant with or without the filing of a formal complaint triggering the grievance process.[1003] The final regulations have removed proposed § 106.44(b)(2) and [1003] Section 106.44(a) (further requiring the Title IX Coordinator to contact each complainant to discuss the availability of supportive measures with or without a formal complaint, consider the complainant's wishes regarding supportive measures, and explain to the complainant the process for filing a formal complaint).

revised the § 106.30 definition of "complainant" such that in combination, those revisions ensure that the final regulations do not require a Title IX Coordinator to initiate a grievance process over the wishes of a complainant, and never require a complainant to become a party or to participate in a grievance process.[1004] In these ways, the final regulations respect

[1004] Section 106.71 (prohibiting retaliation for the purpose of interfering with any right under Title IX, including the right to refuse to participate in a Title IX proceeding).

the autonomy of survivors to choose whether to participate in a grievance process, while ensuring that regardless of that choice, survivors are entitled to supportive measures. Although supportive measures must be non-punitive and non-disciplinary (to any party) and cannot unreasonably burden the other party,[1005] supportive measures do allow complainants options with respect to changes in class schedules or housing re-assignments even while a grievance process is still pending, or where no formal complaint has initiated a grievance process. Moreover, § 106.44(c) permits a recipient to remove a respondent from the recipient's education program or activity without undergoing a grievance process, where an individualized risk assessment shows the respondent poses a threat to any person's physical health or safety, so long as the respondent is afforded post-removal notice and opportunity to challenge the removal decision. The final regulations thus effectuate the purpose of Title IX to provide protection for complainants, while ensuring that a fair process is used to generate a factually reliable resolution of sexual harassment allegations before a respondent is sanctioned based on such allegations. To clarify that the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures" gives recipients wide latitude to take actions to support a complainant, even while having to refrain from imposing disciplinary sanctions against the respondent, we have added to § 106.45(b)(1)(i) the phrase "or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30."[1006] Even where supportive measures, emergency removal where appropriate, the right of both parties to be accompanied by an advisor of choice,[1007] and other provisions intended to ease the stress of a formal process may result in a complainant finding the process traumatizing,[1008] the Department maintains that allegations of sexual harassment must be resolved accurately in order to ensure that recipients remedy sex discrimination occurring in education programs or activities.

[1005] Section 106.30 (defining "supportive measures").

[1006] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i), stating that equitable treatment of the parties means following a § 106.45 grievance process before imposing disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not "supportive measures" as defined in § 106.30, and remedies for a complainant whenever a respondent is determined to be responsible, is mirrored in § 106.44(a), which requires equitable treatment of respondents in the same manner and (because no grievance process is required for a recipient's response obligations under § 106.44 to be triggered) equitable treatment of complainants by offering supportive measures.

[1007] Section 106.45(b)(5)(iv).

The Department disagrees that treating parties equally throughout the grievance process, and recognizing specific ways in which complainants

---

[1008] E.g., § 106.45(b)(6)(i) (either party has the right to undergo a live hearing and cross-examination in a separate room, and this provision deems irrelevant any questions or evidence regarding a complainant's sexual predisposition (without exception) and any questions or evidence about a complainant's sexual behavior with two exceptions).

and respondents must be treated equitably under § 106.45(b)(1)(i), inappropriately attempts to place victims and perpetrators on equal footing without recognizing that victims are suffering from a perpetrator's conduct. The Department recognizes that a variety of power dynamics can affect perpetration and victimization in the sexual violence context, including differences in the sex, age, or positions of authority of the parties. The Department believes that a fair process provides procedural tools to parties that can counteract situations where a power imbalance led to the alleged incident. By providing both parties with strong, clear procedural rights – including the right to an advisor of choice to assist a party in navigating the process – a party perceived as being in a weaker position has the same rights as the party perceived as having greater power (perhaps due to sex, age, or a position of authority over the other party), and the process is more likely to generate accurate determinations about what occurred between the parties.

The Department disagrees with commenters who criticized this provision (and the overall approach of the final regulations) for being gender-neutral. Title IX's non-discrimination mandate benefits "persons" without regard to sex.[1009] The Department believes that Title IX's non-discrimination mandate is served by an approach that is neutral with respect to sex. The Department notes that applying a sex-neutral framework does not imply that recipients cannot gain understanding about the dynamics of sexual violence including particular

[1009] 20 U.S.C. 1681(a) ("No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex . . .").

impacts of sexual violence on women or other demographic groups – but such background knowledge and information cannot be applied in a way that injects bias or lack of impartiality into a process designed to resolve particular allegations of sexual harassment. Contrary to some commenters' concerns, sex-neutrality in the grievance process helps prevent the very kind of victim-blaming and rape myths that have improperly affected responses to females, and does so in a manner that also prevents improper injection of sex-bias against males. A sex-neutral approach is also the only approach that appropriately prohibits generalizations about "women as victims" and "men as perpetrators" from improperly affecting an objective evaluation of the facts surrounding each particular allegation and emphasizes for students and recipients the fact that with respect to sexual harassment, any person can be a victim and any person can be a perpetrator, regardless of sex.

Changes: We have revised § 106.45(b)(1)(i) to include the phrase "or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30" in addition to disciplinary sanctions, to describe equitable treatment of a respondent during a grievance process.

Comments: Some commenters characterized this provision as a "weak" attempt to restore or preserve a complainant's access to education without sufficiently acknowledging that often, sexual harassment causes a complete or total denial of access for the victim (for example, where a victim drops out of school entirely).[1010] Some commenters viewed this provision's

---

[1010] Many commenters cited: Cecilia Mengo & Beverly M. Black, Violence Victimization on a College Campus: Impact on GPA and School Dropout, 18 JOURNAL OF COLL. STUDENT RETENTION: RESEARCH, THEORY & PRACTICE 2, 234, 244 (2015), for the proposition that survivors drop out of school at higher rates than non-survivors.

description of remedies for a complainant as too narrow because such remedies must be "designed to restore or preserve access" to the recipient's education program or activity. At least one commenter understood the phrase "designed to restore or preserve access" to forbid a recipient from imposing a disciplinary sanction on a respondent unless the sanction itself is designed to restore or

preserve access to education. At least one commenter suggested adding the word "equal" before "access" in this provision to align this provision with the "equal access" language used in § 106.30 defining sexual harassment. A few commenters urged the Department to add a list of possible remedies for complainants including counseling, supportive services, and training for staff. At least one commenter suggested that remedies for a complainant must actually restore or preserve the complainant's access to education and so proposed deleting "designed to" from this provision.

Discussion: The Department believes that § 106.45(b)(1)(i) provides a strong, clear requirement for the benefit of victims of sexual harassment: where a § 106.45 grievance process results in a determination that the respondent in fact committed sexual harassment against the complainant, the complainant must be given remedies. The Department understands that research shows that sexual harassment victims drop out of school more often than other students, and in an effort to prevent that loss of access to education, this provision mandates that recipients provide remedies. In response to commenters concerned that the description of remedies is too narrow or unclear, the final regulations revise this provision. This provision now uses the phrase "equal access" rather than simply "access," in response to commenters who pointed out that "equal access" is the phrase used in § 106.30 defining sexual harassment. Further, the final regulations substitute "determination of responsibility" for "finding of responsibility," out of caution that this provision's use of "finding" instead of "determination" (when the latter is used elsewhere throughout the proposed rules) caused a commenter's confusion between remedies for a complainant (which are designed to restore the complainant's equal access to education) versus disciplinary sanctions against a respondent (which are not designed to restore a respondent's access to education). Moreover, the final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(1)(i) to state that remedies may consist of the same individualized services listed illustratively in § 106.30 as "supportive measures" but remedies need not meet the limitations of supportive measures (i.e., unlike supportive measures, remedies may in fact burden the respondent, or be punitive or disciplinary in nature). The Department believes that this additional language in the final regulations obviates the need to repeat a non-exhaustive list of possible remedies and gives recipients and complainants additional clarity about the kind of remedies available to help restore or preserve equal educational access for victims of sexual harassment.

The Department declines to remove "designed to" from this provision. Sexual harassment can cause severe trauma to victims, and while Title IX

obligates a recipient to respond appropriately when students or employees are victimized with measures aimed at ensuring a victim's equal access, the Department does not believe it is reasonable to hold recipients accountable for situations where despite a recipient's reasonably designed and implemented remedies, a victim still suffers loss of access (for example, by dropping out) due to the underlying trauma. We have also added § 106.45(b)(7)(iv) requiring Title IX Coordinators to be responsible for the "effective implementation" of remedies to clarify that the burden of effectively implementing the remedies designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal access to education rests on the recipient and must not fall on the complainant.

The Department acknowledges that the 2001 Guidance discussed corrective action in terms of both remedying effects of the harassment on the victim and measures that end the harassment and prevent its recurrence.[1011] For reasons described in the "Deliberate Indifference" subsection of the "Adoption and Adaption of the Supreme Court's Framework to Address Sexual [1011] 2001 Guidance at 10 (stating that where the school has determined that sexual harassed occurred, "The recipient is, therefore, also responsible for remedying any effects of the harassment on the victim, as well as for ending the harassment and preventing its recurrence.").

Harassment" section of this preamble, the Department believes that remedies designed to restore and preserve equal access to the recipient's education programs or activities is the appropriate focus of these final regulations, and a recipient's selection and implementation of remedies will be evaluated by what is not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances.[1012] The [1012] Recipients must also document their reasons for concluding that the recipient's response to sexual harassment was not deliberately indifferent, under § 106.45(b)(10).

Department is persuaded by the Supreme Court's rationale in Davis that courts (and administrative agencies) should not second guess a school's disciplinary decisions, and the Department desires to avoid creating regulatory rules that effectively dictate particular disciplinary sanctions that obligate recipients to attempt to guarantee that sexual harassment does not recur, instead focusing on whether a recipient is effectively implementing remedies to complainants where respondents are found responsible for sexual harassment.

Changes: The final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(1)(i) to use the phrase "equal access" instead of "access," substitute "determination of responsibility" for "finding of responsibility," and state that remedies may include the same individualized services described in §

106.30 defining "supportive measures" but unlike supportive measures, remedies need not avoid burdening the respondent and can be punitive or disciplinary. We have also added § 106.45(b)(7)(iv) requiring Title IX Coordinators to be responsible for the "effective implementation" of remedies.

Comments: Some commenters objected to § 106.45(b)(1)(i) for referencing "due process protections" owed to respondents, claiming that respondents have no right to due process in campus administrative proceedings, or that courts do not require the specific due process protections that the proposed rules require. Some commenters criticized this provision for referring to due process protections for respondents because the reference implies that due process protections are not important for complainants and thereby discounts and downplays the needs of victims. At least one commenter recommended modifying this provision to specify that equitable treatment of both parties requires due process protections for both parties. Other commenters urged the Department not to use "due process" or "due process protections" in the final regulations and to instead refer to a "fair process" for all parties; similarly, at least one commenter asked for clarification whether by using the phrase "due process protections" the Department intended to reference constitutional due process or only those protections set forth in the proposed regulations.

Some commenters contended that § 106.45(b)(1)(i) is contradicted by other provisions in the proposed rules; for example, commenters characterized the

§ 106.44(c) emergency removal provision as contrary to the requirement for equitable treatment of a respondent in § 106.45(b)(1)(i) because the emergency removal section permits schools to remove respondents without due process protections. Other commenters pointed to the requirement in proposed § 106.44(b)(2) that Title IX Coordinators must file a formal complaint upon receiving multiple reports against the same respondent as inequitable to respondents in contravention of § 106.45(b)(1)(i) because a respondent should not have to undergo a grievance process without a cooperating complainant. Other commenters pointed to the presumption of non-responsibility in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) as "inequitable" to complainants in contradiction with § 106.45(b)(1)(i); other commenters characterized the live hearing and cross-examination requirements of § 106.45(b)(6)(i) as inequitable treatment of complainants.

At least one commenter asked the Department to answer whether being sensitive to the trauma experienced by victims would violate this provision by being inequitable to respondents. At least one commenter requested that as part of treating the parties equitably, this provision should require a Title IX

Coordinator to offer, and keep lists available that describe, various off-campus supportive resources available to both complainants and respondents, including resources oriented toward survivors and those oriented toward accused students. One commenter asserted that this provision should include a statement that equitable treatment of a respondent must include remedies for a respondent where a complainant is found to have brought a false allegation.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' varied concerns about use of the phrase "due process protections" in § 106.45(b)(1)(i) and perceived tension between this provision and other provisions in the proposed rules. The Department agrees with commenters that "due process protections" caused unnecessary confusion about whether the proposed rules intended to reference due process of law under the U.S. Constitution, or only those protections embodied in the proposed rules. In response to such comments, the final regulations replace "due process protections" with "a grievance process that complies with § 106.45" throughout the final regulations, including in this provision, § 106.45(b)(1)(i). As explained in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, while the Department believes that the § 106.45 grievance process is consistent with constitutional due process obligations, these final regulations apply to all recipients including private institutions that do not owe constitutional protections to their students and employees, and making this terminology change throughout the final regulations helps clarify that position.

The Department disagrees that § 106.45(b)(1)(i) implies that the protections in the grievance process do not also benefit complainants, or should not be given to complainants. The grievance process is of equal benefit to complainants and respondents and each provision has been selected for the purpose of creating a fair process likely to result in reliable outcomes resolving sexual harassment allegations. The equitable distinction in § 106.45(b)(1)(i) recognizes the significance of remedies for complainants and disciplinary sanctions for respondents, but does not alter the benefit of the § 106.45 grievance process providing procedural rights and protections for both parties.

The Department understands commenters' views that certain other provisions in the final regulations are "inequitable" for either complainants or respondents. For reasons explained in this preamble with respect to each particular provision, the Department believes that each provision in the final regulations contributes to effectuating Title IX's non-discrimination mandate while providing a fair process for both parties. Section 106.45(b)(1)(i) was not intended to create a standard of “equitableness” under which other provisions of the proposed rules should be measured. In response to commenters’ apparent perception that § 106.45(b)(1)(i) created a general equitability requirement that applied to the proposed rules or created conflict between this provision and other parts of the proposed rules, the final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(1)(i) to more clearly express its intent – that equitable treatment of a complainant means providing remedies, and equitable treatment of a respondent means imposing disciplinary sanctions only after following the grievance process.[1013]

Being sensitive to the trauma a complainant may have experienced does not violate § 106.45(b)(1)(i) or any other

[1013] The Department notes that similar language is included in the final regulations in § 106.44(a) such that a recipient's response in the absence of a formal complaint must treat complainants equitably by offering supportive measures and must treat respondents equitably by imposing sanctions only after following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45.

provision of the grievance process, so long as what the commenter means by "being sensitive" does not lead a Title IX Coordinator, investigator, or decision-maker to lose impartiality, prejudge the facts at issue, or demonstrate bias for or against any party.[1014] The Department declines to require recipients to list off-campus supportive resources for complainants, respondents, or both,

[1014] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

though the final regulations do not prohibit a recipient from choosing to do this. The Department believes that § 106.45(b)(1)(ix), requiring recipients to describe the range of supportive measures available to complainants and respondents, is sufficient to serve the Department's interest in ensuring that parties are aware of the availability of supportive measures. The Department declines to require remedies for respondents in situations where a complainant is found to have brought a false allegation. These final regulations are focused on sexual harassment allegations, including remedies for victims of sexual harassment, and not on remedies for other kinds of misconduct.[1015]

[1015] The Department notes that the final regulations add § 106.71 prohibiting retaliation, and paragraph (b)(2) of that section cautions recipients that a determination regarding responsibility, alone, is not sufficient to conclude that a party has made a materially false statement in bad faith. The Department leaves recipients with discretion to address false statements (by any party) under the recipient's own code of conduct.

Changes: Section 106.45(b)(1)(i) is revised by replacing "due process protections" with "a grievance process that complies with § 106.45" and by stating that treating complainants equitably means providing remedies where a respondent has been determined to be responsible, and treating respondents equitably means imposing disciplinary sanctions or other actions that are not supportive measures as defined in § 106.30 only after following the § 106.45 grievance process.

Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii) Objective Evaluation of All Relevant Evidence

Comments: Numerous commenters supported § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) asserting that it ensures fairness, accuracy, due process, and impartiality to all parties. Several commenters shared personal experiences with Title IX investigations in which they witnessed the recipient ignoring, discounting, burying, or destroying exculpatory evidence. Similarly, other commenters stated that they have observed inculpatory evidence being ignored or discounted particularly when a respondent is a star athlete or otherwise prominent within the recipient's educational community.

Other commenters expressed concerns about requiring an objective

evaluation of relevant evidence. Some commenters asserted that it would be challenging to get such evidence in sexual assault cases, because sexual assault often happens without witnesses who can corroborate stories. One commenter contended that getting objective evidence every time would be a "near-impossible task," while another felt it is "unrealistic" to expect tangible evidence in all cases. Some commenters argued that such a high standard would likely chill reporting. One commenter was concerned that an objective evaluation of all relevant evidence could lead to respondents extending investigations indefinitely since almost anything could be relevant and new evidence or witnesses might surface regularly.

Some commenters expressed support for this provision's preclusion

of making credibility determinations based on party status because it is inappropriate to make presumptions about trustworthiness based on whether a person is a complainant or respondent. Other commenters opposed this part of § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) and suggested modifying the provision to require that credibility determinations not be based "solely" on a person's status, but argued that fact-finders could base credibility determinations in part on a person's status as a complainant or respondent. These commenters opposed any categorical bar to the fact-finder's considerations when determining credibility, and questioned whether this provision is in significant tension with the presumption of non-responsibility in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv). Commenters asserted that § 106.45(b)(1)(ii)'s requirement is problematic for adjudicators because it directs them to ignore central factors in credibility determinations, such as what interests a party has at stake. Commenters argued that courts, law enforcement, and other investigators have always considered a party's status as a defendant or plaintiff when determining how to weigh evidence and testimony. Commenters argued that recipients should be permitted to consider a party's status when considering the totality of the circumstances to reach credibility determinations.

A number of commenters proposed modifications related to training that commenters believed would improve implementation of this provision and promote objectivity and competence, such as training about applying rules of evidence, how to collect and evaluate evidence, and how to determine if evidence is credible, relevant, or reliable.

Many commenters suggested types of evidence that should be considered, specific investigative processes, or other evidentiary requirements. Commenters proposed, for example, that the final regulations should require consideration of letters, videos, photos, e-mails, texts, phone calls, social media, mental health history, drug, alcohol, and medication use, and rape kits. Commenters also proposed requiring a variety of investigative techniques, including asking the Department to require recipients to take immediate action to collect and test all evidence, including permitting recipients to interview community members and other witnesses (e.g., roommates, dorm residents, classmates, fraternity members). Commenters also asked whether the recipient may consider evidence of the respondent's lack of credibility, other bad acts, and misrepresentation of key facts. Some commenters asked whether the proposed rules would allow respondents to introduce lie detector test results and impact statements. Some commenters wanted the final regulations to require investigators to identify any data gaps in investigative report noting unavailable information (e.g., unable to interview eyewitnesses or to visit the scene of an incident) and all attempts to fill those data gaps, as well as requiring hearing boards to explain the specific evidentiary basis for each finding. Other commenters asserted that the final regulations should require all evidence to be shared with the parties to ensure fairness, and that an investigator should not get to decide what is relevant.

Commenters requested that the Department clarify how to evaluate whether evidence is relevant. Commenters asked how recipients should make credibility determinations, and whether it would be permissible to admit character and reputation evidence, including past sexual history or testimony based on hearsay. One commenter asserted that requiring an "objective evaluation" leaves questions about what this term will mean in practice, noting that similar provisions in the VAWA negotiated rulemaking in 2012 raised concerns that the subjectivity (at least in defining bias) would be an overreach into campus administrative decisions.

Some commenters suggested specific modifications to the wording of the proposed provision. For example, individual commenters suggested that the Department: replace "objective" with "impartial' for consistency with VAWA; add language emphasizing that the recipient's determination must be unbiased since recipient bias has been a significant problem in Title IX investigations; add that objective evaluation be "based on rules of evidence under applicable State law;"

add that schools shall resolve doubts "in favor of considering evidence to be relevant and exculpatory" to address the danger that recipients will narrowly construe what constitutes exculpatory evidence; and add that unsubstantiated theories of trauma cannot be relied on to conclude that a particular complainant suffered from trauma or be used to explain away a complainant's inconsistencies. One commenter asserted that underweighting relevant testimony simply because someone is a friend to a party in a case will make it materially harder to prove an assault and will not promote equitable treatment for all parties; this commenter mistakenly believed that the proposed rules used the phrase "arbiters should underweight character feedback from biased witnesses" and wanted that language changed.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support of this provision and acknowledges other commenters' concerns about § 106.45(b)(1)(ii). While the gathering and evaluation of available evidence will take time and effort on the part of the recipient, the Department views any difficulties associated with the provision's evidence requirement to be outweighed by the due process benefits the provision will bring to both parties during the grievance process. The recipient's investigation and adjudication of the allegations must be based on an objective evaluation of the evidence available in a particular case; the type and extent of evidence available will differ based on the facts of each incident. The Department understands that in some situations, there may be little or no evidence other than the statements of the parties themselves, and this provision applies to those situations. As some commenters have observed, Title IX campus proceedings often involve allegations with competing plausible narratives and no eyewitnesses, and such situations still must be evaluated by objectively evaluating the relevant evidence, regardless of whether that available, relevant evidence consists of the parties' own statements, statements of witnesses, or other evidence. This provision does not require "objective" evidence (as in, corroborating evidence); this provision requires that the recipient objectively evaluate the relevant evidence that is available in a particular case. The Department disagrees that this provision could permit endlessly delayed proceedings while parties or the recipient search for "all" relevant evidence; § 106.45(b)(1)(v)

requires recipients to conclude the grievance process within designated reasonable time frames and thus "all" the evidence is tempered by what a thorough investigation effort can gather within a reasonably prompt time frame.

The Department agrees with commenters who noted the inappropriateness of investigators and decision-makers drawing conclusions about credibility based on a party's status as a complainant or respondent. While the Department appreciates the concerns by commenters advocating that the final regulations should permit status-based inferences as to a person's credibility, the Department believes that to do so would invite bias and partiality. To that end, we disagree with commenters who opposed categorical bars on the factors that investigators or decision-makers may consider, and who want to partially judge a person's credibility based on the person's status as a complainant, respondent, or witness. A process that permitted credibility inferences or conclusions to be based on party status would inevitably prejudge the facts at issue rather than determine facts based on the objective evaluation of evidence, and this would decrease the likelihood that the outcome reached would be accurate.

The Department disagrees that § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) conflicts with the presumption of non-responsibility; in fact, § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) helps to ensure that the presumption is not improperly applied by recipients. Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) affords respondents a presumption of non-responsibility until the conclusion of the grievance process. Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii) applies throughout the grievance process, including with respect to application of the presumption, to ensure that the presumption of non-responsibility is not interpreted to mean that a respondent is considered truthful, or that the respondent's statements are credible or not credible, based on the respondent's status as a respondent. Treating the respondent as not responsible until the conclusion of the grievance process does not mean considering the respondent truthful or credible; rather, that presumption buttresses the requirement that investigators and decision-makers serve impartially without prejudging the facts at issue.[1016] Determinations of credibility, including of the respondent, must be based on objective evaluation of relevant evidence – not on inferences based on party

[1016] For further discussion on the purpose and function of the presumption of non-responsibility, see the "Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) Presumption of Non-Responsibility" subsection of the "General Requirements for § 106.45 Grievance Process" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble.

status. Both the presumption of non-responsibility and this provision are designed to promote a fair process by which an impartial fact-finder determines whether the respondent is responsible for perpetrating sexual harassment. Every determination regarding responsibility must be based on evidence, not assumptions about respondents or complainants. The Department disagrees that disregarding party status poses problems for investigators or adjudicators or directs them to ignore central factors in reaching credibility determinations. Title IX personnel are not prevented from understanding and taking into account each party's interests and the "stakes" at issue for each party, yet what is at stake does not, by itself, reflect on the party's truthfulness.

In response to commenters' concerns about how to determine "relevance" in the context of these final regulations, we have revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) specifically to require training on issues of relevance (including application of the "rape shield" protections in § 106.45(b)(6)). Thus, these final regulations require Title IX personnel to be well trained in how to conduct a grievance process;

within the requirements stated in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) recipients have flexibility to adopt additional training requirements concerning evidence collection or evaluation.

Similarly, the Department declines to adopt commenters' suggestions that the final regulations explicitly allow or disallow certain types of evidence or utilize specific investigative techniques. The Department believes that the final regulations reach the appropriate balance between prescribing sufficiently detailed procedures to foster a consistently applied grievance process, while deferring to recipients to tailor rules that best fit each recipient's unique needs. While the proposed rules do not speak to admissibility of hearsay,[1017] prior bad acts, character evidence, [1017] While not addressed to hearsay evidence as such, § 106.45(b)(6)(i), which requires postsecondary institutions to hold live hearings to adjudicate formal complaints of sexual harassment, states that the decision-maker must not rely on the statement of a party or witness who does not submit to cross-examination, resulting in exclusion of statements that remain untested by cross-examination.

polygraph (lie detector) results, standards for authentication of evidence, or similar issues concerning evidence, the final regulations require recipients to gather and evaluate relevant evidence,[1018] with the understanding that this includes both inculpatory and exculpatory evidence, and the final regulations deem questions and evidence about a complainant's

[1018] The final regulations do not define relevance, and the ordinary meaning of the word should be understood and applied.

prior sexual behavior to be irrelevant with two exceptions[1019] and preclude use of any information protected by a legally recognized privilege (e.g., attorney-client).[1020] Within these evidentiary parameters recipients retain the flexibility to adopt rules that govern how the recipient's investigator and decision-maker evaluate evidence and conduct

---

[1019] Section 106.45(b)(6) contains rape shield protections, providing that questions and evidence about the complainant's sexual predisposition or prior sexual behavior are not relevant, unless such questions and evidence about the complainant's prior sexual behavior are offered to prove that someone other than the respondent committed the conduct alleged by the complainant, or if the questions and evidence concern specific incidents of the complainant's prior sexual behavior with respect to the respondent and are offered to prove consent.

[1020] Section 106.45(b)(1)(x) (precluding a recipient from using information or evidence protected by a legally recognized privilege unless the holder of the privilege has waived the privilege).

the grievance process (so long as such rules apply equally to both parties).[1021] Relevance is the standard that these final regulations require, and any evidentiary rules that a recipient chooses must respect this standard of relevance. For example, a recipient may not adopt a rule excluding relevant

---

[1021] Of course, the manner in which a recipient adopted or applied such a rule or practice concerning evaluation of evidence could constitute sex discrimination, a situation that § 106.45(a) cautions recipients against, and the entirety of a recipient's grievance process must be conducted impartially, free from conflicts of interest or bias for or against complainants or respondents. Further, the introductory sentence of § 106.45(b) has been revised in the final regulations to ensure that a recipient's self-selected rules must apply equally to both parties. The Department notes that the universe of evidence given to the parties for inspection and review under § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) must consist of all evidence directly related to the allegations; determinations as to whether evidence is "relevant" are made when finalizing the investigative report, pursuant to § 106.45(b)(5)(vii) (requiring creation of an investigative report that "fairly summarizes all relevant evidence"). Only "relevant" evidence can be subject to the decision-maker's objective evaluation in reaching a determination, and relevant evidence must be considered, subject to the rape shield and legally recognized privilege exceptions contained in the final regulations. This does not preclude, for instance, a recipient adopting a rule or providing training to a decision-maker regarding how to assign weight to a given type of relevant evidence, so long as such a rule applies equally to both parties.

evidence because such relevant evidence may be unduly prejudicial, concern prior bad acts, or constitute character evidence. A recipient may adopt rules of order or decorum to forbid badgering a witness, and may fairly deem repetition of the same question to be irrelevant.

The Department disagrees that requiring an "objective evaluation" leaves questions about what this will mean in practice; the final regulations contain sufficient clarity concerning objectivity, while leaving recipients discretion to apply the grievance process in a manner that best fits the recipient's needs. Similarly, the Department is not persuaded that the final regulations permit inappropriate subjectivity as to defining bias or constitute overreach into campus administrative proceedings. A

commenter raising that concern noted that the same issue was raised during negotiated rulemaking under VAWA; however, the Department believes that these final regulations prohibit bias with adequate specificity (i.e., bias against complainants or respondents generally, or against an individual complainant or respondent) yet reserve adequate flexibility for recipients to apply the prohibition against bias without unduly overreaching into a recipient's internal administrative affairs. To the extent that the commenter was arguing that prohibiting bias is itself an overreach into campus administrative decisions, the Department does not agree. The text of Title IX prohibits recipients from engaging in discrimination on the basis of sex. Biased decision making increases the risk of erroneous outcomes because bias, rather than evidence, dictates the conclusion. Sex-based bias is a specific risk in the context of sexual harassment allegations, where the underlying conduct at issue inherently raises issues related to sex, making these proceedings susceptible to improper sex-based bias that prevents reliable outcomes. Other forms of bias on the part of individuals in charge of investigating and adjudicating

allegations also lessen the likelihood that outcomes are reliable and viewed as legitimate; because Title IX's non-discrimination mandate requires that recipients accurately identify (and remedy) sexual harassment occurring in education programs or activities, these final regulations prohibit bias on the part of Title IX personnel (in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii)) and require objective evaluation of evidence (in § 106.45(b)(1)(ii)).

Rather than require recipients to take "immediate action" to collect all evidence, the final regulations require the recipient to investigate the allegations in a formal complaint[1022] yet permit recipients flexibility to conduct the investigation, under the constraint that the investigation (and adjudication)

---

[1022] Section 106.45(b)(5).

must be completed within the recipient's designated, reasonably prompt time frames.[1023]

While the final regulations do not require hearing boards (as opposed to a single individual acting as the decision-maker), the final regulations do not preclude the recipient from using a hearing board to function as a decision-maker, such that more than one individual serves as a decision-maker, each of whom must fulfill the obligations under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). Whether or not the determination regarding responsibility is made by a single decision-maker or by multiple decision-makers serving as a hearing board, § 106.45(b)(7)(ii) requires that decision-makers lay out the evidentiary basis for conclusions reached in the case, in a written determination regarding responsibility. Prior to the time that a determination regarding responsibility will be reached, § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) requires the recipient to make all evidence directly related to the allegations available to the parties for their inspection and review, and § 106.45(b)(5)(vii) requires that recipients create an investigative report that fairly summarizes all relevant evidence. The final regulations add language in §

---

[1023] Section 106.45(b)(1)(v).

106.45(b)(5)(vi) stating that evidence subject to inspection and review must include inculpatory and exculpatory evidence whether obtained from a party or from another source. The Department does not believe it is necessary to require investigators to identify data gaps in the investigative report, because the parties' right to inspect and review evidence, and review and respond to the investigative report, adequately provide opportunity to identify any perceived data gaps and challenge such deficiencies.

The Department disagrees that an investigator should not get to decide what is relevant, and the final regulations give the parties ample opportunity to challenge relevancy determinations. The investigator is obligated to gather evidence directly related to the allegations whether or not the recipient intends to rely on such evidence (for instance, where evidence is directly related to the allegations but the recipient's investigator does not believe the evidence to be credible and thus does not intend to rely on it). The parties may then inspect and review the evidence directly related to the allegations.[1024] The investigator must take into consideration the parties'

[1024] Section 106.45(b)(5)(vi).

responses and then determine what evidence is relevant and summarize the relevant evidence in the investigative report.[1025] The parties then have equal opportunity to review the investigative report; if a party disagrees with an investigator's determination about relevance, the party can make that argument in the party's written response to the investigative report under §

[1025] Section 106.45(b)(5)(vii).

106.45(b)(5)(vii) and to the decision-maker at any hearing held; either way the decision-maker is obligated to objectively evaluate all relevant evidence and the parties have the opportunity to argue about what is relevant (and about the persuasiveness of relevant evidence). The final regulations also provide the parties equal appeal rights including on the ground of procedural irregularity,[1026] which could include a recipient's failure to objectively evaluate all relevant evidence, including inculpatory and exculpatory evidence. Furthermore, § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) requires the recipient's investigator and decision-maker to be well-trained to conduct a grievance process compliant with § 106.45 including determining "relevance" within the parameters of the final regulations.

[1026] Section 106.45(b)(8).

While the Department appreciates commenters' desire for more oversight as to how a recipient defines or "counts" exculpatory evidence, based on commenters' observations that recipients have not consistently understood the need to consider exculpatory evidence as relevant, the Department believes that the final regulations adequately address this concern by specifying that relevant evidence must include both inculpatory and exculpatory evidence, ensuring the parties have opportunities to challenge relevance determinations, and requiring Title IX personnel to be trained to serve impartially including specific training for investigators and decision-makers on issues of relevance.

While some commenters wished to alter the wording of the provision in numerous ways, for the reasons explained above the Department believes that § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) appropriately serves the Department's goal of providing clear parameters for evaluation of evidence while leaving flexibility for recipients within those parameters. The Department thus declines to remove the word "objective," require recipients to adopt any jurisdiction's rules of evidence, or add rules or presumptions that would require particular types of evidence to be relevant.

Changes: In the final regulations we add § 106.45(b)(1)(x), precluding the recipient from using evidence that would result in disclosure of information protected by a legally recognized privilege. The final regulations add language in § 106.45(b)(5)(vi) stating that evidence subject to inspection and review must include inculpatory and exculpatory evidence whether obtained from a party or from another source. We have also revised § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to specifically require investigators and decision-makers to receive training on issues of relevance.

Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) Impartiality and Mandatory Training of Title IX Personnel; Directed Question 4 (training)

Comments: Many commenters expressed support for § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) and, in response to the NPRM's directed question about training, stated that the training provided for in this provision is adequate. Several commenters believed this provision provides recipients with appropriate flexibility to decide the amount and type of training recipients must provide to individuals involved with Title IX proceedings. At least one commenter, on behalf of a college, noted that the college already provides for investigators free from bias or conflict of interest. Several commenters supported this provision because its prohibition on bias, conflicts of interest, and training materials that rely on sex stereotypes

will lead to impartial investigations and adjudications. One commenter asserted that the proposed regulations help reduce bias by ensuring that training programs are fair and neutral and noted that social scientists and legal academics have argued that training programs can help adjudicatory bodies make better decisions.[1027]

---

[1027] Commenters cited: Stephen E. Fienberg & Mark J. Schervish, The Relevance of Bayesian Inference for the Presentation of Statistical Evidence and Legal Decisionmaking, 66 BOSTON UNIV. L. REV. 771 (1986) (advocating that jurors be instructed in Bayesian probabilities); James J. Gobert, In Search of the Impartial Jury, 79 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 269, 326 (1988) (suggesting that juries receive "impartiality training"); Jennifer A. Richeson & Richard J. Nussbaum, The Impact of Multiculturalism Versus Color-Blindness on Racial Bias, 40 J. OF EXPERIMENTAL SOCIAL PSYCHOL. 417 (2004) (explaining how diversity training can lead to less implicit bias); Justin D. Levinson, Forgotten Racial Equality: Implicit Bias, Decisionmaking, and Misremembering, DUKE L. J. 345 (2007) (arguing for diversity training).

Many commenters supported § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) because of personal experiences with Title IX campus proceedings involving perceived bias or conflicts of interest that commenters believed rendered the investigation or adjudication unfair. One commenter supported this provision because the commenter believed it will counteract the ideological propaganda having to do with sex and gender that has been disseminated throughout institutions of higher education. Another commenter believed this provision will help remedy widespread sex bias against male students at colleges and universities. One commenter favored this provision because the topics considered in a Title IX process are sensitive and personal, improper handling of cases can potentially retraumatize survivors or lead to unfair outcomes for both survivors and the accused, and mandatory training should lead to better results for all involved. One commenter analyzed how and why unconscious biases and sex-based stereotypes are pernicious especially in university disciplinary hearings, can constitute Title IX violations, and lead to biased outcomes. This commenter argued that bias can subvert procedural protections, which are necessary to render fair outcomes, and biased adjudicators cannot properly carry out their duties. One commenter supported this provision's restriction against sex stereotyping in training materials for Title IX personnel, arguing that while appropriate training can reduce bias, improper trainings can leave biases unchecked or exacerbate underlying biases. The commenter argued that numerous examples exist showing that recipients' training documents given to adjudicators in university sexual misconduct processes have demonstrated bias especially against respondents, making it impossible for decision-makers to be impartial and unbiased.[1028]

[1028] Commenters asserted that as of 2014, Harvard Law School's disciplinary board training contained slides to this effect and that one Harvard Law School professor stated that these slides were "100% aimed to convince [adjudicators] to believe complainants, precisely when they seem unreliable and incoherent" citing to Emily Yoffe, The Bad Science Behind Campus Response to Sexual Assault, THE ATLANTIC (Sept. 8, 2017). Commenters further stated that at Ohio State University, for instance, decision-makers were told that a "victim centered approach can lead to safer campus communities." Doe v. Ohio State Univ., No. 2:15-CV-2830, 2016 WL 692547, at *3 (S.D. Ohio, Feb. 22, 2016). Commenters further stated that same Ohio State University training guide, for example, told decision-makers that "[s]ex offenders are overwhelmingly white males." Id.; see also Doe v. Univ. of Pa., 270 F. Supp. 3d 799, 823 (E.D. Pa. 2017).

Another commenter supported § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) combined with the other provisions in § 106.45 because while nothing can completely eliminate gender or racial bias from the system, bias can be reduced by expanding the evidence considered by decision-makers, a function served by a full investigation and hearings with cross-examination. The commenter argued that decisions are most biased when they rely on less

evidence and more hunches because hunches are easily tainted by subconscious racial or gender bias.[1029] The commenter asserted that the obligation of the law under Title IX is to treat each person as an individual, not as a member of a class subject to prejudgment and prejudice on the basis of sex, and nowhere is the problem of

---

[1029] In support of the proposition that most decisions after a full trial are not based on using race as a proxy but rather on the evidence at trial, resulting in racially fair decisions, while racial bias is rampant in low-stakes, low-evidence decision making where people make decisions on little evidence, the commenter cited Stephen P. Klein, et al., Race and Imprisonment Decisions in California, 247 SCIENCE 812 (1990). More than one commenter cited to Driving While Black in Maryland, AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION (ACLU) (Feb. 2, 2010) https://www.aclu.org/cases/driving-while-black-maryland, for similar propositions.

sex bias more pronounced than in the area of perception, prejudgment, and prejudice in the matter of incidences of violence between members of the opposite sex. The commenter supported the Department's proposed rules, including this provision, based on the Department's authority and obligation to issue regulations that end the discrimination based on sex that exists in Title IX programs themselves.[1030]

One commenter supported this provision but noted that the Supreme Court has recognized that as a practical matter it is difficult if not impossible for an adjudicator "to free himself from the influence" of circumstances that would give rise to bias, and the private nature

---

[1030] Commenters asserted that services for male victims of opposite sex violence are nearly non-existent at educational institutions and in society at large because of an ingrained "man as perpetrator/woman as victim" stereotype, which stereotype has always been false, shown by CDC data revealing the prevalence of male victims of sexual violence: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey (NISVS): 2015 Data Brief Tables 9, 11 (2018).

of motives "underscore the need for objective rules" for determining when an adjudicator is biased.[1031] This commenter asserted recipients thus need to have objective rules for determining bias. A few commenters supporting this provision recommended that the Department, or recipients on their own, establish a clear process or mechanism for reporting conflicts of [1031] Commenters cited: Caperton v. A. T. Massey Coal Co., 556 U.S. 868, 883 (2009) (holding that a judge cannot hear a case centered on the financial interests of someone who substantially supported the judge's election campaign).

---

interest or demanding recusal for bias during the investigative process.

Several commenters supported this provision but urged the Department to make the training materials referred to in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) publicly available because transparency is the most effective means to eradicate the problems with biased Title IX proceedings, which problems are often rooted in biased training materials.

These commenters argued that when recipients know that their training materials are subject to scrutiny, recipients will be more careful to ensure that Title IX personnel are being trained to be impartial. One commenter asserted that a lot of training is conducted via webinars and that public disclosure of training materials must include audio and video of the training as well as documents or slideshow presentations used during the training.

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), and the commenters who provided feedback in response to the Department's directed question as to whether this provision adequately addresses training implicated under the proposed rules. The Department agrees with commenters who noted that prohibiting conflicts of interest and bias, including racial bias, on the part of people administering a grievance process is an essential part of providing both parties a fair process and increasing the accuracy and reliability of determinations reached in grievance processes. Recognizing that commenters recounted instances of experience with perceived conflicts of interest and bias that resulted in unfair treatment and biased outcomes, the Department believes that this provision provides a necessary safeguard to improve the impartiality, reliability, and legitimacy of Title IX proceedings.[1032] The Department agrees with a commenter who asserted that recipients should have objective rules for determining when an adjudicator (or Title IX Coordinator, investigator, or person who facilitates an informal resolution process) is biased, and the Department leaves recipients discretion to decide how best to implement the prohibition on conflicts of interest and bias, including whether a recipient wishes to provide a process for parties to assert claims of conflict of interest of bias during the investigation. The Department notes that § 106.45(b)(8) in the final regulations requires recipients to allow both parties equal right to appeal including on the basis that the Title IX Coordinator, investigator, or decision-maker had a conflict of interest or bias that affected the outcome. The Department is persuaded by the numerous commenters who urged the Department to require training materials to be available for public inspection, to create transparency and better effectuate the requirements of §

---

[1032] The 2001 Guidance at 21 contained a similar training recommendation: "Finally, the school must make sure that all designated employees [referring to designated Title IX Coordinators] have adequate training as to what conduct constitutes sexual harassment and are able to explain how the grievance procedure operates."

106.45(b)(1)(iii). The final regulations impose that requirement in § 106.45(b)(10).

Additionally, the Department will not tolerate discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin, which is prohibited under Title VI. If any recipient discriminates against any person involved in a Title IX proceeding on the basis of that person's race, color, or national origin, then the Department will address such discrimination under Title VI and its implementing regulations, in addition to such discrimination potentially constituting bias prohibited under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) of these final regulations.

Changes: The final regulations revise § 106.45(b)(10)(i)(D) to require that training materials referred to in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) must be made publicly available on a recipient's website, or if the recipient does not have a website such materials must be made available upon request for inspection by members of the public.

Comments: Several commenters expressed skepticism that any recipient employees can be objective, fair, unbiased, or free from conflicts of interest because a recipient's employees share the recipient's interest in protecting the recipient's reputation or furthering a recipient's financial interests. Some commenters asserted this leads to recipient employees being unwilling to treat complainants fairly while others asserted this leads to recipient employees being unwilling to treat respondents fairly. A few commenters asserted that this problem of inherent conflicts of interest between recipient employees and complainants means that the only way to avoid conflicts of interest is to require recipients to use an external, impartial arbiter or require investigations to be done by people unaffiliated with any students in the school, and one commenter argued that because all paid staff members are biased (in favor of the recipient), the solution is to allow complainants and respondents to pick the persons who run the grievance proceedings similar to jury selection. One commenter suggested that to counter institutional bias, which the commenter argued was on display in notorious cover-up situations at prestigious universities where employees committed sexual abuse, the proposed rules should specifically require training on conflicts of interest caused by employees' misplaced loyalty to the recipient. Another commenter stated that schools must be required to purchase liability insurance covering exposure arising from the handling of sexual harassment claims, to ensure that they do not have a secret conflict of interest that might cause them to put a finger on the scale one way or the other in the course of investigating or adjudicating a Title IX complaint.

Several commenters indicated that this provision seems reasonable but requested clarity as to what might in practice constitute a conflict of interest under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), with one commenter noting that this issue often arises when a school district hires their legal counsel, insurance carrier, or risk pool to complete an investigation or respond to a formal complaint. Another commenter requested more information on what would constitute "general bias" for or against complainants or respondents under this provision, expressing concern that without any framework for evaluating whether a particular administrator is tainted by such bias this provision is amorphous and will add confusion and grounds for attack at smaller institutions where many student affairs administrators fill several different roles. Another commenter asked for clarification that school employees serving in the Title IX process should be presumed to be unbiased notwithstanding having previously investigated a matter involving one or more of particular parties, or else this provision could be quite costly by requiring a school district to hire outside investigators every time an investigator deals with a party more than once.

Several commenters recommended countering inherent institutional conflicts of interest on the part of recipient employees by revising the final regulations to avoid any commingling of administrative and adjudicative roles. Several commenters offered the specific recommendation that the Title IX Coordinator must not be an employment supervisor of the decision-maker in the school's administrative hierarchy and if investigators are independent contractors, the Title IX Coordinator should not have a role in hiring or firing such investigators. The same

commenters recommended bolstering neutrality and independence by removing the role of counseling complainants from the office that coordinates the grievance process and requiring that investigators have some degree of institutional independence. One commenter asserted that if the Department intends to prohibit any overlap in responsibilities among the Title IX Coordinator, investigator, or decision-maker, the Department must make that intention clear.

Many commenters requested clarification as to whether this provision's prohibition against conflicts of interest and bias would be interpreted to bar anyone from being a Title IX Coordinator, investigator, or decision-maker if the person currently or in their past has ever advocated for victims' rights or otherwise worked in sexual violence prevention fields. Several commenters argued against such an interpretation because individuals with that kind of experience are often highly knowledgeable about sexual violence and able to serve impartially, while several other commenters argued that Title IX-related personnel are a self-selected group likely to include victim advocates, self-identified victims, and those associated with women's studies and thus come to a Title IX role with biases against men, respondents, or both. One commenter asserted that while the choice of a professor's field of study may or may not indicate bias, the fact that a university relies on volunteers to staff Title IX hearing panels is highly questionable because self-selection creates the likelihood that those who "want" to serve on a Title IX hearing board have preconceived ideas and views about whether male students are guilty, regardless of the actual facts and circumstances, and thus the final regulations should require the recipient to select decision-makers based on random selection from its entire faculty and administrators. One commenter shared an example of bias on the part of the single administrator tasked with ruling on the commenter's client's appeal of a responsibility finding, where the appeal decision-maker had recently retweeted a survivor advocacy organization's tweet "To survivors everywhere, we believe you," yet the recipient overruled a bias objection stating that nothing suggested that such a tweet meant the appeal decision-maker was biased against that particular respondent. This commenter proposed adding language explaining that a "reasonable person" standard will be applied to determine bias, along with cautionary language that a history of working or advocating on one side or another of this issue might constitute bias. One commenter asserted that Federal courts of appeal, including the Sixth Circuit, agree that "being a feminist, being affiliated with a gender-studies program, or researching sexual assault does not support a reasonable inference than an individual is biased against men."[1033] This commenter believed that the proposed rules offered no clarity on whether the Department would consider bias claims based on being a feminist or working in the sexual assault field to be "frivolous" or would be taken seriously.

Several commenters urged the Department to expand this provision to prohibit "perceived" conflicts of interest

---

[1033] Commenter cited: Doe v. Miami Univ., 882 F.3d 579, 593 fn. 6 (6th Cir. 2018).

or “the appearance” of bias in line with standards that require judges not to have even the appearance of bias or impropriety; other commenters urged the Department to apply a presumption that campus decision-makers are free of bias, noting that courts require proof that a conduct official had an “actual” bias against the party because of the party’s sex, and the proposed rules seem to reverse this judicial presumption, opening the door to numerous claims that undermine the presumption of honesty in campus proceedings. One commenter suggested a more clearly defined standard by specifying that Title IX personnel not have a personal bias or prejudice for or against complainants or respondents generally, and not have an interest, relationship, or other consideration that may compromise or have the appearance of compromising the individual's judgment with respect to any individual complainant or respondent. One commenter suggested that this provision should require "nondiscriminatory" investigations and adjudications instead of being "not biased." One commenter believed that student leaders should take more responsibility for addressing sexual misconduct and might do a better job than bureaucrats can; the commenter asserted that the final regulations should not prohibit recipients from relying on students to investigate and adjudicate sexual misconduct cases.

Discussion: The Department understands commenters' concerns that the final regulations work within a framework where a recipient's own employees are permitted to serve as

Title IX personnel,[1034] and the potential conflicts of interest this creates. The final regulations leave recipients flexibility to use their own employees, or to outsource Title IX investigation and adjudication functions, and the Department encourages recipients to pursue alternatives to the inherent difficulties that arise when a recipient's own employees are expected to perform

[1034] References in this preamble to "Title IX personnel" mean Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, and persons who facilitate informal resolution processes.

these functions free from conflicts of interest and bias. The Department notes that several commenters favorably described regional center models that could involve recipients coordinating with each other to outsource Title IX grievance proceedings to experts free from potential conflicts of interest stemming from affiliation with the recipient. The Department declines to require recipients to use outside, unaffiliated Title IX personnel because the Department does not conclude that such prescription is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the final regulations; although recipients may face challenges with respect to ensuring that personnel serve free from conflicts of interest and bias, recipients can comply with the final regulations by using the recipient's own employees. Unless prescription is necessary to achieve compliance with the final regulations, the Department does not wish to interfere with recipients' discretion to conduct a recipient's own internal, administrative affairs. The Department is also sensitive to the reality that prescriptions regarding employment relationships likely will result in many recipients being compelled to hire additional personnel in order to comply with these final regulations, and the Department wishes to prescribe only those measures necessary for compliance, without unnecessarily diverting recipients' resources into hiring personnel and away from other priorities important to recipients and the students they serve. For these reasons, the Department declines to define certain employment relationships or administrative hierarchy arrangements as per se prohibited conflicts of interest under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii).[1035] The Department is cognizant that the Department's authority under Title IX extends to regulation of recipients themselves, and not to the individual personnel serving as Title IX Coordinators, investigators, decision-makers, or persons who facilitate an informal resolution process.

---

[1035] Although the decision-maker must be different from any individual serving as a Title IX Coordinator or investigator, pursuant to § 106.45(b)(7)(i), the final regulations do not preclude a Title IX Coordinator from also serving as the investigator, and the final regulations do not prescribe any particular administrative "chain of reporting" restrictions or declare any such administrative arrangements to be per se conflicts of interest prohibited under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii).

Thus, the Department will hold a recipient accountable for the end result of using Title IX personnel free from conflicts of interest and bias, regardless of the employment or supervisory relationships among various Title IX personnel. To the extent that recipients wish to adopt best practices to better ensure that conflicts of interest do not cause violations of the final regulations, recipients have discretion to adopt practices suggested by commenters, such as ensuring that investigators have institutional independence or deciding that Title IX Coordinators should have no role in the hiring or firing of investigators.

For similar reasons, the Department declines to state whether particular professional experiences or affiliations do or do not constitute per se violations of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). The Department acknowledges the concerns expressed both by commenters concerned that certain professional qualifications (e.g., a history of working in the field of sexual violence) may indicate bias, and by commenters concerned that excluding certain professionals out of fear of bias would improperly exclude experienced, knowledgeable individuals who are capable of serving impartially. Whether bias exists requires examination of the particular facts of a situation and the Department encourages recipients to apply an objective (whether a reasonable person would believe bias exists), common sense approach to evaluating whether a particular person serving in a Title IX role is biased, exercising caution not to apply generalizations that might unreasonably conclude that bias exists (for example, assuming that all self-professed feminists, or self-described survivors, are biased against men, or that a male is incapable of being sensitive to women, or that prior work as a victim advocate, or as a defense attorney, renders the person biased for or against complainants or respondents), bearing in mind that the very training required by § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) is intended to provide Title IX personnel with the tools needed to serve impartially and without bias

such that the prior professional experience of a person whom a recipient would like to have in a Title IX role need not disqualify the person from obtaining the requisite training to serve impartially in a Title IX role.

In response to commenters' concerns that the prohibition against conflicts of interest and bias is unclear, the Department revises this provision to mandate training in "how to serve impartially, including by avoiding prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias" in place of the proposed language for training to "protect the safety of students, ensure due process protections for all parties, and promote accountability." This shift in language is intended to reinforce that recipients have significant control, and flexibility, to prevent conflicts of interest and bias by carefully selecting training content focused on impartiality and avoiding prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias.

The Department disagrees with the commenter who suggested replacing "bias" in this provision with "non-discrimination." Based on anecdotal evidence from commenters asserting specific instances that ostensibly reveal a recipient's Title IX personnel exhibiting bias for or against men, women, complainants, or respondents, the Department believes that bias, especially sex-based bias, is a particular risk in Title IX proceedings and aims specifically to reduce and prevent bias from influencing how a recipient responds to sexual harassment including through required training for Title IX personnel.[1036]

---

[1036] E.g., Justin D. Levinson, Forgotten Racial Equality: Implicit Bias, Decisionmaking, and Misremembering, 57 DUKE L. J. 345 (2007) (arguing for diversity training); Jennifer A. Richeson & Richard J. Nussbaum, The Impact of Multiculturalism Versus Color-Blindness on Racial Bias, 40 J. OF EXPERIMENTAL SOCIAL PSYCHOL. 417 (2004) (explaining how diversity training can lead to less implicit bias).

The Department declines to narrow or widen this provision by specifying whether conflicts of interest or bias must be "actual" or "perceived," and declines to adopt an "appearance of bias" standard. As noted above, the topic of sexual harassment inherently involves issues revolving around sex and sexual dynamics such that a standard of "appearance of" or "perceived" bias might lead to conclusions that most people are biased in one direction or another by virtue of being male, being female, supporting women's rights or supporting men's rights, or having had personal, negative experiences with men or with women. The Department believes that keeping this provision focused on "bias" paired with an expectation of impartiality helps appropriately focus on bias that impedes impartiality. The Department

cautions parties and recipients from concluding bias, or possible bias, based solely on the outcomes of grievance processes decided under the final regulations; for example, the mere fact that a certain number of outcomes result in determinations of responsibility, or non-responsibility, does not necessarily indicate or imply bias on the part of Title IX personnel. The entire purpose of the § 106.45 grievance process is to increase the reliability and accuracy of outcomes in Title IX proceedings, and the number of particular outcomes, alone, thus does not raise an inference of bias because the final regulations help ensure that each individual case is decided on its merits.

The Department notes that the final regulations do not preclude a recipient from allowing student leaders to serve in Title IX roles so long as the recipient can meet all requirements in § 106.45 and these final regulations,[1037] and leaves it to a recipient's judgment to decide under what circumstances, if any, a recipient wants to involve student leaders in Title IX roles.

Changes: Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) is revised to specify that the required training include "how to serve impartially, including by avoiding

---

[1037] For example, § 106.8(a) specifies that the Title IX Coordinator must be an "employee" designated and authorized by the recipient to coordinate the recipient's efforts to comply with Title IX obligations. No such requirement of employee status applies to, for instance, serving as a decision-maker on a hearing panel.

prejudgment of the facts at issue, conflicts of interest, and bias" in place of the proposed language "that protect the safety of students, ensure due process protections for all parties, and promote accountability." [1038]

Comments: One commenter asked whether the training on the definition of sexual harassment referenced in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) means the definition in §

---

[1038] Because revised § 106.45(b)(8) now requires recipients to offer appeals, § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) has also been revised to include training on conducting appeals.

106.30, a definition used by the recipient (that might be broader than in § 106.30), or both. One commenter wondered why this provision removes vital sexual harassment training of school personnel but gave no explanation for drawing this conclusion. Several commenters noted that § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) does not state the frequency for the required training and wondered if it must be annual, while several others requested more clarity about what would be considered adequate training especially for a decision-maker expected to conduct a live hearing with cross-examination, and further explanation of what kinds of training materials foster impartial determinations. One commenter stated that § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) does not provide for a standardized level of training or offer financial assistance for training personnel. One commenter agreed with the proposed rules' effort to diagnose severe training gaps in the Title IX system but because this provision mandates training "conceptually" without specifying what the training must include, the commenter asserted that the inevitable result will be more Dear Colleague Letters and guidance from the Department, which the Department should avoid by taking time to include more specific training requirements in these final regulations.

Many commenters expressed views about this provision's prohibition against the use of "sex stereotypes" in training materials. Some commenters urged the Department to include a definition of "sex stereotypes," asserting that without clarity this provision is a legal morass exposing recipients to liability. One commenter asserted that “bias” lacks a definitive legal meaning and should be replaced by “non-discriminatory.” Some commenters argued that without a definition, this provision could be interpreted to forbid recipients from relying on research and evidence-based practices that instruct personnel to reject notions of “regret sex” and women lying about sexual assault. Other commenters requested clarity that stereotypes of men as sexually aggressive or likely to perpetrate sexual assault and references to “toxic masculinity” are prohibited under this provision. One commenter argued that the First Amendment likely prohibits the Department from dictating that training materials be free from sex stereotypes or that if the Department no longer perceives the First Amendment as a barrier to the Federal government prohibiting sex stereotyping materials then the Department should repeal 34 CFR 106.42 and replace it with a prohibition against reliance on sex stereotyping that extends to all training or educational materials used by a recipient for any purpose. This commenter also requested clarification as to whether § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) would prohibit reliance on peer-reviewed journal articles that state, for example,[1039] that trauma victims often recall only some vivid details from their ordeal and that memories may be impaired with amnesia or gaps or contain false details following extreme cases of negative emotions, such as rape trauma. Another commenter expressed concern that this provision might result in information provided by sexual violence experts being forbidden,

---

[1039] Commenters cited: Katrin Hohl & Martin Conway, Memory as Evidence: How Normal Features of Victim Memory Lead to the Attrition of Rape Complaints, 17 CRIMINOLOGY & CRIMINAL JUSTICE 3 (2017).

resulting in respondents' lawyers' opinions replacing peer-reviewed, scientific data. One commenter urged the Department to interpret this provision to require training around bias that exists against complainants and to clarify that the "Start by Believing" approach promoted by End Violence Against Women International should be part of these training requirements because that approach trains

investigators to start by believing the survivor to avoid incorporating personal bias and victim-blaming myths that might bias the investigation against the survivor. The commenter asserted that understanding the dynamics of sexual trauma is necessary in order to treat both complainants and respondents fairly without bias. Another commenter asserted that "start by believing" is not appropriate for investigations but is appropriate for counseling and thus, the final regulations should require that for counseling purposes personnel must "start by believing" a complainant or a respondent seeking counseling.

One commenter suggested this provision be modified to require training to have a working understanding of impartiality. One commenter contended that training materials should never be allowed to refer to the AAU/Westat

Report[1040] for the statistic that one-in-four women are raped on college campuses because there are so many methodological problems with that report that using it constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX. One commenter argued that § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) must not be applied to exclude the application of proven profiles and indicators of certain predictive behaviors because that is a tried and tested practice in professional law enforcement and should be utilized according to best practices of trained investigators in any quest for the truth.

---

[1040] Commenters cited: The Association of American Universities, Report on the AAU Campus Climate Survey on Sexual Assault and Sexual Misconduct (Westat 2015).

Discussion: The Department appreciates a commenter asking whether the training on the definition of sexual harassment in this provision was intended to refer to the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30; to clarify that was the intent of this provision, § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) has been revised to so state. The Department disagrees that this provision removes vital training regarding a recipient's responses to sexual harassment; rather, this provision prescribes mandatory training for Title IX personnel that promotes the purpose of a Title IX process and compliance with these final regulations, and leaves recipients free to adopt additional education and training content that a recipient believes serves the needs of the recipient's community. Commenters correctly noted that the final regulations do not impose an annual or other frequency condition on the mandatory training required in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). The Department interprets this provision as requiring that any Title IX Coordinator, investigator, decision-maker, or person who facilitates an informal resolution process will, when serving in such a role, be trained to serve in that role. The Department wishes to leave recipients flexibility to decide to what extent additional training is needed to ensure that Title IX personnel are trained when they serve[1041] so that recipients efficiently allocate their resources

---

[1041] Some commenters questioned whether advisors provided to a party by a postsecondary institution recipient pursuant to § 106.45(b)(6)(i) must be free from conflicts of interest and bias and must be trained. The final regulations impose no prohibition of conflict of interest or bias for such advisors, nor any training requirement for such advisors, in order to leave recipients as much flexibility as possible to comply with the requirement to provide those advisors. The Department believes that advisors in such a role do not need to be unbiased or lack conflicts of interest precisely because the role of such advisor is to conduct cross-examination on behalf of one party, and recipients can determine to what extent a recipient wishes to provide training for advisors whom a recipient may need to provide to a party to conduct cross-examination.

among Title IX compliance obligations and other important needs of their educational communities. The Department disagrees with a commenter concerned that failing to be more prescriptive about the content of training in these final regulations necessarily will result in the Department issuing Dear Colleague Letters imposing training content requirements in the future. The Department is committed to imposing legally binding requirements by following applicable rulemaking processes.

The Department is persuaded by commenters' concerns that it is beneficial for § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to emphasize the need for decision-makers to receive training in how to conduct hearings, and we have revised this provision to specify that decision-makers receive training in how to conduct a grievance process including how to use technology that will be used by a recipient to conduct a live hearing, and on issues of the relevance of questions and evidence (including how to determine the relevance or irrelevance of a complainant's prior sexual history), and that investigators receive training on issues of relevance in order to prepare an investigative report that fairly summarizes relevant evidence.

The Department appreciates the many commenters who requested a definition of "sex stereotypes" and asked that such a definition include, or exclude, particular generalizations and notions about women or about men. For reasons similar to those discussed above with respect to defining "bias" on the part of Title IX personnel, the

Department declines to list or define what notions do or do not constitute sex stereotypes on which training materials must not rely. The Department disagrees that a broad prohibition against sex stereotypes is a legal morass exposing recipients to liability, any more than Title IX's broad prohibition against "sex discrimination" does so. It is not feasible to catalog the variety of notions expressing generalizations and stereotypes about the sexes that might constitute sex stereotypes, and the Department's interest in ensuring impartial Title IX proceedings that avoid prejudgment of the facts at issue necessitates a broad prohibition on sex stereotypes so that decisions are made on the basis of individualized facts and not on stereotypical notions of what "men" or "women" do or do not do. To reinforce this necessity, the final regulations use “must” instead of “may” to state that training materials “must” not rely on sex stereotypes.

Contrary to the concerns of some commenters, a prohibition against reliance on sex stereotypes does not forbid training content that references evidence-based information or peer-reviewed scientific research into sexual violence dynamics, including the impact of trauma on sexual assault victims.

Rather, § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) cautions recipients not to use training materials that "rely" on sex stereotypes in training Title IX personnel on how to serve in those roles impartially and without prejudgment of the facts at issue, meaning that research and data concerning sexual violence dynamics may be valuable and useful, but cannot be relied on to apply generalizations to particular allegations of sexual harassment. Commenters provided numerous examples of training materials containing phrases that may, or may not, violate the final regulations, but a fact-specific evaluation of the training materials and their use by the recipient would be needed to reach a conclusion regarding whether such materials comply with § 106.45(b)(1)(iii). We have revised § 106.45(b)(10) to require recipients to post on a recipient's website the training materials referred to in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) so that a recipient's approach to training Title IX personnel may be transparently viewed by the recipient's educational community and the public, including for the purpose of holding a recipient accountable for using training materials that comply with these final regulations.

The Department does not believe that placing parameters around the training materials specifically needed to comply with Title IX regulations violates the First Amendment rights of recipients because the final regulations do not interfere with the right of recipients to control the recipient's own curricula and academic instruction materials. The Department is not proactively scouring recipients' curricula to spot instances of sex stereotyping; rather, the Department is placing reasonable conditions on materials specifically used by recipients to carry out recipients' obligations under these final regulations.

For reasons explained above, the Department does not wish to be more prescriptive than necessary to achieve the purposes of these final regulations, and respects the discretion of recipients to choose how best to serve the needs of each recipient's community with respect to the content of training provided to Title IX personnel so long as the training meets the requirements in these final regulations. Thus, the Department declines to require recipients to adopt the "Start by Believing" approach promoted by End Violence Against Women, and cautions that a training approach that encourages Title IX personnel to "believe" one party or the other would fail to comply with the requirement that Title IX personnel be trained to serve impartially, and violate § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) precluding credibility determinations based on a party's status as a complainant or respondent. The Department takes no position on whether "start by believing" should be an approach adopted by non-Title IX personnel affiliated with a recipient, such as counselors who provide services to complainants or respondents. The Department wishes to emphasize that parties should be treated with equal dignity and respect by Title IX personnel, but doing so does not mean that either party is automatically "believed." The credibility of any party, as well as ultimate conclusions about responsibility for sexual harassment, must not be prejudged and must be based on objective evaluation of the relevant evidence in a particular case; for this reason, the Department cautions against training materials that promote the application of "profiles" or "predictive behaviors" to particular cases. The Department declines to predetermine whether particular studies or reports do or do not violate § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) or opine on the validity of particular reports, but encourages recipients to examine the information utilized in training of Title IX personnel to ensure compliance with this provision.

Changes: Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) clarifies that the training on the definition of sexual harassment means the definition in § 106.30,[1042] requires Title IX personnel to be trained on how to conduct a grievance process, requires investigators and decision-

[1042] As discussed in the "Section 106.44(a) 'education program or activity'" subsection of the "Section 106.44 Recipient's Response to Sexual Harassment, Generally" section of this preamble, the training requirements for Title IX personnel in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) now also include training on the scope of the recipient's education program or activity.

makers to be trained on issues of relevance (including when questions and evidence about a complainant's sexual predisposition or prior sexual behavior are not relevant), requires decision-makers to be trained on technology to be used at any live hearing, and changes "may" to "must" in the directive that training materials not rely on sex stereotypes.

Comments: Several commenters suggested that § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) be expanded to include training for Title IX personnel on a variety of subjects. At least one commenter urged the Department to adopt the training language from the withdrawn 2014 Q&A.[1043] Without referencing the 2014

[1043] Commenters cited: 2014 Q&A at 40 ("Training should include information on working with and interviewing persons subjected to sexual violence; information on particular types of conduct that would constitute sexual violence, including same-sex sexual violence; the proper standard of review for sexual violence complaints (preponderance of the evidence standard); information on consent and the role drugs or alcohol can play in the ability to consent; the importance of accountability for individuals found to have committed sexual violence; the need for remedial actions for the perpetrator, complainant, and school community; how to determine credibility; how to evaluate evidence and weigh it in an impartial manner; how to conduct investigations; confidentiality; the effects of trauma, including neurobiological change; and cultural awareness training regarding how sexual violence may impact students differently depending on their cultural backgrounds.").

Q&A a few commenters suggested that training address similar topics such as: the neurobiology of trauma, counterintuitive responses to sexual violence, false reporting, barriers to reporting, incapacitation versus intoxication and blackout behaviors, assessing credibility in the context of trauma, Title IX compliance as it intersects with the Clery Act, FERPA, child protective services legislation, disability laws, and other laws that may intersect with Title IX, healthy sexuality and consent including affirmative consent, risk factors for sexual violence victimization, bystander intervention, rates of prevalence, addressing bias using an anti-oppression framework, effective interviewing of survivors such as forensic experiential models, cultural competency to address specific issues that affect marginalized survivors (e.g., LGBTQ individuals, persons with disabilities, persons of color, or persons who are undocumented or economically disadvantaged).

One commenter stated that training should ensure that Title IX personnel are first "mentored" by someone with experience before working directly with survivors. One commenter suggested the Department create an aspirational list of training components. One

commenter asked the Department to define "training materials" as limited to material the recipient itself designates as essential for performing the applicable Title IX role, so as not to sweep up a range of professional continuing education presentations into the ambit of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) just because such professional training seminars might mention something relevant to Title IX.

Discussion: For the reasons explained above, the Department has determined that § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) in the final regulations strikes the appropriate balance between mandating training topics the Department believe are necessary to promote a recipient's compliance with these final regulations while leaving as much flexibility as possible to recipients to choose the content and substance of training topics in addition to the topics mandated by this provision. Thus, the Department declines to expand this provision to mandate that training address the topics suggested by commenters. As discussed in this preamble under the § 106.44(a) "education program or activity" condition, the final regulations revise the training requirements in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to require training of Title IX personnel on the "scope of the recipient's education program or activity." The Department makes this change in response to commenters concerned that the "education program or activity" condition was misunderstood too narrowly, for example as excluding all sexual harassment incidents that occur off campus. This revision to the training requirements in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) helps to ensure that recipients do not inadvertently fail to treat as Title IX matters sexual harassment incidents that occur in the recipient's education program or activity. As explained above in this section of the preamble, we have also revised this provision to: add training on appeals and informal resolution processes in addition to hearings (as applicable); specify that Title IX personnel must be trained on the definition of sexual harassment in §

106.30 and on how to serve impartially without prejudgment of the facts at issue and how to avoid bias and conflicts of interest; specify that investigators and decision-makers must be trained on issues of relevance; and specify that decision-makers receive training on how to use technology at live hearings. As explained below in this section of the preamble, we also revise § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) to include "person who facilitates an informal resolution process" to the list of Title IX personnel who must receive training.

The Department declines to require that Title IX personnel be "mentored" before working with parties, or to create an aspirational list of training components. The Department's intent with respect to this provision is to provide flexibility for each recipient to design or select training components that best serve the recipient's unique needs and educational environment, while prescribing those training topics necessary for a recipient to comply with these final regulations. The Department appreciates the commenter's request for clarification that the training materials subject to these final regulations should be only those training materials specifically designated by the recipient as essential to performing Title IX personnel functions. In order to reasonably gauge compliance with the final regulations, the Department instead reserves the right to examine training materials whether or not a recipient has not specifically designated the material as essential to performing a Title IX role.

Changes: The final regulations revise this provision to include training on the scope of a recipient's education program or activity; add training on appeals and informal resolution processes in addition to hearings (as applicable); specify that Title IX personnel must be trained on the definition of sexual harassment in § 106.30 and on how to serve impartially without prejudgment of the facts at issue and how to avoid bias and conflicts of interest; specify that investigators and decision-makers must be trained on issues of relevance;

specify that decision-makers receive training on how to use technology at live hearings; and add "person who facilitates an informal resolution process" to the list of Title IX personnel who must receive training.

Comments: Many commenters expressed views about whether § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) should be applied to include or exclude training materials promoting "trauma-informed" practices, techniques, and approaches. One commenter believed that using "impartial" instead of "trauma-informed" is offensive to rape victims, for whom trauma necessitates a cognitive interview that takes the effects of trauma into account, while another commenter believed training must require trauma-informed best practices. A few commenters believed that the provision should address the use of trauma-

informed theories by cautioning against misuse of victim-centered approaches for any purpose other than interviewing or counseling; these commenters distinguished between remaining "impartial," one the one hand, while still using trauma-informed methods when questioning a complainant so that the investigator does not expect a trauma victim to provide details in chronological order, on the other hand. Several commenters asserted that trauma-informed and believe-the-victim approaches must be prohibited in the interview process because those approaches compromise objectivity, create presumptions of guilt, and result in exclusion of relevant (often exculpatory) evidence. At least one commenter suggested that FETI (forensic experimental trauma interview) techniques should be required. One

commenter stated that several states including New York, California, and Illinois mandate trauma-informed training[1044] for campus officials who respond to sexual assault and asserted that the proposed rules are unclear about whether the Department's position is that trauma-informed practices constitute a form of sex discrimination,[1045] thus inviting further litigation on this issue.

[1044] Commenters cited a white paper by Jeffrey J. Nolan, Promoting Fairness in Trauma-Informed Investigation Training, NACUA Notes, vol. 16, no. 5, p. 3 (Feb. 8, 2018), now updated as: Jeffrey J. Nolan, Fair, Equitable Trauma-Informed Investigation Training (Holland & Knight updated July 19, 2019).

Discussion: The Department understands from personal anecdotes and research studies that sexual violence is a traumatic experience for survivors. The Department is aware that the neurobiology of trauma and the impact of trauma on a survivor's neurobiological functioning is a

---

[1045] The commenter asserted that Federal courts tend to reject this proposition, citing for example Doe v. Univ. of Or., No. 6:17-CV-01103, 2018 WL 1474531 (D. Or. Mar. 26, 2018).

developing field of study with application to the way in which investigators of sexual violence offenses interact with victims in criminal justice systems and campus sexual misconduct proceedings. The Department appreciates the views of commenters urging that trauma-informed practices be mandatory, and those urging that such practices be forbidden, and the commenters noting that trauma-informed practices are required in some States, and noting there is a difference between applying such practices in different contexts (i.e., interview and questioning techniques, providing counseling services, or when making investigatory decisions about relevant evidence and credibility or adjudicatory decisions about responsibility). For reasons explained above, the Department believes that §

106.45(b)(1)(iii) appropriately forbids conflicts of interest and bias, mandates training on topics necessary to promote recipients' compliance with these final regulations (including how to serve impartially), and precludes training materials that rely on sex stereotypes. Recipients have flexibility to choose how to meet those requirements in a way that best serves the needs, and reflects the values, of a recipient's community including selecting best practices that exceed (though must be consistent with) the legal requirements imposed by these final regulations. The Department notes that although there is no fixed definition of "trauma-informed" practices with respect to all the contexts to which such practices may apply in an educational setting, practitioners and experts believe that application of such practices is possible – albeit challenging

– to apply in a truly impartial, non-biased manner.[1046]

Changes: None.

Comments: One commenter suggested expanding the persons who must be trained to include counselors, diversity and inclusion departments, deans of

---

[1046]E.g., Jeffrey J. Nolan, Fair, Equitable Trauma-Informed Investigation Training 14-15 (Holland & Knight updated July 19, 2019) (concluding that "All parties can benefit if trauma-informed training is provided in a manner that is fair, equitable, nuanced, and adapted appropriately to the context of college and university investigations and disciplinary proceedings, and that does 'not rely on sex stereotypes.' Given the complexity of these issues and the importance of training as a matter of substance and potential litigation risk, institutions should strive to ensure that their training programs are truly fair and trauma-informed."); "Recommendations of the Post-SB 169 Working Group," 3 (Nov. 14, 2018) (report by a task force convened by former Governor of California Jerry Brown to make recommendations about how California institutions of higher education should address allegations of sexual misconduct) (trauma-informed "approaches have different meanings in different contexts. Trauma-informed training should be provided to investigators so they can avoid re-traumatizing complainants during the investigation. This is distinct from a trauma-informed approach to evaluating the testimony of parties or witnesses. The use of trauma-informed approaches to evaluating evidence can lead adjudicators to overlook significant inconsistencies on the part of complainants in a manner that is incompatible with due process protections for the respondent. Investigators and adjudicators should consider and balance noteworthy inconsistencies (rather than ignoring them altogether) and must use approaches to trauma and memory that are well grounded in current scientific findings.").

students, ombudspersons, and restorative justice committees. A few commenters suggested that training about Title IX rights and Title IX procedures should be mandatory for all students and all staff, including teachers and faculty so that everyone affiliated with a recipient knows the definition of sexual harassment and the complaint procedures. A few commenters noted that the proposed rules lacked any training requirements for staff that work on informal resolution processes and urged the Department to set minimum standards for training of those individuals so that all students are served by individuals with high levels of training whether they go through a formal or informal process.

Discussion: The intent of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) is to ensure that Title IX personnel directly involved in carrying out the recipient's Title IX response duties are trained in a manner that promotes a recipient's compliance with these final regulations. The Department appreciates commenters suggesting that additional school personnel, or students, need training about Title IX, but the Department leaves such decisions to recipients' discretion. The Department appreciates commenters who noted that the proposed rules contemplated the recipient facilitating informal resolution processes yet omitted such a role from the listed personnel who must receive training under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), resulting in parties interacting with well-trained personnel during a formal process but perhaps with untrained personnel during an informal process. The commenters' concerns are well-founded, and the final regulations include "any person who facilitates an informal resolution process" wherever reference had been made to "Title IX Coordinators, investigators, and decision-makers."

Changes: Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii) is revised to include "any person who facilitates an informal resolution process" in addition to Title IX Coordinators, investigators, and decision-makers, as a person whom the recipient must ensure is free from conflicts of interest and bias, and receives the training specified in this provision.

Comments: At least one commenter requested more information about who is expected to provide the training required under § 106.45(b)(1)(iii), for example whether training presenters must have experience with administrative proceedings in order to provide qualified training to others. One

commenter with extensive experience as a sexual assault investigator proposed that the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC) should be mandated to create a Title IX focused training program to which recipients would send Title IX investigators within a certain time frame after being hired; the commenter stated that FLETC already has instructors, resources, and qualified, experienced professionals that provide accredited training to sexual assault investigators, so expanding FLETC training to be specific to Title IX proceedings would create consistent knowledge and best practices across all institutions.

Discussion: For reasons explained above, the Department believes that the mandated training requirements in § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) are sufficient to effectuate the purposes of these final regulations, without unduly restricting recipients' flexibility to design and select training that best serves each recipient's unique needs. For similar reasons, the Department declines to prescribe whether training presenters must possess certain qualifications and will enforce § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) based on whether a recipient trains Title IX personnel in conformity with this provision rather than on the qualifications or expertise of the trainers. The Department appreciates the commenter's suggestion regarding FLETC creating a Title IX-specific training program. While adoption of that suggestion is outside the scope of these final regulations because it is not within the Department's regulatory authority under Title IX to direct FLETC to expand its programming,[1047] the Department

---

[1047] FLETC is part of the Department of Homeland Security. U.S. Dep't. of Homeland Security, Federal Law Enforcement Training Centers, https://www.fletc.gov/.

encourages recipients to pursue training from sources that rely on qualified, experienced professionals likely to result in best practices for effective, impartial investigations. The Department does not certify, endorse, or otherwise approve or disapprove of particular organizations (whether for-profit or non-profit) or individuals that provide Title IX-related training and consulting services to recipients. Whether or not a recipient has complied with § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) is not determined by the source of the training materials or training presentations utilized by a recipient.

Changes: None.

Section 106.45(b)(1)(iv) Presumption of Non-Responsibility

Purpose of the Presumption

Comments: Many commenters supported § 106.45(b)(1)(iv), requiring a recipient's grievance process to apply a presumption that a respondent is not responsible until conclusion of a grievance process (referred to in this section as the "presumption"), because such a presumption means that recipients will adjudicate based on evidence rather than beliefs or assumptions. Commenters referred to the presumption as the equivalent of a "presumption of innocence" which,

commenters asserted, is crucial for determining the truth of what happened when one party levies an accusation against another party. Commenters shared personal experiences with campus Title IX proceedings in which the commenters believed that the process unfairly placed the respondent in a position of having to try to prove non-responsibility rather than being treated as not responsible unless evidence proved otherwise.

Commenters who agreed with the presumption asserted that, especially under a preponderance of the evidence standard, it is important that an accused student be presumed innocent, to stress for decision-makers that if they believe the complainant and respondent are equally truthful, the required finding must be not-responsible. Commenters asserted that lawsuits filed against universities by respondents accused of sexual misconduct have revealed that universities often do not presume the respondent innocent[1048] and that this may lead schools to place the burden of proof on respondents.[1049] Commenters asserted that § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) will clarify that respondents do not have the burden of proving their innocence.

---

[1048] Commenters cited: Doe v. Univ. of Cincinnati, aff'd sub nom. Doe v. Cummins, 662 F. App'x 437, 447 (6th Cir. 2016).
[1049] Commenters cited: Wells v. Xavier Univ., 7 F. Supp. 3d 746 (S.D. Ohio 2014).

Several commenters who supported the presumption cited an article arguing that believing complainants is the beginning and the end of a search for the truth.[1050] Several commenters asserted that the mantra of "Believe Survivors" encourages a presumption of guilt against respondents. Other commenters opined that a person can both believe complainants and presume

[1050] Commenters cited: Emily Yoffe, The problem with #BelieveSurvivors, THE ATLANTIC (Oct. 3, 2018).

the respondent is innocent during an investigation.

Commenters argued that the presumption of non-responsibility is essential to affording respondents an opportunity to defend themselves. Commenters supportive of the presumption shared personal stories in which they or their family members were respondents in Title IX grievance hearings and as respondents and felt as though the recipient placed the burden of proving innocence on the respondent's shoulders and made it seem that the accusations had been prejudged as truthful; others shared experiences of interim suspensions imposed prior to any facts or evidence leading to a conclusion of "guilt." Commenters argued that it is imperative that accusations are not equated with "guilt." One commenter described living in countries that were behind the Iron Curtain, where to be accused was the same as to be proven guilty without evidence.

Commenters who opposed the presumption argued that the purpose of the presumption is to favor respondents over complainants. Commenters asserted that the presumption is evidence of the Department's animus towards complainants. Commenters asserted that the presumption codifies a unique status for sexual harassment and assault complainants, explicitly requiring that schools treat them with heightened skepticism. Additionally, several commenters argued that the Department proposed the presumption because the Department seeks to perpetuate the myth of false reporting in Federal policy and desires to protect the reputation and interests of the accused.

Commenters argued that the presumption gives special, greater rights to the respondent, creating a procedural bias against complainants that violates complainants' rights to an impartial grievance procedure under Title IX and the Clery Act.

Many commenters argued that the presumption of non-responsibility is a presumption that the alleged harassment did not occur. Commenters questioned how the recipient can adequately listen to the complainant if the recipient is required to presume that no harassment occurred. Commenters argued that the presumption creates a hostile environment for complainants by implying that the complainant is dishonest. Commenters argued that the presumption will increase negative social reactions to complainants, such as minimization and victim-blaming, and predicted that these negative reactions will create adverse health effects for complainants including post-traumatic stress disorder symptoms.

Commenters opposed the requirement in the proposed rules for the recipient to expressly state the presumption of non-responsibility in its first communication with the complainant, arguing that this provision seems "deliberately cruel" towards complainants.

Commenters argued that the presumption would encourage schools to ignore or punish historically marginalized groups that report sexual harassment by implying such complainants are "lying" about sexual harassment, and that complainants will feel chilled from reporting out of belief that they will be retaliated against (i.e.,

by being punished for "lying") when they do report.[1051]

Commenters asserted that in a criminal proceeding, there is an imbalance of power between the accused person and the government prosecuting the accused, and therefore the U.S. Constitution gives the criminal defendant a presumption of innocence; commenters argued that this dynamic is absent in a Title IX proceeding where the complainant does not represent the power of the government prosecuting a criminal defendant, and thus a Title IX respondent should not enjoy the presumption given to a criminal defendant.

---

[1051] Commenters cited, e.g., Tyler Kingkade, When Colleges Threaten To Punish Students Who Report Sexual Violence, THE HUFFINGTON POST (Sept. 9, 2015).

Discussion: The Department appreciates commenters' support for § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) and acknowledges the many commenters who shared personal experiences as respondents in Title IX proceedings where the investigation process made the commenter feel like the burden was on the respondent to prove non-responsibility rather than being presumed not responsible unless evidence showed otherwise.

The Department disagrees with commenters who believed that the purpose of the presumption of non-responsibility is to favor respondents at the expense of complainants or that a presumption of non-responsibility demonstrates animus or hostility toward complainants. The Department does not seek to "perpetuate the myth of false reporting in Federal policy," nor does it desire "to protect the reputation and interests of the accused" at the expense of victims as some commenters claimed. To the contrary, we seek to establish a fair grievance process for all parties, and the presumption does not affect or diminish the strong procedural rights granted to complainants throughout the grievance process.

The Department acknowledges that these final regulations apply only to allegations of Title IX sexual harassment, and as such these final regulations do not impose a presumption of non-responsibility in other types of student misconduct proceedings. This does not indicate that the allegations in formal complaints of sexual harassment are more suspect or warrant more skepticism than allegations of other types of misconduct. The Department believes that the notion of presuming a student not responsible until facts show otherwise represents a basic concept of fairness, but these regulations address only recipients' responses to Title IX

sexual harassment and do not dictate whether a similar presumption should be applied to other forms of student misconduct.

While the Department acknowledges that Title IX proceedings are not criminal in nature and do not require application of constitutional protections granted to criminal defendants, the Department believes that a presumption of non-responsibility is critical to ensuring a fair proceeding in the Title IX sexual harassment context, rooted in the same principle that underlies the constitutional presumption of innocence afforded to criminal defendants.[1052] In the noncriminal context of a Title IX grievance process, the presumption reinforces the final regulations' prohibition against a recipient treating a [1052] See François Quintard-Morénas, The Presumption of Innocence in the French and Anglo-American Legal Traditions, 58 AM. J. OF COMPARATIVE L. 107, 110 (2010) ("Because one can be accused of a crime without being a criminal, an elementary principle of justice requires that plaintiffs prove their allegations and that the accused be considered innocent in the interval between accusation and judgment.").

respondent as responsible until conclusion of a grievance process[1053] and reinforces correct application of the standard of evidence selected by the [1053] Sections 106.44(a), 106.45(b)(1)(i) (recipients may not impose disciplinary sanctions on a respondent, or otherwise take actions against the respondent that do not constitute supportive measures as defined in § 106.30, without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45). The final regulations expressly allow exceptions to this principle, where in certain circumstances a respondent may be treated adversely even though responsibility has not been determined at the conclusion of a grievance process. See § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures" under which a supportive measure must not "unreasonably burden" the other party, so reasonably burdening a respondent to accomplish the aim of a supportive measure is permissible); § 106.44(c) (a respondent may be removed from education programs or activities where the respondent poses an immediate threat to the physical health or safety of one or more individuals, and while a post-removal opportunity to challenge the removal must be given to the respondent, such an emergency removal may occur prior to conclusion of a grievance process or where no grievance process is pending at all); § 106.44(d) (allowing a recipient to place a (non-student) employee on administrative leaving while an investigation under § 106.45 is pending). The Department notes that in an essay cited by commenters, the author criticizes the presumption of non-responsibility in the NPRM, arguing that if the presumption is intended only to mean that the burden of proof remains on the recipient (and not on the respondent) then the presumption is "unobjectionable as a matter of substance, although a seeming invitation to confusion" because recipients may wrongly believe that a presumption of non-responsibility implies that the recipient must apply the criminal burden of proof (beyond a reasonable doubt). Michael C. Dorf, What Does a Presumption of Non-Responsibility Mean in a Civil Context, DORF ON LAW (Nov. 28, 2018), http://www.dorfonlaw.org/2018/11/what-does-presumption-of-non.html. The author recognized that the second purpose of the presumption seemed to be treating the respondent as not responsible throughout a grievance process and believed that to be "quite a bad idea" because in daily life we make decisions based on someone being accused of a crime even before a conviction. The author correctly noted that one purpose of the presumption is to reinforce that the burden of proof remains on the recipient and not on the respondent (or complainant). The Department clarifies that contrary to the author's concerns, and for reasons discussed in the "Section 106.45(b)(7)(i) Standard of Evidence and Directed Question 6" subsection of the "Determinations Regarding Responsibility" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble, recipients may not apply the criminal standard of beyond a reasonable doubt. Further, while the author of that essay correctly identified a second purpose of the presumption as ensuring that recipients do not treat the respondent as responsible until the respondent is proved responsible, as explained above in this footnote that principle is subject to exceptions.

---

recipient for use in the recipient's Title IX sexual harassment grievance process. These aspects of the presumption improve the fairness of the process and increase party and public confidence in such outcomes,[1054] thereby leading to greater compliance

---

[1054] Rinat Kitai, Presuming Innocence, 55 OKLAHOMA L. REV. 257, 272 (2002) (the "presumption of innocence is based mainly on grounds of public policy relating to political morality and human dignity. The presumption of innocence is a normative principle, directing state authorities as to the proper way of treating a person who has not yet been convicted. This principle is not tied to empirical data about the incidence of criminal offenses or the probability of innocence in certain circumstances."); Dale A. Nance, Civility and the Burden of Proof, 17 HARV. J. OF L. & PUB. POL'Y 647, 689 (1994) ("we should not forget that the moral order that the law endorses carries with it certain obligations concerning its application, one of which is the obligation to presume compliance with legal duties, at least to the extent they represent a consensus about serious moral duties. . . . Even if that principle has lost its constitutional luster, the very fact that it has attained such status, off and on over the years, is evidence of the weight the law accords it. A presumption of innocence applies quite generally, though not of course with perfect uniformity, in both civil and criminal cases.") (emphasis added).

with rules against sexual misconduct.[1055] Without expressly stating a presumption of non-responsibility, a perception that recipients may prejudge respondents as responsible will continue to negatively affect party and public confidence in Title IX proceedings.[1056]

---

[1055] E.g., Rebecca Holland-Blumoff, Fairness Beyond the Adversary System: Procedural Justice Norms for Legal Negotiation, 85 FORDHAM L. REV. 2081, 2084 (2017) ("A fair process provided by a third party leads to higher perceptions of legitimacy; in turn, legitimacy leads to increased compliance with the law") (internal citation omitted).

[1056] For example, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) published a 2017 report, Spotlight on Due Process, https://www.thefire.org/resources/spotlight/due-process-reports/due-process-report-2017/, finding that "Nearly three-quarters (73.6%) of America's top 53 universities do not even guarantee students that they will be presumed innocent until proven guilty." The Department recognizes that a presumption of non-liability does not formally apply in Federal civil lawsuits the way that a presumption of innocence applies to criminal defendants; however, civil court procedures do generally place the burden of proof on the plaintiff to prove the defendant's civil liability, which echoes the principle that civil defendants generally are not liable until proved otherwise.

On the other hand, nothing about this presumption deprives complainants of the robust procedural protections granted to both parties under § 106.45, or the protections granted only to complainants in § 106.44(a) (including the right to be offered supportive measures with or without filing a formal complaint). The presumption does not imply that the alleged harassment did not occur; the presumption ensures that recipients do not take action against a respondent as though the harassment occurred prior to the allegations being proved,[1057] and the final regulations require a recipient's Title IX personnel to interact with both the complainant and respondent in an impartial manner throughout the grievance process without prejudgment of the facts at [1057] Under § 106.45(b)(9), a recipient may choose to facilitate an informal resolution process (except as to allegations that an employee sexually harassed a student) and an informal resolution may result in the parties, and the recipient, agreeing on a resolution of the allegations of a formal complaint that involves punishing or disciplining a respondent. This result comports with the prescription in § 106.44(a) and § 106.45(b)(1)(i) that a recipient may not discipline a respondent without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45, because § 106.45 expressly authorizes a recipient to pursue an informal resolution process (with the informed, written, voluntary consent of both parties).

issue,[1058] and without drawing inferences about credibility based on a party's status as a complainant or respondent.[1059] The presumption therefore serves rather than frustrates the goal of an impartial process. The Department expects that a fair grievance process will lend greater legitimacy to the resolution of complainants' allegations, which will improve the

---

[1058] Section 106.45(b)(1)(iii).
[1059] Section 106.45(b)(1)(ii).

environment for complainants rather than perpetuate a hostile environment or increase negative social reactions to complainants, such as disbelief and blame. The presumption of non-responsibility does not interfere with a complainant's right under § 106.44(a) to receive supportive measures offered by the recipient; this obligation imposed on recipients does not depend at all on waiting for evidence to show a respondent's responsibility. Section 106.44(a) is intended to assure complainants of a prompt, supportive response from their school, college, or university notwithstanding the recipient's obligation not to treat the respondent as responsible for sexual harassment until the conclusion of a grievance process.

While the recipient must include a statement of the presumption in the initial written notice sent to both parties after a formal complaint has been filed,[1060] the Department does not believe that this communication from the recipient is "deliberately cruel" to complainants; rather, both parties benefit from understanding that the purpose of a grievance process is to reach reliable decisions based on evidence instead of equating allegations

---

[1060] Section 106.45(b)(2)(i)(B).

with the outcome, especially where the recipient's own code of conduct penalizes a party for making false statements during a grievance proceeding. The final regulations place the burden of proof solely on a recipient[1061] – not on a complainant or respondent – and therefore the presumption does not operate to burden or disfavor a complainant. Under §

[1061] Section 106.45(b)(5)(i).

106.44(a) and the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures," recipients must offer complainants supportive measures designed to restore or preserve complainants' equal educational access (with or without a grievance process pending), and the final regulations' prohibition against a recipient punishing a respondent without following a fair grievance process, including application of a presumption of non-responsibility until conclusion of the grievance process, does not diminish the supportive, meaningful response that a recipient is obligated to offer complainants.[1062]

The Department disagrees that the presumption would encourage schools to ignore or punish historically marginalized groups that report sexual harassment, for "lying" about it. The [1062] Nothing in the final regulations precludes a recipient from continuing to provide supportive measures to assist any party regardless of the outcome of a case.

---

Department requires a recipient to respond promptly to actual knowledge of sexual harassment in its education program or activity against a person in the United States, including by offering supportive measures to the complainant. Thus, ignoring sexual harassment violates these final regulations and places the recipient's Federal funding in jeopardy. The presumption does not imply that a respondent is truthful or that a complainant is lying, and a recipient cannot use the presumption as an excuse not to respond to a complainant as required under § 106.44(a), or not to objectively evaluate all relevant evidence in reaching a determination regarding responsibility. Finally, § 106.71(b)(2) cautions recipients that it may constitute retaliation to punish a complainant (or any party) for making false statements unless the recipient determines that the party made materially false statements in bad faith and that determination is not based solely on the outcome of the case.

The Department acknowledges that Title IX grievance processes are very different from criminal proceedings and that the presumption of innocence afforded to criminal defendants is not a constitutional requirement in Title IX proceedings, but believes that a presumption of non-responsibility is needed in Title IX proceedings. While commenters correctly noted that a complainant does not wield the power of the government prosecuting a criminal charge, the purposes served by the presumption of non-responsibility still apply: ensuring that the burden of proof remains on the recipient (not on the respondent or complainant) and that the standard of evidence is correctly applied, and ensuring the recipient does not treat the respondent as responsible until conclusion of the grievance process. The procedural requirements of § 106.45 equalize the rights of complainants and respondents to participate in the investigation and adjudication by presenting each party's own view of the evidence and desire for the case outcome, while leaving the burden of gathering evidence and the burden of proof on the recipient.

Changes: We have added § 106.71(a) to the final regulations, prohibiting retaliation against any person exercising rights under Title IX. In addition, § 106.71(b)(2) clarifies that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation for making a materially false statement in bad faith in the course of a grievance process does not constitute retaliation, but a determination regarding responsibility, alone, is not sufficient to conclude that an individual made a materially false statement in bad faith.

Students of Color, LGBTQ Students, and Individuals with Disabilities

Comments: Multiple commenters asserted that, because of the presumption of non-responsibility, schools may be more likely to ignore or punish survivors who are women and girls of color, pregnant and parenting students, and LGBTQ students because of harmful stereotypes. Commenters argued that the presumption would especially harm Asian Pacific Islander women who, because of social taboos about sexual activity prevalent in Asian cultures, are significantly less likely to report instances of sexual assault and will feel further deterred by a presumption favoring the respondent. Commenters argued that Black women and girls are more likely to be punished by schools who stereotype them as the aggressor when they defend themselves against their harassers or when they respond to trauma.

Several commenters argued that the presumption would harm students with disabilities because they are more likely to be victims of sexual assault and may be particularly vulnerable to unfair treatment due to the presumption of non-responsibility, and because students with disabilities are less likely to be believed when they report these experiences and often have greater difficulty describing the harassment they experience.[1063] One commenter opposed § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) because the provision does not address sexual harassment and assault cases involving students with disabilities.

[1063] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, National Institute of Justice, The Many Challenges Facing Sexual Assault Survivors With Disabilities (July 19, 2017), https://www.nij.gov/topics/crime/rape-sexual-violence/Pages/challenges-facing-sexual-assault-survivors-with-disabilities.aspx.

Other commenters who agreed with the proposed rules, including the presumption, recounted personal stories in which family members and friends who are Black males were falsely accused of sexual assault yet the recipient seemed to treat the respondent as guilty unless proven innocent. One

commenter asserted that the sexual assault grievance process has become a tool for white administrators to punish Black males as young as five years old. The commenter wished to see what they called an outdated Jim Crow-era system replaced with a system that is fair to all.

Other commenters supported this provision based on personal stories about students with disabilities whom commenters believed had been falsely accused of sexual misconduct, including students with autism who found the Title IX grievance process traumatic.

Discussion: The Department understands commenters' concerns that students of color, LGBTQ students, students with disabilities, and other students will be adversely affected by the presumption of non-responsibility. The Department does not believe that the presumption will adversely affect the rights of any complainant, including complainants of demographic groups who may suffer sexual harassment at greater rates than members of other demographic groups. The Department believes that a presumption that protects respondents from being treated as responsible until conclusion of a grievance process furthers the recipient's obligation to fairly resolve allegations of sexual harassment and increases the likelihood that every outcome will carry greater legitimacy.

Further, students of color, LGBTQ students, and students with disabilities may be respondents in Title IX grievance processes, in which situation the presumption of non-responsibility reinforces the recipient's obligation not to prejudge responsibility, countering negative stereotypes that may affect such respondents.

The presumption of non-responsibility in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) does not contribute to negative stereotypes that commenters characterize as causing people to disbelieve students of color, pregnant or parenting students, LGBTQ students, or students with disabilities (or conversely, to rush to assume the responsibility of such students based on similar negative stereotypes). The presumption protects respondents against being treated as responsible until conclusion of the grievance process but this does not entail disbelieving complainants. Any person may be a complainant or a respondent, and the final regulations require all Title IX personnel to serve impartially, without prejudging the facts at issue, and without bias toward complainants or respondents generally or toward an individual complainant or respondent.

Changes: None.

The Complainant's Right to Due Process Protections

Comments: Commenters argued that the presumption of non-responsibility is a deprivation of the complainant's own due process rights, and argued that the complainant will be forced to proceed blindly, at a severe information deficit, while being forced to overcome the presumption. Other commenters argued that merely stating that the recipient will bear the burden of proof does not in practical terms make it so, and a presumption that the respondent is not responsible in reality shifts the burden of proof onto the complainant. Many commenters asserted that the respondent should bear the burden to prove the respondent is innocent.

One commenter, citing John Doe v. University of Cincinnati,[1064] noted that a court in the Southern District of Ohio found no violation of due process where the respondent argued that the recipient failed to grant the respondent a presumption of non-responsibility. Another commenter asserted that the [1064] Commenters cited: Doe v. Univ. of Cincinnati, 173 F. Supp. 3d 586, 604 (S.D. Ohio 2016), aff'd sub nom. Doe v. Cummins, 662 F. App'x 437, 447 (6th Cir. 2016).

---

U.S. Supreme Court has already balanced the competing interests and determined what process is due and it does not require a presumption of non-responsibility, because in Mathews v. Eldridge[1065] the U.S. Supreme Court considered (1) the private interest that will be affected; (2) the risk of an erroneous deprivation of such interest through procedures used, and the probable value, if any, of additional procedural safeguards; and (3) the government's interest, yet did not specify that a presumption favoring any party was required.

[1065] Commenters cited: Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976).

Many commenters argued that the presumption will make many women feel it is not worth it to report their assaulters to authorities because survivors already often do not report their sexual assaults due to fear of being disbelieved and the presumption will only heighten the perception that the recipient believes respondents and disbelieves complainants.[1066] One commenter asserted that, out of every 1,000 rapes, only 230 are reported to police, and just five result in conviction,[1067] and argued that a presumption in favor of respondents will lead to even fewer perpetrators of rape being held accountable.

---

[1066] Commenters cited: Kathryn J. Holland & Lilia M. Cortina, The evolving landscape of Title IX: Predicting mandatory reporters' responses to sexual assault disclosures, 41 LAW & HUM. BEHAVIOR 5 (2017).
[1067] Commenters cited: U.S. Dep't. of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, National Incident-Based Reporting System, 2012-2016 (2017).

Discussion: The presumption of non-responsibility does not hold complainants to a higher standard of evidence, shift the burden of proof onto complainants, require complainants to "overcome" the presumption or proceed "blindly" through an investigation, or deny complainants due process. Rather, the presumption simply requires that the recipient not treat the respondent as responsible until the recipient has objectively evaluated the evidence, and reinforces application of the standard of evidence the recipient has already selected (which may be the preponderance of the evidence standard, or the clear and convincing evidence standard).[1068] The final regulations require the burden of proof

[1068] Section 106.45(b)(1)(vii).

to remain on the recipient,[1069] and the recipient must reach a determination of responsibility against the respondent if the evidence meets the applicable standard of evidence. The complainant therefore does not bear any burden of proof and does not have to "overcome" the presumption. The presumption does not negate the strong procedural protections given to complainants

[1069] Section 106.45(b)(5)(i).

throughout the grievance process, and these due process protections ensure that complainants have a meaningful opportunity (equal to that of respondents) to put forward the complainant's own evidence and arguments about the evidence, even though the burden of proof remains on the recipient.

The Department declines to place the burden of proof on respondents to prove

non-responsibility because the purpose of Title IX is to ensure that the recipient, not the parties, bears responsibility to draw accurate conclusions about whether sexual harassment has occurred in the recipient's education program or activity. Title IX obligates recipients, not individual students or employees, to operate education programs or activities free from sex discrimination, so it is the recipient's burden to gather relevant evidence and carry the burden of proof.

While the Department acknowledges the Federal district court decision cited by a commenter for the proposition that courts do not require a presumption of non-responsibility in Title IX proceedings, neither the Federal district court, nor the Sixth Circuit on appeal of that case, disapproved of a recipient applying a presumption of non-

responsibility in a Title IX case or suggested that such a presumption would be constitutionally problematic; rather, the district court's opinion held that the recipient's alleged failure to provide such a presumption (even if true) would not amount to a due process deprivation under the U.S. Constitution.[1070] On appeal, the Sixth

---

[1070] Doe v. Univ. of Cincinnati, 173 F. Supp. 3d 586, 604 (S.D. Ohio 2016), aff'd sub nom. Doe v. Cummins, 662 F. App'x 437, 447 (6th Cir. 2016) ("Nevertheless, even assuming that the [recipient] placed the burden of proof on Plaintiffs as they claim, they have not stated a due process violation. As Defendants correctly argue in their brief, "[o]utside the criminal law area, where special concerns attend, the locus of the burden of persuasion is normally not an issue of Federal constitutional moment."). This does not imply that a presumption of non-responsibility would be problematic under a constitutional analysis.

Circuit did not address the presumption of non-responsibility issue at all, and noted that it appeared the recipient placed the burden of proof on the itself (not on either party), a practice that was constitutionally sound[1071] and a requirement the final regulations impose on recipients in § 106.45(b)(5)(i).

[1071] Cummins, 662 F. App'x at 449 (noting that the recipient appeared to place the burden of proof on the recipient rather than on either the complainant or respondent and stating "Allocating the burden of proof in this manner – in addition to having other procedural mechanisms in place that counterbalance the lower standard used . . . is constitutionally sound and does not give rise to a due-process violation."). The final regulations similarly allocate the burden of proof on the recipient (and not on either party). § 106.45(b)(5)(i).

Additionally, the Department is not persuaded by the commenter's citation to Mathews v. Eldridge, a U.S. Supreme Court case which set forth a three-part balancing test for determining the amount of process due to meet the basic requirements of providing notice and meaningful opportunity to be heard in particular situations and held that an evidentiary hearing is not required prior to the Social Security Administration's termination of social security benefits (in part because the basic due process requirements of notice and meaningful opportunity to be heard were met when an evidentiary hearing was available before a termination decision became final).[1072] The Mathews Court did not address the issue of whether a presumption is appropriate in an [1072] See Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335, 349 (1976) (holding that determining the adequacy of due process procedures involves a balancing test that considers the private interest affected, the risk of erroneous deprivation and benefit of additional procedures, and the government's interest including the burden and cost of providing additional procedures).

administrative proceeding and is inapposite on that particular point. As noted in the "Role of Due Process in the Grievance Process" section of this preamble, the Department believes that the § 106.45 grievance process is consistent with constitutional due process requirements and serves important policy purposes with respect to the fairness, accuracy, and perception of legitimacy of Title IX grievance processes.

Changes: None.

False Allegations

Comments: Many commenters cited statistics that most people who report sexual assault are telling the truth, so a presumption of non-responsibility does not reflect reality. Several commenters urged the Department not to require recipients to presume that the respondent is not responsible, since they say that statistics show that most respondents are guilty. Numerous commenters asserted that the rate of false reporting of sexual assault is between two to ten percent.[1073] Other commenters asserted that 95 percent of sexual assault reports to the police are true.[1074] Commenters asserted that since

---

[1073] Commenters cited, e.g., David Lisak et al., False Allegations of Sexual Assault: An Analysis of Ten Years of Reported Cases, 16 VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN 12, 1318 (2010); see also the "False Allegations" subsection of the "General Support and Opposition" section of this preamble.

[1074] Commenters cited: Claire E. Ferguson & John M. Malouff, Assessing Police Classifications of Sexual Assault Reports: A Meta-Analysis of False Reporting Rates, 45 ARCHIVES OF SEXUAL BEHAVIOR 5, 1185 (2016).

data collection began in 1989, there are only 52 cases where men have been exonerated after being falsely convicted of sexual assault while in the same period, 790 men were exonerated for murder.[1075]

Commenters argued that all false accusations, wrongful expulsions, suspensions, punishments, and undue burdens levied against respondents still

---

[1075] Commenters cited: National Registry of Exonerations, http://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Pages/browse.aspx.

do not add up to the overwhelming numbers of victims, so any provision that makes it harder for victims to prevail only serves to harm a greater number (of victims) in an attempt to protect a very small number (of falsely accused respondents), leading to greater unequal access to education for victims. Commenters argued that very few respondents who are found guilty are expelled, and therefore respondents are usually not in danger of losing their access to educational opportunities, so a wrongful result adverse to a respondent is not as consequential as a wrongful result adverse to a complainant.

Other commenters argued that a presumption against responsibility is not needed because it is easy to identify patterns of individuals who file false accusations, because almost all false accusers have "a history of bizarre fabrications or criminal fraud."[1076] Commenters stated that false accusations are unusually dramatic, involving gang rape, a gun or a knife, or violent attacks from strangers resulting in severe injuries.

Other commenters supported the presumption by asserting that false allegations do occur, and with more

---

[1076] Commenters cited: Sandra Newman, What Kind of Person Makes False Rape Accusations, QUARTZ (May 11, 2017).

regularity than other commenters claim. Commenters cited the incidence of numerous lawsuits filed by students claiming they had been falsely accused,[1077] arguing that the prevalence of these lawsuits shows that many respondents, mostly young men, have been falsely accused and suspended or expelled from school under procedures that lacked fairness and reliability, often

---

[1077] Commenters cited: T. Rees Shapiro, Expelled for sex assault, young men are filing more lawsuits to clear their names, THE WASHINGTON POST (Apr. 28, 2017).

resulting in a respondent de facto being required to try to prove innocence. Commenters referred to high-profile campus sexual assault situations that commenters argued demonstrate the fact that false rape accusations do occur and damage respondents caught in systems that prejudge them without any benefit of being presumed innocent. Commenters argued that the frequency of false accusations is not as low as other commenters have claimed because studies examining the rate of false accusations only count accusations proven to be false, and do not count accusations dismissed for lack of evidence. One commenter shared details of the commenter's own research finding that 53 percent of sexual assault allegations were false, which the commenter argued is much higher than the "2-10%" statistic relied on by many victim advocates;[1078] the commenter argued that the 53 percent number is more accurate because it counted "not responsible" determinations as "false accusations."

One commenter asserted that high-conflict divorce proceedings take into account the reality that spite plays a role in some parties' negotiations and litigation strategies, but many people seem to believe sexual harassment allegations are almost entirely free of such distorting motives.

---

[1078] Commenters cited: National Sexual Violence Resource Center, False Reporting: Overview (2012); see also the "False allegations" subsection of the "General Support and Opposition" section of this preamble.

Discussion: The Department is not persuaded by commenters who argued that we should remove the presumption of non-responsibility from the final regulations because of studies showing that many, or even the vast majority, of allegations of sexual assault are true. Statistical findings can be instructive

but not dispositive, and statistics cannot by themselves justify or rationalize procedural protections in a process designed to determine the truth of particular allegations involving specific individuals.[1079] Even if only two to ten percent of rape allegations are false or unfounded, the Department believes that statistical generalizations must not compel conclusions about the truth of

---

[1079] V.C. Ball, The Moment of Truth: Probability Theory and Standards of Proof, 14 VAND. L. REV. 807, 811 (1961) ("[F]or individuals there are no statistics, and for statistics no individuals.").

particular allegations because without careful assessment of the facts of each particular situation it is not be possible to know whether the respondent is one of the 90 to 98 percent who statistically are "guilty" or among the two to ten percent who are statistically "innocent."[1080]

[1080] See Alex Stein, An Essay on Uncertainty and Fact-Finding in Civil Litigation, with Special Reference to Contract Cases, 48 UNIV. OF TORONTO L. J. 299, 301 (1998) ("Allowing verdicts to be based upon bare statistical evidence, rather than on case-specific proof, is generally regarded as problematic. Adjudication involves individuals and their individual affairs, which need to be translated into individual rights and duties. This is not the case with bare statistical evidence. As the famous saying goes, for statistics there are no individuals and for individuals, no statistics.").

Similarly, whether respondents are expelled at low rates or high rates, the final regulations are concerned with ensuring that the determination regarding responsibility is reliable and perceived as legitimate. For reasons described elsewhere in this preamble, the Department does not require any particular disciplinary sanctions against respondents, because these Title IX regulations are focused on requiring remedies for victims, leaving disciplinary decisions to recipients' discretion. For similar reasons, the Department declines to adopt a premise that most false allegations are "easy to identify" because even if research has identified certain patterns, common features, or motives for false allegations, it is not possible to assess the veracity of a complainant's specific allegations, or an individual complainant's motive, based on generalizations. Therefore, procedural rules designed for fairness and accuracy cannot be based on statistics or studies about what kind of allegations tend to be false. The Department disagrees that all determinations of non-responsibility are fairly characterized as involving a false or unfounded allegation; as numerous commenters have pointed out, an allegation may be true and lack sufficient evidence to meet a standard of evidence proving responsibility, or an allegation may be inaccurate but not intentionally falsified. The final regulations add § 106.71(b) cautioning recipients that punishing a party ostensibly for making false statements during a grievance process may constitute unlawful retaliation unless the recipient has concluded that a party made a bad faith materially false statement and that conclusion is not based solely on the determination regarding responsibility. This provision acknowledges the reality that a complainant's allegations may not have been false even where the ultimate determination is that the respondent is not responsible and/or that the complainant may not have acted subjectively in bad faith (and conversely, that a respondent may not have made false, or subjectively bad faith, denials even where the respondent is found responsible).

The presumption of non-responsibility is not designed to protect "a few" falsely accused respondents at the expense of "the many" sexual harassment victims; the presumption is designed to improve the accuracy and legitimacy of the outcome in each individual formal complaint of sexual harassment to prevent injustice to any complainant or any respondent.

Changes: Section 106.71(b) states that charging an individual with a code of conduct violation for making a bad faith materially false statement during a grievance process is not retaliation so long as that conclusion is not based solely on the determination regarding responsibility.

Inaccurate Findings of Non-Responsibility

Comments: Commenters argued that, in a misguided attempt to shield falsely accused people, the presumption of non-responsibility will allow assailants to go unpunished, which will further traumatize and disempower victims. Commenters argued that the presumption would allow more sexual harassment perpetrators to escape responsibility because it can be difficult to prove sexual assault, and evidence is frequently scant or based heavily on testimony alone so overcoming a presumption is yet another unfair obstacle for survivors to receive justice.

Commenters argued that, for those schools that employ a clear and convincing evidence standard, complainants will be more likely to lose the case, a result compounded by the presumption of non-responsibility. Commenters argued that abusive people will be found not responsible more often, making campuses less safe and increasing the number of sexual assaults on campuses. Another commenter argued that the presumption ensures that only the most egregious cases of sexual assault will be punished, which is unjust for many women.

Some commenters disagreed with the presumption, asserting that it requires fact-finding doctrines used in criminal law proceedings. Commenters expressed concern that, if schools handle complaints of sexual assault the same way law enforcement handles them, most complaints will not be pursued. One commenter asserted that 69 percent of survivors have experienced police officers discouraging them from filing a report and one-third of survivors have experienced police refusing to take their reports.[1081]

Commenters argued that the presumption is in tension with § 106.45(b)(1)(ii), which states that "credibility determinations may not be based on a person's status as a complainant" or "respondent."

---

[1081] Commenters cited: Rebecca Campbell, Survivors' Help-Seeking Experiences with the Legal and Medical Systems, 20 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2005).

One commenter asserted that the presumption would not work for medical schools, because medical students frequently experience sexual harassment or assault from patients or visitors, and medical schools do not have the authority to compel them to participate in investigatory interviews or live hearings.[1082]

[1082] Commenters cited: Charlotte Grinberg, 'These Things Sometimes Happen': Speaking Up About Harassment, 37 HEALTH AFFAIRS 6 (2018).

Discussion: As applied under these final regulations, in the context of a Title IX grievance process, the presumption does not operate to let "guilty" respondents go free. While the presumption is based on a similar principle animating the presumption of innocence in criminal law, the § 106.45 grievance process generally, including the presumption under § 106.45(b)(1)(iv), does not mirror criminal law protections or mimic criminal courts. As discussed below, the presumption of non-responsibility reinforces that the burden of proof remains on the recipient, not on either party, and reinforces application of the standard of evidence, which under the final regulations must be lower than the criminal standard of beyond a reasonable doubt.

The Department disagrees that the final regulations require schools to handle reports or formal complaints of sexual assault the same way law enforcement handles them. Recipients are prohibited from showing deliberate indifference towards sexual harassment complainants, including by offering supporting measures to complainants irrespective of whether a formal complaint is ever filed, and under these final regulations recipients are obligated to investigate formal complaints, unlike law enforcement where officers and prosecutors generally have discretion to decline to investigate and prosecute. Further, law enforcement and criminal prosecutors gather evidence under a burden to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, but the final regulations place a burden on recipients to meet a burden of proof that shows a

respondent responsible measured against a lower standard of evidence.[1083]

The Department is unpersuaded by commenters who asserted that the presumption will make campuses more dangerous because it will chill reporting or prevent recipients from punishing and expelling offenders from campuses because § 106.45 is too similar to criminal procedures. A presumption of

---

[1083] Section 106.45(b)(1)(vii) (requiring recipients to select and apply to all Title IX sexual harassment cases a standard of evidence that is either the preponderance of the evidence standard, or the clear and convincing evidence standard).

non-responsibility need not chill or deter reporting of sexual harassment, because reporting under the final regulations leaves complainants autonomy over whether to seek supportive measures or also participate in a grievance process, and because a fair process with procedures rooted in principles of due process provides assurance that the outcome of a grievance process (when a complainant or Title IX Coordinator decides to initiate a grievance process) is reliable and viewed as legitimate.

Refraining from treating a respondent as responsible until conclusion of the grievance process does not make it more difficult to hold a respondent responsible or prevent implementation of supportive measures for a complainant. To the extent that commenters are advocating for latitude for recipients to impose interim suspensions or expulsions, the Department believes that without a fair, reliable process the recipient cannot know whether it has interim-expelled a respondent who is actually responsible for the allegations, or a respondent who is not responsible. However, the Department reiterates that § 106.44(c) allows emergency removals of respondents prior to conclusion of a grievance process (or even where no grievance process is pending), thus protecting the safety of a recipient's community where an immediate threat exists.

Because the standard of evidence is lower in the Title IX grievance process (recipients must select and apply either the preponderance of the evidence standard or the clear and convincing evidence standard) than in a criminal proceeding (beyond a reasonable doubt), the presumption in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) does not convert the standard of evidence to the criminal standard (beyond a reasonable doubt). Under the § 106.45 grievance process, the § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) presumption ensures that recipients correctly apply the standard of evidence selected by each recipient, but no recipient is permitted to select the criminal "beyond

a reasonable doubt" standard.[1084] Thus, the presumption helps to ensure that the recipient does not treat a respondent as responsible until conclusion of the grievance process, and to reinforce a recipient's proper application of the standard of evidence the recipient has selected[1085] without converting the Title

---

[1084] Section 106.45(b)(1)(vii); § 106.45(b)(7)(i); see also discussion in the "Section 106.45(b)(7)(i) Standard of Evidence and Directed Question 6" subsection of the "Determinations Regarding Responsibility" subsection of the "Section 106.45 Recipient's Response to Formal Complaints" section of this preamble.

[1085] Because the Department has determined that the preponderance of the evidence standard is the lowest possible standard of evidence that a recipient may select for a § 106.45 grievance process, the presumption of non-responsibility's function of ensuring proper application of the standard of evidence is particularly important where a recipient has selected the preponderance of the evidence standard, to ensure that in cases where the evidence is in equipoise (i.e., "50/50") the result is a determination of non-responsibility. E.g., Vern R. Walker, Preponderance, Probability, and Warranted Factfinding, 62 BROOKLYN L. REV. 1075, 1076 (1996) (noting that the traditional formulation of the preponderance of the evidence standard by courts and legal scholars is that the party with the burden of persuasion must prove that a proposition is more probably true than false meaning a probability of truth greater than 50 percent); Neil B. Cohen, The Gatekeeping Role in Civil Litigation and the Abdication of Legal Values in Favor of Scientific Values, 33 SETON HALL L. REV. 943, 954-56 (2003) (noting that the preponderance of the evidence standard applied in civil litigation results in the plaintiff losing the case where the plaintiff's and defendant's positions are "in equipoise" i.e., where the evidence presented makes the case "too close to call").

IX grievance process to a criminal court proceeding. The presumption does not make it more difficult to hold a respondent responsible, because the presumption reinforces, but does not change, the burden of proof that rests on the recipient and the obligation to appropriately apply the recipient's selected standard of evidence in

---

reaching a determination regarding responsibility to decide if the recipient's burden of proof has been met. The presumption will not result in assailants going unpunished; a perpetrator of sexual harassment proved responsible for the alleged conduct may be punished at the recipient's discretion, and these final regulations require the recipient to effectively implement remedies for the complainant where a respondent is found to be responsible.[1086]

The structure of the fact-finding process, including the presumption, prevents recipients from acting on an assumption that a particular complainant is (or is not) truthful; similarly, recipients may not look to the presumption as an excuse to "believe" or find credible, the respondent and to do so would violate § 106.45(b)(1)(ii). Thus, the Department disagrees with commenters who argue that the presumption contradicts § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) which requires that recipients may not make credibility determinations based on a party's status as a complainant or respondent. The presumption in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) reinforces the obligation in § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) to refrain from drawing inferences about credibility based on a party's status as a complainant or respondent.

---

[1086] Section 106.45(b)(1)(i); § 106.45(b)(7)(iv).

Nothing in the final regulations, including the presumption of non-responsibility, prevents recipients who are medical schools from offering supportive measures to medical students who allege that hospital patients or visitors are sexually harassing them. Section 106.30 defining

“supportive measures” provides that the recipient may offer such measures either before or after the filing of a formal complaint or where no formal complaint has been filed, for the purpose of restoring the complainant’s access to the education program without unreasonably burdening the respondent. The Department cannot comment more specifically as to what supportive measures might be reasonably available to preserve a medical student's equal access and avoid unreasonably burdening a respondent who is a patient or visitor, because each case requires the recipient's independent review and judgment. Where the respondent is a patient or visitor to the recipient's campus or facility and the recipient thus lacks an employment or enrollment relationship with the respondent, a recipient has discretion under § 106.45(b)(3)(ii) to dismiss a formal complaint where the respondent is not enrolled or employed by the recipient; or, also in the recipient's discretion, the recipient may investigate and adjudicate a formal complaint against such a respondent and, for example, issue a no-trespass order following a determination regarding responsibility. Regardless of how a recipient exercises its discretion with respect to formal complaints against respondents over whom a recipient lacks disciplinary authority, medical schools may still comply with the requirements in these final regulations to respond to sexual harassment that occurs in the recipient's education program or activity.

Changes: None.

Recipients Should Apply Dual Presumptions or No Presumption

Comments: Commenters stated that § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) equates to a presumption that the complainant is lying, or a presumption that the alleged harassment never occurred. Commenters asserted if presumptions exist, the provision should direct the recipient to presume, in addition to the respondent's presumption of non- responsibility, that the complainant is credible and making a good faith complaint. One commenter asserted that the Department should provide training to address bias against complainants.

Commenters argued that, because the grievance process is not a criminal proceeding, there should be no presumption in favor of either party. Commenters argued that investigators should have no presumption – either in favor or against either party – when performing their fact-finding duties. Commenters argued that it is unfair to complainants to start an investigation with a presumption of the respondent's innocence, just as it would be unfair to the respondent to start with a presumption of guilt. Commenters argued that in civil and administrative proceedings, both parties start on equal footing in the process with a blank slate

in front of the decision-maker, and there is no reason why Title IX proceedings should not treat the parties equally in this manner. Commenters argued that while criminal proceedings give defendants a presumption of innocence, State and Federal victims' rights laws balance even that presumption of innocence to ensure victims are treated fairly. Commenters argued that a civil case requires that the victim and perpetrator appear as equals[1087] and argued that a Title IX investigation should treat both parties equally regarding credibility, with no presumption of innocence or presumption of guilt. One commenter argued that the presumption makes no sense in an educational environment because the complainant and respondent are tied together because of their relationship to the institution, which is different from the relationship between defendants and the government in criminal matters, and the § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) presumption will negatively impact every complainant's education because the complainant will be assumed to be lying just by filing a complaint.

[1087] Commenters cited: The National Center for Victims of Crime, "Criminal and Civil Justice," http://victimsofcrime.org/media/reporting-on-child-sexual-abuse/criminal-and-civil-justice, for this proposition.

Commenters asserted that currently there is no presumption of non- responsibility for respondents in other student misconduct proceedings, such as theft, cheating, plagiarism, and even physical assault. Commenters argued that if the Department believes such a presumption is important in sexual misconduct cases, then it should require the presumption in all student misconduct cases for the sake of uniformity.

Discussion: The Department declines to adopt commenters' recommendations that recipients should presume that complainants are credible. If the presumption of non-responsibility meant assuming that the respondent is credible, then the Department would agree that such a presumption would be unfair to complainants and should be balanced by an equal presumption of credibility for complainants (or, more reasonably, no presumptions at all). However, the presumption of non-responsibility is not a presumption about the respondent's credibility, believability, or truthfulness, and § 106.45(b)(1)(ii) requires recipients not to make credibility determinations based on a party's status as complainant or respondent. A critical feature of a fair grievance process is that Title IX personnel refrain from drawing

conclusions or making assumptions about either party's credibility or truthfulness until conclusion of the grievance process; therefore, the Department declines to impose a presumption that either party (or both parties) are credible or truthful. Because the presumption of non-responsibility is not a presumption that a respondent is credible, there is no need for a presumption specific to complainants to balance or counteract the presumption of non-responsibility.[1088] The presumption of non-responsibility does not assume, or allow recipients to act as though, complainants are lying; under

---

[1088] A presumption specific to a complainant that corresponds to the presumption of a respondent's non-responsibility might, hypothetically, be a presumption that the complainant is not responsible – but such a presumption simply does not apply to a complainant, because a complainant by definition is not alleged to be responsible for misconduct. Alternatively, a presumption specific to a complainant analogous to the presumption of non-responsibility might be that the complainant must be treated as a victim of the respondent's conduct until conclusion of the grievance process (because, as explained above, the presumption of non-responsibility operates to treat a respondent as "not a perpetrator" until conclusion of the grievance process, subject to the § 106.44(c) and § 106.44(d) exceptions for emergency removals and administrative leave for employee-respondents). However, the Department does not believe such a presumption would operate to protect complainants in any manner not already provided for in the final regulations. Section 106.44(a) already requires the recipient essentially to treat a complainant as a victim in need of services in the aftermath of suffering sexual harassment (by offering supportive measures and engaging in an interactive discussion with the complainant to arrive at helpful supportive measures to preserve the complainant's equal educational access) even before, or without, a fact-finding process that has determined that the respondent victimized the complainant. Moreover, the grievance process effectively requires a complainant to be treated as a victim in two specific provisions that apply for complainants' benefit: § 106.45(b)(6)(i)-(ii) provides rape shield protection for complainants – but not respondents – against questions and evidence inquiring into the complainant's prior sexual behavior; and § 106.45(b)(6)(i) allows either party to request that a live hearing (including cross-examination) occurs in separate rooms. While the latter provision applies on its face to both parties, the provision is responsive to public comment informing the Department that complainants already traumatized by sexual violence likely will be traumatized by coming face-to-face with the respondent; no such concerns about the traumatic effect of personal confrontation were raised on behalf of respondents. Thus, where appropriate, the grievance process takes into account the unique needs of complainants, in ways that the Department believes serve Title IX's non-discrimination mandate by protecting complainants as though every complainant has been victimized, without unfairness to the respondent. A presumption of non-responsibility does not deprive a complainant of the protections given solely to complainants under § 106.44(a) and § 106.45, nor deprive a complainant of the benefits of the robust procedural rights given equally to both parties during the grievance process.

the final regulations, recipients must not prejudge the facts at issue, must not draw inferences about credibility based on a party's status as a complainant or respondent, and must objectively evaluate all relevant evidence to reach a determination regarding responsibility.

The procedural rights granted to both parties under § 106.45 ensure that complainants and respondents have equal opportunities to meaningfully participate in putting forth their views about the allegations and their desired case outcome, an essential requirement for due process even in a civil (noncriminal) setting.[1089] The Department disagrees that in civil (as opposed to criminal) trials the plaintiff and defendant "appear as equals" in every regard, because even in civil trials the

---

[1089] E.g., Niki Kuckes, Civil Due Process, Criminal Due Process, 25 YALE LAW & POL. REV. 1, 10-11 (2006) (due process in civil settings "places central importance on the participation of the affected party in decision-making. Ex parte procedures are the exception, while participatory procedures are the rule. Notice and an opportunity to be heard is, obviously, the principle without which a participatory model of justice cannot work effectively. Unless a party is notified that there is a controversy, it cannot participate in decision-making; unless a party has the opportunity for a hearing, it cannot present its side of the controversy; and unless the decision-maker hears from both parties, there cannot be a meaningful ruling. This is the adversary system's vision of justice.").

burden of proof generally rests on the plaintiff to prove allegations, not on the defendant to prove non-liability.[1090] Thus, while parties in civil litigation (and under § 106.45) have equal rights to participate in the process (for example, by gathering and presenting evidence), a burden of proof must still be met. The final regulations ensure that neither party bears the burden of proof (which remains on the recipient) yet give both parties equal procedural rights throughout the grievance process. The presumption does not create inequality between the complainant and respondent; the presumption reinforces the recipient's burden of proof and correct application of the standard of evidence, neither of which burdens or disadvantages the complainant.

---

[1090] E.g., Dale A. Nance, Civility and the Burden of Proof, 17 HARV. J. OF L. & PUB. POL'Y 647, 659 (1994) (in civil litigation "it remains true that the burden is placed, in the vast majority of contexts, on the person or institution claiming that someone has breached a duty serious enough to warrant legal recognition."). We reiterate that the final regulations, § 106.45(b)(1)(i), place the burden squarely on the recipient – not on the complainant – to prove that a respondent has committed sexual harassment.

The Department notes that § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) not only requires Title IX personnel to serve without bias for or against complainants or respondents, but also requires training for Title IX personnel, expressly to avoid bias for or against complainants or respondents generally or for or against an individual complainant or respondent. Recipients have discretion as to the content and approaches of such training so long as the requirements of § 106.45(b)(1)(iii) are met.

A presumption of non-responsibility reinforces placement of the burden of proof, proper application of the standard of evidence, and fair treatment of an accused person prior to adjudication of responsibility. These features of a fair grievance process may be beneficial to the legitimacy and reliability of outcomes of non-sexual harassment student misconduct proceedings. However, these final regulations focus only on effectuating Title IX's non-discrimination mandate by improving the perception and reality that recipients' Title IX proceedings reach fair, accurate outcomes; these regulations do not impose requirements on recipients for grievance proceedings other than for Title IX sexual harassment.

Changes: None.

The Adversarial Nature of the Grievance Process

Comments: Commenters asserted that universities already treat both parties equitably and the presumption in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) escalates the adversarial nature of Title IX proceedings; commenters argued this will raise the financial and emotional toll the grievance process will have on both complainants and respondents. Commenters argued that the proposed regulations ask a university to act as a judicial system, placing an undue burden on the educational system and imposing an unprecedented amount of control over a school's – especially a private school's – ability to develop and implement disciplinary processes in a way that best serves its community and upholds its values, which often include using codes of conduct to educate students rather than be punitive. One commenter opposed the presumption because recipients already train staff and faculty to serve neutrally, bearing in mind the educational context in student misconduct cases, because the student is paying to be in an educational environment, not a prison system. One commenter warned that the presumption of non-responsibility would create an "inaccessibility to justice."

Other commenters supported the presumption of non-responsibility, arguing that Title IX proceedings are often highly contested, yet school proceedings are biased against the accused; commenters cited articles showing that over 150 lawsuits have been filed arising from fundamental unfairness in schools' Title IX

proceedings.[1091] Commenters argued that a presumption of non-responsibility is essential because recipients have denied respondents the right to know the allegations against them or the identity of the person accusing them, and that respondents have been repeatedly denied the ability to question the complainant, submit exculpatory

[1091] Commenters cited: Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE), Report: As changes to Title IX enforcement loom, America's top universities overwhelmingly fail to guarantee fair hearings for students (Dec. 18, 2018); see also T. Rees Shapiro, Expelled for sex assault, young men are filing more lawsuits to clear their names, THE WASHINGTON POST (Apr. 28, 2017).

evidence, or have their witnesses interviewed by the recipient. Commenters argued that respondents have sued recipients for expelling them or finding them responsible without first giving them procedural protections, and that some courts have agreed that some recipients committed due process or fairness violations. One commenter shared information from a university's website promoting adherence to the public awareness campaign "Start by Believing,"[1092] which the commenter argued shows the university's bias against accused students. Commenters argued that college environments are highly politicized and college administrators and faculty are not objective fact-finders, and a presumption of non-responsibility helps counteract that lack of objectivity.

---

[1092] Commenters cited: University of Iowa Rape Victim Advocacy program, Start By Believing, https://rvap.uiowa.edu/take-action/prevent-and-educate/start-by-believing/.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that the presumption of non-responsibility increases the adversarial nature of Title IX proceedings; Title IX proceedings are often inherently adversarial, due to the need to resolve contested factual allegations. The Department understands commenters' concerns that an adversarial process may take an emotional toll on participants, and the final regulations

encourage provision of supportive measures to both parties and give both parties an equal right to select an advisor of choice to assist the parties during a grievance process. The presumption of non-responsibility does not magnify the adversarial nature of the grievance process; rather, the presumption reinforces the recipient's burden of proof, proper application of the standard of evidence, and how a respondent is treated pending the outcome of the grievance process. The Department disagrees that the presumption will lead to "inaccessibility" of justice; rather, complainants will benefit from increased legitimacy of recipient determinations when respondents are found responsible, while respondents will benefit from assurance that a recipient cannot treat the respondent as though responsibility has been determined until the conclusion of a fair grievance process. The § 106.45 grievance process, and the final regulations as a whole, impose an obligation on recipients to remain impartial toward parties whose views about the allegations are adverse to each other. To the extent that commenters' concerns about an adversarial process reflect concern that financial inequities can affect the process (for example, where one party can afford to hire an attorney to further the party's interests and the other party cannot afford an attorney), the final regulations permit, but do not require, advisors to be attorneys, allow recipients to limit the active participation of advisors significantly, with the exception of conducting cross-examination at a live hearing in postsecondary institutions,[1093] and do not preclude recipients from offering both parties legal representation.[1094] This approach reflects the reality that recipients are not courts, yet do need to apply a fair, truth-seeking process to resolve factual allegations of Title IX sexual harassment.

---

[1093] Section 106.45(b)(5)(iv); § 106.45(b)(6)(i).

[1094] The Department realizes that only a fraction of postsecondary institutions currently offer to provide both parties in a grievance proceeding with legal representation, but such an option remains available to recipients who choose to address disparity with respect to the financial ability of parties to hire legal representation in the recipient's educational community. E.g., Kristen N. Jozkowski & Jacquelyn D. Wiersma-Mosley, The Greek System: How Gender Inequality and Class Privilege Perpetuate Rape Culture, 66 FAM. RELATIONS 1 (2017) (noting that only about three percent of colleges and universities provide victims with legal representation and arguing that colleges and universities should provide free legal representation to both complainants and respondents in campus sexual assault proceedings).

The Department recognizes that some recipients expressed concerns that the presumption of non-responsibility, in conjunction with other provisions in § 106.45, requires educational institutions to mimic courts of law. The Department acknowledges, and the final regulations reflect, that recipients' purpose is to educate, not to act as courts. The § 106.45 grievance process is designed for implementation by non-lawyer recipient officials, and the final regulations do not intrude on a recipient's discretion to use disciplinary sanctions as educational tools of behavior modification rather than, or in addition to, punitive measures. However, to effectuate Title IX's non-discrimination mandate, recipients must accurately resolve allegations of sexual harassment in order to identify and address sex discrimination in the recipient's education program or activity. The Department believes the presumption of non-responsibility is important to ensure that recipients do not treat respondents as responsible until conclusion of the grievance process and to reinforce the recipient's burden of proof and proper application of the standard of evidence, and these features will improve the legitimacy and reliability of the outcomes of recipients' Title IX grievance processes.

Changes: None.

Supportive Measures

Comments: Several commenters sought clarification as to whether the presumption in § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) would preclude a recipient from taking interim or emergency actions as dictated by individual circumstances when needed to ensure safety. For example, if a respondent is presumed not to be responsible for stalking a complainant until the end of the grievance process, commenters asked how a recipient could take effective measures to ensure that the respondent will not stalk the complainant prior to the conclusion of the grievance proceeding. Commenters asserted that the presumption appeared to require the recipient to remove the complainant from dorms and classes

rather than the respondent, and that the presumption would curtail the ability of recipients to remove harassers and abusers from dorms and classes, which will lead to more sexual assaults because research indicates that most perpetrators are repeat offenders.[1095] Commenters argued that the presumption may discourage schools from providing crucial supportive measures to complainants to avoid being perceived as punishing respondents.[1096]

---

[1095] Commenters cited: David Lisak & Paul Miller, Repeat Rape and Multiple Offending Among Undetected Rapists, 17 VIOLENCE & VICTIMS 1 (2002), for the proposition that a majority of "undetected rapists" were repeat rapists and undetected repeat rapists committed an average of 5.8 rapes each.

Commenters argued that the proposed rules not only give respondents a presumption of innocence but also require recipients to provide supportive measures to respondents, constituting unprecedented concern with the well- being of accused harassers above the interests of victims.

---

[1096] Commenters cited: Michael C. Dorf, What Does a Presumption of Non-Responsibility Mean in a Civil Context, DORF ON LAW (Nov. 28, 2018), http://www.dorfonlaw.org/2018/11/what-does-presumption-of-non.html.

Discussion: The § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures" permits recipients to provide either party, or both parties, individualized services, without fee or charge, before or after filing a formal complainant, or where no formal complaint has been filed. Section 106.44(a) obligates a recipient to offer supportive measures to every complainant, by engaging in an interactive process by which the Title IX Coordinator contacts the complainant, discusses available supportive measures, considers the complainant's wishes with respect to supportive measures, and explains to the complainant the option for filing a formal complaint. Title IX Coordinators are responsible for the effective implementation of supportive measures, and under revised § 106.45(b)(10) if a recipient's response to sexual harassment does not include providing supportive measures to a complainant the recipient must specifically document why that response was not clearly unreasonable in light of the known circumstances (for example, because the complainant did not wish to receive supportive measures or refused to discuss supportive measures with the Title IX Coordinator when the Title IX Coordinator contacted the complainant to have such a discussion). Thus, unless a complainant does not desire supportive measures (i.e., refuses the offer of supportive measures), complainants must receive supportive measures designed to restore or preserve the complainant's equal educational access, regardless of whether a grievance process is ever initiated. There is no corresponding obligation to offer supportive measures to respondents; rather, recipients may provide supportive measures to respondents and under § 106.45(b)(1)(ix) the recipient's grievance process must describe the range of supportive measures available to complainants and respondents.

The presumption of non-responsibility, which operates

throughout a grievance process, does not prohibit the recipient from providing a complainant with supportive measures, but does reinforce the provision in the § 106.30 definition of "supportive measures" that supportive measures are designed to restore or preserve equal access to education "without unreasonably burdening the other party" including measures designed to protect a complainant's safety or deter sexual harassment (which includes stalking), but supportive measures cannot be punitive or disciplinary. This does not bar all measures that place any burden on a respondent, but only those that "unreasonably burden" a respondent (or a complainant). Thus, changing a respondent's class schedule, or forbidding the respondent from communicating with the complainant, may be an appropriate supportive measure for a complainant if such measures do not "unreasonably burden" the respondent, and such measures do not violate the presumption of non-responsibility.

To the extent that commenters' concern is that current Department guidance affords recipients more discretion to impose interim measures that in fact do constitute disciplinary actions against the respondent (for example, interim suspensions), the Department has reconsidered that approach and, based on public comments on the NPRM, concluded that the non-discrimination mandate of Title IX is better served by the framework in the final regulations than the approach taken in guidance documents. With respect to disciplinary or punitive actions taken prior to an adjudication

factually establishing a respondent's responsibility for sexual harassment, the final regulations circumscribe a recipient's discretion to treat a respondent as though accusations are true before the accusations have been proved.[1097] When applied in the context

---

[1097] The final regulations prohibit a recipient from taking disciplinary action, or other action that does not meet the definition of a supportive measure, against a respondent without following a grievance process that complies with § 106.45. § 106.44(a); § 106.45(b)(1). Through an informal resolution process (which is authorized under § 106.45) a recipient may impose disciplinary sanctions against a respondent without concluding an investigation or adjudication. § 106.45(b)(9). An exception to the requirement not to impose punitive or disciplinary action until conclusion of a grievance process is § 106.44(c), permitting a recipient to remove a respondent from an education program or activity in an emergency situation whether or not a grievance process has been concluded or is even pending. Supportive measures designed to restore or preserve a complainant's equal access to education, protect parties' safety, and/or deter sexual harassment, may be imposed even where such measures burden a respondent, so long as the burden is not unreasonable. § 106.30 (defining "supportive measures"). Thus, the final regulations are premised on the principle that a recipient must not treat a respondent as responsible prior to an adjudication finding the respondent responsible, yet that principle is not absolute and leave recipients with the ability (and, judged under the deliberate indifference standard, the obligation) to protect and support complainants and respond to emergency threat situations, without unduly, prematurely punishing a respondent based on accusations that have not been factually proved.

of these final regulations, the presumption of non-responsibility's reinforcement of the notion that a person accused should not be treated as though accusations are true until the accusations have been proved increases the legitimacy of a recipient's response to sexual harassment, while preserving every complainant's right to supportive measures designed to maintain a complainant's equal educational access and protect a complainant's safety. This approach directly effectuates Title IX's non-discrimination mandate by improving the fairness and accuracy of a recipient's response to sexual harassment occurring in the recipient's education programs or activities.

The Department understands commenters' concerns that restricting a recipient's ability to impose interim discipline poses a risk that perpetrators

may repeat an offense because they remain on campus while a grievance process is pending; however, even in situations that do not constitute the kind of immediate threat justifying an emergency removal under § 106.44(c), there are supportive measures short of disciplinary actions that a recipient may take to protect the safety of parties and deter sexual harassment, such as a no-contact order prohibiting communication with the complainant, supervising the respondent, and informing the respondent of the recipient's policy against sexual harassment.[1098]

Changes: None.

Miscellaneous Concerns

Comments: At least one commenter asked the Department to add at the end

[1098] E.g., Williams v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. Sys. of Ga., 477 F.3d 1282, 1296 (11th Cir. 2007) (pointing to the recipient's failure to supervise the respondent or inform the respondent of the recipient's expectations of behavior under the recipient's sexual harassment policy as evidence of the recipient's deliberate indifference that subjected the complainant to sexual harassment).

of the presumption provision the language ". . . respondent is not responsible for the alleged conduct until a determination regarding responsibility is made at the conclusion of the grievance process or any subsequent litigation." Commenters asked the Department to provide the respondent with a right to remain silent, since the respondent's statements during any investigation or hearing could be used against the respondent at a criminal trial. One commenter recommended inserting the following language: "The recipient bears the burden of demonstrating that the respondent is responsible for the alleged conduct and may not infer responsibility based solely on the respondent declining to present testimony, evidence, or witnesses in response to a formal complaint."

Another commenter urged the Department to add to § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) a sentence declaring that it is the obligation of the recipient to prove every element of every alleged offense before the accused student may be found responsible and punished for committing an alleged offense.

Discussion: The Department does not attempt to regulate procedures that apply in private lawsuits and so declines

commenters' request that the Department require a recipient to abide by a presumption of non-responsibility until conclusion of "any subsequent litigation." The recipient's obligation is to conclude a grievance process by reaching a determination regarding responsibility when presented with a formal complaint of sexual harassment under Title IX, whether or not litigation arises from the same allegations.

Section 106.6(d) provides that these regulations do not require a recipient to restrict any rights that would otherwise be protected from government action under the U.S. Constitution, which includes the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. To ensure that the determination regarding responsibility is reached in a manner that does not require violation of that constitutional right, we revised §

106.45(b)(6)(i) in the final regulations to provide that a decision-maker cannot draw any inferences about the determination regarding responsibility based on a party's failure to appear at the hearing or answer cross-examination or other questions. While this applies equally to respondents and complainants, this modification addresses commenters' concerns that a respondent should not be found responsible solely because the respondent refused to provide self-incriminating statements. The Department declines to change § 106.45(b)(1)(iv) to add language about the recipient's burden to prove each element of an offense, because § 106.45(b)(5)(i) places the burden of proof on the recipient.

Changes: We revised § 106.45(b)(6)(i) of the final regulations to provide that a decision-maker cannot draw any inferences about the determination regarding responsibility based on a party's failure to appear at the hearing or answer cross-examination or other questions.

Section 106.45(b)(1)(v) Reasonably Prompt Time Frames

Support

Comments: A number of commenters expressed support for this section.

Some did not expand upon the reasons for their support. Others, primarily some college and university commenters, expressed particular support for eliminating the 60-day time frame contained in withdrawn Department guidance. Some commenters identified concerns with a 60-day time frame, such as asserting that: it does not reflect the complex nature of these cases, such as multiple parties, various witnesses, time to obtain evidence, and school breaks; it is arbitrary and hard to adhere to while providing due process for all; it interferes with the time parties need to provide evidence and to make their case; it has not been required by courts; and it increases the risks of decisions based on conjecture or gender or racial stereotypes. Other commenters contended that eliminating such a constrained timeline would be beneficial, by for instance allowing for more thorough investigations, collection of more evidence, and added accommodation of disabilities.

A number of the supportive commenters also noted support more generally for the NPRM's flexibility regarding the time to conclude Title IX investigations and extensions for good cause. Some emphasized that prompt resolution is important, but contended that various factors may delay proceedings (such as police investigations, witness availability, school breaks, faculty sabbaticals) and asserted that fairness demands thoroughness. According to these commenters, § 106.45(b)(1)(v) appropriately accounts for schools' unique attributes (for example, their size, population, location, or mission), recognizes that complex matters may not lend themselves to set deadlines, and acknowledges that delays may sometimes be necessary, especially with a concurrent criminal investigation. Likewise, some commenters expressed support for good cause extensions for a related criminal proceeding in the belief that students should not be forced to choose between participating in campus proceedings and giving up their right to silence in criminal proceedings.

Discussion: The Department appreciates the commenters' support for § 106.45(b)(1)(v) under which a recipient's grievance process must include reasonably prompt time frames for concluding the grievance process, including appeals and any informal resolution processes, with temporary delays and limited extensions of time frames permitted only for good cause. The Department agrees with commenters that this provision appropriately requires prompt resolution of a grievance process while leaving recipients flexibility to designate reasonable time frames and address situations that justify short-term delays or extensions. This is the same recommendation made in the 2001 Guidance, which advised recipients that grievance procedures should include "Designated and reasonably prompt time frames for the major stages of the complaint process."[1099]

Changes: None.

Opposition – Lack of Specified Time Limit

Comments: Many commenters expressed opposition to § 106.45(b)(1)(v) because of concerns about the absence of specific time frames for completing investigations and adjudications, including appeals. Commenters asserted that schools could delay investigations indefinitely or for unspecified periods of time and that students might wait months or years for resolution of their complaint. Commenters identified a number of other drawbacks they felt would result from uncertain, indefinite time frames with possible delays. Commenters asserted that this provision would: make it less likely that survivors will report, less likely parties will receive justice, and more likely that students will lose faith in the reporting process; eliminate the mechanism for discovering and correcting harassment as early and effectively as possible; result in inconsistent resolution time frames at different schools; and only further delay the already lengthy process to reach resolution of sexual misconduct cases

---

[1099] 2001 Guidance at 20.

(for example, long unexplained delays even under the prior guidance with a 60-day time frame). Some commenters noted other concerns about the proposed time frames and potential delays or extensions.

Commenters asserted that indefinite time frames and probable delays would create uncertainty and a longer process that would harm survivors' well-being, safety, and education, and subject them to unreasonable physical, mental, time, and cost demands. Some felt that the proposal would: deny due process; exacerbate survivors' emotional distress; heighten the chances survivors would drop their cases or drop out of school as investigations drag on; increase risks of self-harm or suicide as delays might take too long for schools to provide prompt supports; prolong the period of survivors' exposure to their attackers; and add costs for counseling services or medical assistance, which would especially burden low-income students. Other commenters emphasized their belief that the indefinite time frames and delays would harm the mental health and education of both complainants and respondents, by adding uncertainty and stress for lengthy periods without resolution, exoneration, or closure. Other commenters expressed concerns about increasing safety risks to all students by allowing a hostile environment to continue unchecked, and assailants to harass, assault, or retaliate against their victims or others during the long waiting period. One commenter expressed concern that the NPRM would permit delays even when a respondent poses a clear threat to the campus community.

Some commenters contended that delays or extensions may result in: information, memory, and witnesses being lost; less, lost, or corrupted evidence, including fewer witnesses who may no longer be available or on campus (for example, students or short-term staff); and parties who have left school or graduated impairing schools from investigating or resolving concerns. Other commenters believed that a lengthier process and delays would: signal that schools do not care about the safety or education of victims; make it more likely that a victim will be identified or lose confidentiality; force survivors to rely on supportive measures for longer than they may be adequate or effective; allow a respondent's refusal to cooperate to delay a case indefinitely; permit recipients to place respondents on administrative leave to further delay an investigation; and particularly harm schools' short-term staff or contractors. A few commenters asserted that delays have increased in resolving Title IX cases since the Department withdrew the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, and at least one commenter expressed concern that the Department failed to offer data that a 60-day time frame had compromised accuracy and fairness.

Discussion: The Department disagrees that this provision allows recipients to conduct grievance processes without specified time frames, or allows indefinite delays. This provision specifically requires a recipient's grievance process to include reasonably prompt time frames; thus, a recipient must resolve each formal complaint of sexual harassment according to the time frames the recipient has committed to in its grievance process. Any delays or extensions of the recipient's designated time frames must be "temporary" and "limited" and "for good cause" and the recipient must notify the parties of the reason for any such short-term delay or extension. This provision thus does not allow for open-ended or indefinite grievance processes.

Under existing regulations at 34 CFR 106.8(b), in effect since 1975, recipients

have been required to "adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for prompt and equitable resolution of student and employee complaints alleging" sex discrimination. The final regulations require more of recipients than do existing regulations, because § 106.45(b)(1)(v) requires recipients to include "reasonably prompt time frames" in the recipient's grievance process, rather than simply "providing for prompt" resolution. Further, the final regulations specify that the time frames designated by the recipient must account for conclusion of the entire grievance process, including appeals and any informal resolutions processes. Thus, no avenue for handling a formal complaint of sexual harassment is subject to an open-ended time frame.

Any time frame included by the recipient must be "reasonably prompt,"

where the reasonableness of the time frame is evaluated in the context of the recipient's operation of an education program or activity. The Department believes that conclusion of the grievance process must be reasonably prompt, because students (or employees) should not have to wait longer than necessary to know the resolution of a formal complaint of sexual harassment; any grievance process is difficult for both parties, and participating in such a process likely detracts from students' ability to focus on participating in the recipient's education program or activity. Furthermore, victims of sexual harassment are entitled to remedies to restore or preserve equal access to education, and while supportive measures should be implemented as appropriate designed to achieve the same ends while a grievance process is pending, remedies after a respondent is found responsible may consist of measures not permissible as supportive measures. Thus, prompt resolution of a formal complaint of sexual harassment is necessary to further Title IX's non-discrimination mandate. At the same time, grievance processes must be fair and lead to reliable outcomes, so that sexual harassment in a recipient's education program or activity is accurately identified and remedied. The final regulations prescribe procedures and protections throughout the § 106.45 grievance process that the Department has concluded are necessary to ensure fairness and accuracy. The Department believes that each recipient is in the best position to balance promptness with fairness and accuracy based on the recipient's unique attributes and the recipient's experience with its own student disciplinary proceedings, and thus requires recipients to include "reasonably prompt time frames" for conclusion of a grievance process that complies with these final regulations.

The Department acknowledges that withdrawn Department guidance referred to a 60-day time frame for sexual harassment complaints. For recipients who determine that 60 days represents a reasonable time frame under which that recipient can conclude a grievance process that complies with § 106.45, a recipient has discretion to include that time frame under the final regulations. For recipients who determine that a shorter or longer period of time represents the time frame under which the recipient can conclude a grievance process, the recipient has discretion to include that time frame.

The Department emphasizes that what a recipient selects as a "reasonable" time frame is judged in the context of the recipient's obligation to provide students and employees with education programs and activities free from sex discrimination, so that the recipient's selection of time frames must reflect the goal of resolving a grievance process as quickly as possible while complying with the procedures set forth in § 106.45

that aim to ensure fairness and accuracy. Because the final regulations allow short-term delays and extensions for good cause, recipients need not base designated time frames on, for example, the most complex, time-consuming investigation that a formal complaint of sexual harassment might present. Rather, the recipient may select time frames under which the recipient is confident it can conclude the grievance process in most situations, knowing that case-specific complexities may be accounted for with factually justified short-term delays and extensions.

Commenters correctly noted that this provision allows different recipients to select different designated time frames and thus a grievance process may take longer at one school than at another. The Department believes that each recipient's commitment to a designated, reasonable time frame known to its students and employees,[1100] where each recipient has determined what time frame to designate by considering its own unique educational community and operations, is more effective than imposing a fixed time frame across all recipients because it results in each recipient being held accountable for complying with time frames the recipient

[1100] Section 106.45(b)(1)(v) (requiring a recipient's grievance process to designate reasonably prompt time frames); § 106.8 (requiring recipients to notify students and employees (and others) of its non-discrimination policy and its grievance process for resolution of formal complaints of sexual harassment).

has selected (and made known to its educational community), while ensuring that all recipients select time frames that are reasonably prompt.

The non-exhaustive list in § 106.45(b)(1)(v) of factors that may constitute good cause for short-term delays or extensions of the recipient's designated time frames relate to the fundamental fairness of the proceedings. Delays caused solely by administrative needs, for example, would be insufficient to satisfy this standard.[1101] Furthermore, even where good cause exists, the final regulations make clear that recipients may only delay the grievance process on a temporary basis for a limited time. A respondent (or other party, advisor, or witness) would not be able to [1101] The Department notes that temporary delay of a hearing caused by a recipient's need to provide an advisor to conduct cross-examination on behalf of a party at a hearing as required under § 106.45(b)(6)(i) may constitute good cause rather than mere administrative convenience, although a recipient aware of that potential obligation ought to take affirmative steps to ascertain whether a party will require an advisor provided by the recipient or not, in advance of the hearing, so as not to delay the proceedings.

indefinitely delay a Title IX proceeding by refusing to cooperate. While recipients must attempt to accommodate the schedules of parties and witnesses throughout the grievance process in order to provide parties with a meaningful opportunity to exercise the rights granted to parties under these final regulations, it is the recipient's obligation to meet its own designated time frames, and the final regulations provide that a grievance process can proceed to conclusion even in the absence of a party or witness.

The Department understands commenters' concerns that the longer a grievance process is pending, the more risk there is of loss of information, evidence, and availability of witnesses. These concerns are addressed through requiring that a grievance process is concluded within a "reasonably prompt"

time frame, yet in a manner that applies procedures designed to ensure fairness and accuracy. Administrative leave under § 106.44(d) of the final regulations would not preclude an investigation from proceeding; regardless of whether a party has been voluntarily or involuntarily separated from the recipient's campus, the recipient can provide for the party to return to participate in the grievance process, including with safety measures in place for the other parties and witnesses. Under § 106.45(b)(6)(i) a postsecondary institution has discretion to hold a live hearing virtually, or to allow any participant to participate remotely, using technology. Where a party refuses to participate, the recipient may still proceed with the grievance process (though the recipient must still send to a party who has chosen not to participate notices required under § 106.45; for instance, a written notice of the date, time, and location of a live hearing).

The Department disagrees that § 106.45(b)(1)(v) will jeopardize the safety of complainants or the educational environment, or that complainants will feel deterred from filing formal complainants because the grievance process might drag on indefinitely. As noted above, supportive measures designed to protect safety and deter sexual harassment are available during the pendency of the grievance process.[1102] Furthermore, under § 106.44(c) recipients may remove a respondent on an emergency basis without awaiting conclusion of a grievance process. As also noted above, the final regulations do not permit any [1102] Section 106.30 (defining "supportive measures"); § 106.44(a) (requiring recipients to offer supportive measures to complainants, with or without the filing of a formal complaint).

recipient's grievance process to go on indefinitely.

With respect to a commenter's assertion that the Department did not provide data to show that the 60-day time frame has compromised accuracy and fairness, commenters on behalf of complainants and respondents have noted that the grievance process often takes too long, which may indicate that a 60-day time frame was not a reasonable expectation for recipients to conclude a fair process, and some comments on behalf of recipients expressed that many of the cases that go through a Title IX proceeding present complex facts that require more than 60 days for a recipient to conclude a fair process. For recipients who determine that 60 days (or less) is a reasonable time frame under which to conclude a fair process, recipients may designate such a time frame as part of their § 106.45 grievance process.

Changes: To ensure that reasonably prompt time frames are included for every stage of a grievance process, we have revised § 106.45(b)(1)(v) of the final regulations to apply the reasonably prompt time frame requirement to informal resolution processes, if recipients choose to offer them, and we have removed the phrase "if the recipient offers an appeal" because under the final regulations, § 106.45(b)(8), appeals are mandatory, not optional.

Effects on Recipients

Comments: Other commenters expressed opposition to § 106.45(b)(1)(v) because they believed it would weaken schools' accountability and incentives for prioritizing sexual harassment complaints and would increase the chances that reports are brushed under the rug or not promptly and appropriately handled. Some commenters noted concerns that the provision is too vague to be clear, effective, and enforceable, and would give schools too much leeway to decide what is reasonably prompt. Other commenters expressed concern that schools already have incentives to delay, such as to protect their reputations or resources, and so might drag out investigations until one or both parties graduate, a survivor drops the case, or until after a season ends or a major game is played, in cases involving athletes. A number of commenters called for set time frames for clearer expectations and accountability. One commenter felt that a set time frame would also leave schools less vulnerable to lawsuits or complaints.

Discussion: The Department does not believe that this provision perversely incentivizes recipients to sweep allegations of sexual harassment under the rug, gives recipients the freedom to simply indefinitely delay proceedings against the interests of fairness and justice, or increases the risk of litigation against recipients. The Department believes that § 106.45(b)(1)(v) strikes an appropriate balance between imposing clear constraints on recipients in the interests of achieving Title IX's purpose, and ensuring they have adequate flexibility and discretion to select reasonably prompt time frames in a manner that each recipient can apply within its own unique educational environment. We also believe that moving away from a strict timeline that does not permit short-term extensions will help to address pitfalls and implementation problems that commenters have recounted in recipients' Title IX proceedings under the previous guidance, where some recipients felt pressure to resolve their grievance processes within 60 days regardless of the circumstances of the situation. The Department believes that recipients are in the best position to balance the interests of promptness, and fairness and accuracy, within the confines of such a decision resulting in "reasonably prompt" conclusion of grievance processes. This provision does not permit a recipient to conduct a grievance process without a "set" time frame; to the contrary, this provision requires a recipient to designate and include in its grievance process what its set time frame will be, for each phase of the grievance process (including appeals and any informal resolution process). Permitting recipients to set their own reasonably prompt time frames increases the likelihood that recipients will meet the time frames they have designated and thereby more often meet the expectations of students and employees as to how long a recipient's grievance process will take. Requiring recipients to notify the parties whenever the recipient applies a short-term delay or extension will further promote predictability and transparency of recipients' grievance process. Prescribing that any delay or extension must be for good cause, and must be temporary and limited in duration, ensures that no grievance process is open-ended and that parties receive a reasonably prompt resolution of each formal complaint.

Changes: None.

Concerns Regarding Concurrent Law Enforcement Activity

Comments: Some commenters opposed to this provision emphasized concerns about permitting delay for concurrent ongoing criminal investigations. Commenters asserted that criminal investigations can and often do take months or years because of rape kit backlogs or lengthy DNA analyses, and expressed concern about allowing schools to delay action for unspecified and lengthy periods. These commenters felt this would force students to wait months or longer for resolution as they suffer serious emotional and academic harm when they need timely responses and support to continue in school and to heal from their trauma. Some commenters felt that it would deny due process in school Title IX proceedings, ignore schools' independent Title IX obligations to remedy sex-based harassment, and allow perpetrators to evade responsibility or consequences or to perpetrate again. A number of commenters were concerned that schools delaying or suspending investigations at the request of law enforcement or prosecutors creates a safety risk to the survivor and to other students, by allowing assailants to harass or assault survivors or others

during the waiting period. Commenters also asserted that Title IX and criminal justice proceedings have different purposes, considerations, rules of evidence, burdens of proof, and outcomes, and felt as a result that their determinations are separate and independent from each other. Some of these commenters also argued that schools should prioritize and not delay a complainant's educational access and can provide supportive measures that are not available from the police.

A number of commenters emphasized concerns about problematic incentives and consequences that they believed would result from permitting delays for concurrent ongoing criminal investigations. For example, some commenters felt that such a provision would incentivize survivors not to report to law enforcement, since it would delay resolution of their Title IX case, thereby increasing safety risks to both survivors and school communities. Other commenters believed this provision would force survivors who pursue a police investigation to wait a long time for it to end before receiving accommodations from their school or to drop their criminal case to get measures only schools can provide. At least one commenter expressed concern that students would be forced to bring civil cases to protect themselves during a criminal investigation. Many others asserted that it would force elementary and secondary school students to wait months or even longer for any resolution to their complaints as most school employees are legally required to report child sexual abuse to the police as mandatory reporters. A number of these commenters expressed concern that this might impede elementary and secondary schools from implementing critical safety measures for child victims until a criminal investigation is completed.

Discussion: We acknowledge the concerns raised by some commenters specifically relating to recipients' flexibility under § 106.45(b)(1)(v) to temporarily delay the grievance process due to concurrent law enforcement activity. The Department acknowledges that the criminal justice system and the Title IX grievance process serve distinct purposes. However, the two systems sometimes overlap with respect to allegations of conduct that constitutes sex discrimination under Title IX and criminal offenses under State or other laws. By acknowledging that concurrent law enforcement activity may constitute good cause for short-term delays or extensions of a recipient's designated time frames, this provision helps recipients navigate situations where a recipient is expected to meet its Title IX obligations while intersecting with criminal investigations that involve the same facts and parties. For example, if a concurrent law enforcement investigation uncovers evidence that the police plan to release on a specific time frame and that evidence would likely be

